Mr. CARPER. Madam President, I come before the Senate this evening to join in this debate, to express my support for our Nation's effort to address the threat Saddam Hussein poses, and to lay out the concerns that I believe must be addressed if we are to succeed in disarming Iraq. The President has called upon Congress and the American people to support his administration in its effort to eliminate Saddam Hussein's hold on weapons of mass destruction. The Congress has responded by taking up this resolution authorizing the use of force, if needed, to strip Iraq of those weapons and the ability to deliver them. A number of serious questions have been raised in this historic debate. It is critical that President Bush and the Congress fulfill our obligation to all Americans, and to the international community, by ensuring that those questions are faithfully addressed.

Saddam Hussein has shown himself to be an implacable foe of the United States. It is essential that we confront the threat that he represents. The question is not whether we confront it, but how we confront it. We must make every effort to build a multilateral coalition. If we do so, we raise the likelihood of bringing a measure of stability to a turbulent part of the world. If we do so, we can minimize the impact of any conflict on the Iraqi people, on Iraq's neighbors and on American and allied forces. And if we do so, we will serve to strengthen, not undermine, the international laws and institutions that have served us well in the years since World War II.

Leadership is a responsibility that cannot be taken lightly. Leadership in deciding whether to resort to military force requires the greatest deliberation and consideration. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, in recent testimony before the House Armed Services Committee, said that "no one with any sense considers war a first choice—it is the last thing that any rational person wants to do. And it is important that the issues surrounding this decision be discussed and debated."

It is clear to me that millions of Americans are discussing and debating the issues (that are before us this evening. I have heard from Delawareans throughout my state. I have heard from veterans who know the harsh realities of war. I have heard children who can scarcely imagine it. I am comforted by the fact that the American people, and their representative in Congress, have been thoughtful and deliberate in discussing the challenges that we face and how we might confront those challenges.

This is not the first time that I have faced the question of how we ought to deal with Saddam Hussein's intransigence in the facet of international law. As a Member of the House of Representatives, I voted in 1991, along with many members of this body, to authorize President George Herbert Walker Bush to use military force to expel the armed forces of Iraq from Kuwait. I am proud of that vote, and I am prouder still of the American and allied forces that went on to liberate Kuwait.

Having engaged in that debate, and witnessed Saddam Hussein's refusal to yield except when confronted with the threat of force, I have no illusions about the danger he poses to regional stability and international security today. I am concerned that Iraq remains in violation of more than a dozen Security Council resolutions. I am alarmed that the regime of Saddam Hussein continues to develop weapons of mass destruction in violation of the international agreements it promised to comply with at the end of the gulf war. Above all, I feel strongly that we must not allow Saddam Hussein to develop the capacity to acquire or deploy nuclear weapons.

This past Monday night, President Bush addressed our Nation. He reminded us that there are significant risks to the United States both in acting and in not acting. If we choose not to act, we must remember that, in Saddam Hussein, we are talking about a man who has invaded his neighbors, showing a reckless disregard for the stability of a volatile region. We are talking about a man who has risked his own survival, and that of his regime, to indulge his own vengeance. Finally, we are talking about a man who has used weapons of mass destruction before, even against his own people.

The need for action, however, does not preempt the need for an objective and open debate on the course of action we choose and the consequences of our subsequent actions. Bringing the weight of the world's disapproval to bear on Iraq; demanding unfettered inspections of every potential weapons site; and preparing for any military or diplomatic contingency offers us the best chance to face down our foe now and to ensure his permanent disarmament.

Like many in this chamber, I believe that it is essential for us to work closely with the international community to reinstate inspections that will lead to Iraq's disarmament. But it's imperative that such inspections be unhindered. Inspectors must have the freedom to go where they want, when they want. They must have the right to talk to whomever they wish and to provide immediate amnesty to any Iraqis who provide information that might place them at risk of reprisal from the regime. Inspections are only valuable if they are truly a means of stripping Saddam Hussein of his weapons of mass destruction and his ability to deliver them. If Saddam Hussein's regime is unwilling to accept this level of intrusion, both he and Iraq must be prepared to accept the consequences, including the likelihood of a war they will lose.

Looking back, one of the principal reasons we were so successful in the gulf war was because former President Bush and his administration did the hard work necessary to build a broad, strong international coalition before unleashing our military might. Our current President and his aides similarly did the hard work necessary to build such a coalition after the attacks on our country last fall. This up-front investment has paid off in the arrests of Al Qaeda operatives throughout the globe, as well as in the elimination of the regime that was harboring them in Afghanistan—though the war on terror is far from over. These are prime examples of America's global leadership in action at its very best. They are examples that we should emulate now.

If we fail to uphold our international leadership responsibilities, and act without regard to the views and interests of our allies, we invite our isolation in the world. We undermine our position as a preeminent force in global policy and order. We make more difficult the task of securing the assistance of the international community in helping Iraq to return as a responsible member of the community of nations. We invite additional terrorist attacks on Americans at home and abroad, as well as put the fragile governments of many Muslim nations further at risk. Moreover, if we are perceived to act without the sanction of international law or authorization of the United Nations, we further fuel anti-American resentment in the Arab world, thereby increasing the threat to Israel. On the other hand, if we make an effort to work in concert with our allies, we have the opportunity to strengthen the international institutions that will be critical in addressing future threats.

At a time when 24-hour news networks have made the images of war instantly accessible, our nation's recent military successes have made the awful realities of war appear ever more remote: images of laser-guided bombs falling on indistinguishable targets; missiles lighting up the night sky. For an entire generation of Americans, our military efforts have come to be seen almost as a casualty-free video game, where no one gets hurt and few families face the knowledge that their son or daughter will not be coming home.

But like a handful of my colleagues here in the Senate, I have known a different side to war, having seen it firsthand. During my 23 years in the Navy, including service in Southeast Asia, we witnessed soldiers, sailors, and airmen leaving for missions from which they would never return. I've met countless veterans who left part of themselves on the battlefield. Some of those heroes serve in this very body today.

War can—and often does—enact a terrible price. It should be entered into as a last resort. So, the decision we face this week, which may lead to war, is not one that I take lightly. Nor do any of us.

For the past 11 years, people in this country and elsewhere have second-guessed the decision of former President Bush to stop short of entering Baghdad in 1991. I have never criticized that decision. That flat, open sands on which our soldiers fought and won is a far different—and less dangerous—terrain than the streets of major Iraqi cities. There, our enemy's tactical advantage likely would have enacted a far heavier toll on American lives.

If the course of events in this decade ultimately leads to another conflict with Iraq, and I hope it does not, the risks associated with urban warfare may well become a reality this time. Before they do, it is critical that we prepare ourselves, and the American people, for the losses we may endure in a military campaign of that nature.

We must also face head-on the fact that, if war should occur, liberating Baghdad from Hussein's power will not solve every problem in the region. It will, however, force us to find answers to a difficult set of new questions. Among them, how will we operate in Iraq after a military victory? A number of competing factions will vie for control if Saddam Hussein is removed from power. Who will we support? How will we convince them to work together? We will need a coherent policy to help Iraq make the transition to political and economic stability. We will also need a great deal of patience and fortitude. Otherwise, we risk creating a less stable and more explosive Iraq than we face today and, worse yet, an even more volatile region.

We have learned from our missions in Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan that bringing meaningful change to unstable nations requires enormous time, resources, and effort. We have been relatively successful in restoring stability in Bosnia and Kosovo, but it has not been without a painstaking commitment over many years. Indeed, the U.S. and our NATO allies continue to maintain a significant troop presence in both of those nations.

Afghanistan, on the other hand, has demonstrated how minimal troop commitments can impair efforts to restore peace in a war-ravaged nation. Hamid Karzai and his coalition government continue to express Afghanistan's ongoing need for adequate support and resources from the U.S. and other nations if the Afghan people are to realize the peace and democracy of which they dream.

In a post-war Iraq, the need for ongoing U.S. and allied intervention is likely to be far greater and far more costly. Experts in military operations maintain that creating a more stable Iraq will require the continued presence of between 50,000 to 100,000 troops. Not for a few weeks or months, but for several years.

There is another question that I believe must be addressed as we move forward: How will we bear the financial burdens of such a mission? It is impossible to place a price tag on the lives that might be saved by disarming Saddam Hussein. At the same time, it would be fiscally irresponsible to take on such an operation without at least considering the impact of a potential war on our already fragile economy. Over the past 2 years, we have watched the stock market plummet, making its sharpest decline in 70 years. The budget surplus that we worked so hard to achieve in the 1990's is gone. All the while, current estimates project the likely cost of U.S. military action in Iraq to be in the range of $100 billion. These estimates do not include the prospect of long-term peacekeeping operations in the event of a regime change. The presence of tens of thousands of U.S. troops for months—maybe years—once the fighting has ended will cost billions more. This is a cost we should not bear alone.

I believe the principles and questions I have laid out today were best embodied in, and addressed by, the bipartisan resolution drafted earlier this month by Senate RICHARD LUGAR and my fellow Senator from Delaware, JOE BIDEN—two Senators of intellect and skill in the area of international diplomacy. The Biden-Lugar draft resolution focused on the most critical task at hand—disarming Saddam Hussein. Senators BIDEN and LUGAR carefully crafted this resolution to give President Bush the flexibility he needs to garner international support now for a tough, new U.N. Security Council resolution. Their draft resolution also provided the President with the authority to unleash U.S. military force against Iraq should he determine that Iraq's continued intransigence makes such action necessary. I'm disappointed that we will not have the opportunity to vote on that alternative this week. Having said that though, I do believe that the Biden-Lugar proposal contributed appreciatively to the change in direction that this debate has taken in recent weeks, particularly in its emphasis on acting together with our allies. That change in tone was clearly evident in the address of President Bush to the American people this past Monday night. What he said encouraged me and served to reassure much of our nation.

The President spoke of the importance of working with the United Nations to craft a tough inspection regimen in Iraq. I agree with him. The President said that the U.N. must be "an effective organization that helps keep the peace." I agree with him. The President told the American people that our primary goal in this endeavor is to strip Saddam Hussein of his ability to manufacture and deploy weapons of mass destruction. Again, I agree with him. We also heard the President state that he hopes the policy he has laid out will not require military action, although he acknowledged that it might. I hope it will not. We all share that hope in the Senate as members of this body prepare to cast our votes and to authorize the use of force if certain conditions are met.

In closing, let me say for much of our Nation's history, the United States has been an instrument for peace and justice and a better life for the people of many nations throughout the world. That is our heritage. It is one of which we can be proud.

There have been times in our history when we have had to go it alone. But history has shown that we have been most successful when we provided the leadership that compelled other nations to join us in a just cause—two World Wars, the Cold War, the Persian Gulf War, Bosnia, Kosovo, Afghanistan, and the war on terrorism. Stripping Saddam Hussein, once and for all, of the weapons that would enable him to create havoc and great loss of life is a just cause. Other nations know that, too.

If we make the case to them forcefully, skillfully, and persistently in the weeks ahead, they will join us. I am certain of it. The burden before us—disarming Iraq—is one we should not bear alone. If the President uses the powers inherent in this resolution authorizing the use of force with great skill and diplomacy, we will not have to bear this burden, and face this challenge, alone. An armada of nations, again, will join us, and together we will make this world, at least for a little while, a safer and saner place in which to live.

I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, as our nation appears to draw closer to war, I rise with full consciousness of the burden that each of us has to help guide our nation during this time of peril. It is indeed a heavy burden to bear, but nothing compared to the burden of those who serve in our military.

The vote to authorize the use of force in Iraq is one of the most difficult and important votes any of us will ever cast. We need to approach this issue as if we are sending our very own children to war because, in effect, we are voting to send our nation's children to war.

Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld recently told Congress that "a decision to use military force is never easy. No one with any sense considers war a first choice." The risks of war are real but the risks of inaction may be even greater. As Ronald Reagan put it in his first inaugural address, "I do not believe in a fate that will fall on us no matter what we do. I do believe in a fate that will fall on us if we do nothing."

The threat posed by Saddam Hussein's regime is growing with each passing day. He has, at this moment, chemical and biological weapons he could use against us or share with terrorist networks that threaten us. He is pursuing nuclear weapons. He has used chemical weapons against his own people, and against foreign forces. He has invaded two of his neighbors and fired ballistic missiles at four of his neighbors. He supports terrorist networks, and has harbored senior al-Qaida terrorists in Baghdad since September 11. He has a long-standing hostility toward the United States, because we have denied him his ambition to occupy the territory of his neighbors and dominate the Persian Gulf region. He has openly praised the September 11th attacks, and his state-run press has called them "God's punishment." He has warned that Americans should understand that "every Iraqi [can] become a missile."

Each of us needs to carefully weigh the risks posed by his regime the risk of acting and the risk of doing nothing in the face of this threat. And Mr. President, I submit that the risk of inaction far outweigh the risk of war in Iraq. Here is why:

For most of our history, America has been able to rely on our geography to protect us. Two oceans, and friendly neighbors, provided a buffer against enemies who might want to attack us. After September 11th, we now know our invulnerability has passed away. We are not only vulnerable to terrorists who use airplanes as missiles we are vulnerable to terrorist networks and terrorist states that want to use weapons of mass destruction against us.

As Secretary Rumsfeld has pointed out, when the threats came from conventional weapons, our country could afford to wait for an attack to happen, absorb the first blow, regroup, and then respond militarily. In the age of weapons of mass destruction, however, we can no longer afford to wait.

In this new security environment, we must become more proactive in our efforts to prevent attacks that have the potential to be far worse than that of September 11. We must make sure when possible that those who have the desire to attack us are prevented from having the means with which to carry out those attacks. We have a right and an obligation to take anticipatory action in our own self-defense.

This certainly would not be the first time that our nation engaged in preventative military action in defense of our homeland. During the Cuban Missile Crisis, President Kennedy ordered a military blockade of Cuba in 1962, an act of war under international law. This was done even though the Soviets were not engaged in an armed attack, nor were the missiles an imminent threat.

Today, Saddam Hussein poses a similar threat. And we should give this President the authority he needs to deal with the Iraqi threat now, before it reaches our shores.

Saddam Hussein poses a very real and imminent danger to the United States. According to the CIA, Iraq "has broad capability to attack" the U.S. "with chemical or biological weapons and could build a nuclear bomb within a year if it obtains fissile material from abroad." Iraq "probably" has "stockpiled more than 100 tons of mustard gas and other chemical weapons. Iraq has developed 'large scale' capability to produce anthrax and other bioweapons in mobile facilities that are easy to hide and hard to destroy.”

The longer we wait, the stronger he becomes, and the harder he will be to defeat. Saddam Hussein’s regime hosts terrorist networks and has directly ordered acts of terror on foreign soil. He has used weapons of mass murder before, and would not hesitate to use them again.

Moreover, Saddam Hussein’s ongoing defiance of U.N. Security Council resolutions has made clear that he has no intention of disarming or discontinuing his weapons of mass destruction programs.

Remember, our goal is not to get weapons inspectors back into Iraq. Our goal is disarmament. And Saddam Hussein has shown that he is not willing to disarm. To the contrary, he has proven willing to pay an enormously high price to maintain his weapons of mass destruction aspirations. Under U.N. sanctions, he has given up about $180 billion in oil revenue to keep his weapons of mass destruction. As Richard Butler, a former U.N. chief weapons inspector has said, “The fundamental problem with Iraq remains the nature of the regime, itself. Saddam Hussein is a homicidal dictator who is addicted to weapons of mass destruction.”

Congress recognized that fact in 1998 when it passed The Iraq Liberation Act stating that, “It should be the policy of the United States to support efforts to remove the regime headed by Saddam Hussein from power in Iraq and to promote the emergence of a democratic government to replace that regime.” We knew then what we know now—that regime change and disarmament are inextricably linked.

Just like there are career criminals there are career criminal regimes. Leniency only incites them to more violence. They are driven; they are compulsive. And unless they are constantly thwarted they will continue to prey on the weak and defenseless.

We cannot stake the lives of tens of thousands of innocent American citizens on the hope that Saddam Hussein will never use his weapons of mass destruction against us. He has already proven that he cannot be trusted, and that he poses a great threat to the peace and stability of the world. This is a critical moment for the United States. If Saddam Hussein is appeased with more talk of weakened, compromised weapons inspections, which he has repeatedly defied, we risk leaving our country open for another catastrophic attack, one potentially far worse than the heinous acts of September 11th.

As we debate how to deal with the Iraqi threat, we must never forget that in Saddam Hussein we are dealing not just with a homicidal dictator; we are confronting Evil that is akin to Stalin and Hitler.

Just ask former Iraqi general, Najib Salhi. He defected from Iraq and was living in Amman, Jordan when one day he came home to find a package from Saddam Hussein’s intelligence service. He opened it to find a video tape.

When he put it into the VCR, he saw what he thought was a pornographic film—till he realized, to his horror, that he was watching the rape of one of his closest female relatives. The message was clear. They wanted to blackmail him into silence.

That is the face of Evil.

Or consider the fact that Saddam Hussein’s regime has admitted to having weaponized aflatoxin—the only country in the world known to have done so. As former CIA Director Jim Woolsey has stated, “The only use of aflatoxin is that it creates cancer, long-term cancer, especially in children.”

Aflatoxin has no military value. It has no battlefield use. It takes tens of years to kill its victim. It is a weapons whose only purpose is to kill innocent people for murder’s sake. Richard Spertzel, the former chief biological weapons inspector for UNSCOM, declared that aflatoxin is “a devilish weapon. From a moral standpoint, aflatoxin is the cruelest weapon—it means watching children die slowly of liver cancer.”

That is the face of Evil.

Look at the attacks Saddam Hussein has ordered on his own people—on thousands of innocent men, women, and children—in Halabja, using a chemical weapons cocktail. Those attacks are causing cancer and genetic mutations that will be felt in this generation and the next.

That is the face of Evil.

Saddam Hussein is a man who has personally shot and killed members of his own cabinet; who has ordered his opponents to be burned alive in vats of acid; who forces those suspected of disloyalty to watch the gang rape of their mothers, daughters, wives, and sisters; who not only tortures dissidents, but tortures their children in front of them.

He is the living incarnation of an Evil that cannot be appeased and cannot be deterred, and must be confronted and defeated.

He has murdered hundreds of thousands of innocent people—and is pursuing weapons that will allow him to extend his deadly reach across oceans and continents—that will give him the capability to kill our people—our children, our families.

The President has rightly called Saddam Hussein “a student of Stalin.” And I applaud him for his resolve in confronting the dangers posed by the Iraqi Regime.

The President has awakened the world to the existence of evil in our midst—and challenged the world to confront that evil before it confronts us, at the cost of millions of lives.

It is a natural reaction to flee in the face of evil. It is little wonder that much of the world has been reluctant to stand its ground and face down Saddam Hussein, which is why the President’s leadership has been critical, and why it is so important for the United States Congress to show similar resolve, and demonstrate our unity with the President.

In showing steadfastness and steely determination, the President made clear to the Iraqi regime, and the world, that we were not going to repeat the tired old pattern of meeting Iraq’s threats with inaction. And that leadership has had an impact. One by one we have seen nations join the U.S. in recognition that Saddam must go. Some have said so publicly, others privately. Let there be no doubt: if we go to war, we will not be going it alone.

Thanks to our President, the world understands that there is a price to be paid for defying the United States when our survival is at stake. And I believe that a strong show of support by Congress will strengthen the President’s hand at the United Nations.

While we greatly value the support of our allies in the war on terror, we must never give other nations the authority to stop us from defending our freedom or from acting in our own self-defense. We must do what we feel is right in protecting America, whether or not we have the approval of France, Russia, China or any of the other nations which currently sit on the U.N. Security Council.

None of us takes the prospect of war lightly. War is difficult and dangerous, and lives will be lost. I understand the concerns many Americans have about war in Iraq, and I fully appreciate the sacrifice American families make when they lose a loved-one in the fight to keep America and the rest of the world free from tyranny and oppression.

This country lives, freedom lives, because brave men and women were willing to die for it—willing to risk their lives, and give their lives, for a cause greater than themselves. As scripture teaches “there is no greater love than this: that a man lay down his life for his friends.” We are all concerned for the well being of our troops, and we thank them for their willingness to keep America safe from the evil that has been made so apparent in the last year.

While I value diplomacy and rhetoric, there comes a time when force is inevitable—when our choice is not between war and peace, but between war today, when our enemy is weaker, or war tomorrow, when our enemy is stronger. That is the choice we face today.

We have tried diplomacy. We have imposed sanctions. We have sent inspectors. All attempts to reason with the Iraqi Regime have failed. The only language Saddam Hussein understands is force.

Indeed, in a way, we are already at war with Iraq. Since hostilities ended in 1991, Iraq has repeatedly violated the ceasefire conditions which were set out at the close of the Gulf War. Just ask our brave pilots who are being shot almost every day as they patrol the no-fly zones over Iraq.

After President Bush's speech to the U.N., Saddam Hussein sent a letter to the U.N. promising to "allow the return of United Nations weapons inspectors to Iraq without conditions." He went on to say that Iraq "based its decision concerning the return of inspectors on its desire to complete the implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions and to remove any doubts that Iraq still possesses weapons of mass destruction."

Hours after that letter arrived at the U.N., Iraq was shooting at U.S. aircraft implementing those same relevant U.N. Security Council resolutions. Since 1992, the Iraqis have used anti-aircraft artillery, or Triple-A, against our aircraft in the northern and southern no-fly zones. In fact, over the last three years Iraqi Triple-A has fired at coalition aircraft over 1,000 times. This year to date they have fired on us over 400 times—and since that September 16 letter where Saddam pledged his support for U.N. resolutions they have fired on coalition aircraft more than 70 times. It appears that Iraq has actually stepped up its firing on U.S. and British planes since he agreed to cooperate with the U.N. Actions speak louder than words. And for 11 years Saddam Hussein's actions have shown that he is bent upon pursuing weapons of mass destruction at all costs.

After all, three days after Saddam Hussein's September 16th letter pledging the unconditional return of weapons inspectors, Iraq's foreign minister stated U.N. resolutions were "unjust and at odds with the U.N. charter and international law." He further declared, "Iraq demands that its inalienable rights are met, including respect for its sovereignty, security and the lifting of the blockade imposed on it." Then Baghdad stated that the 1998 Memorandum of Understanding which exempted certain presidential palaces must stand. I am sure we will hear from time to time that Baghdad is once again stating that unconditional inspections could take place. The words change, but the actions stay the same. They keep right on firing at our pilots.

Madam President, on September 11, 3,000 innocent citizens were killed. If their deaths are to have any meaning, our nation must not forget the lesson they gave their lives for us to learn. The era of our invulnerability is over. Evil exists—it is real, it is out there, and it seeks our destruction. If we ignore it, it will not go away. It will continue to stalk us, and kill more of our people.

It must be confronted and it must be defeated.

"There is a time for all things," the Rev. Peter Muhlenberg told his congregation on the eve of the Revolutionary War, "a time to preach and a time to pray. But those times have passed away. There is a time to fight, and that time has now come."

We have listened and we have prayed. Now we must fight.

For the best honor we can bestow on those who have died for our nation, and those who will die for our nation, is victory. Victory over terrorism. And if the President believes it is necessary to secure our freedom, victory over the regime of Saddam Hussein.

Madam President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator GRAHAM's and Senator CANTWELL's time be changed. Senator GRAHAM will go before Senator CANTWELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Florida is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Madam President.

Madam President, I rise this evening to speak to my colleagues, more importantly to speak to the people of the United States and, especially, my fellow Floridians.

In my service in the Senate I have not shied away from authorizing the use of force when I believed it was in our Nation's interests.

I voted to use force in the Persian Gulf in 1991. I voted to use force in Bosnia in 1992. I voted to use force in Kosovo in 1999.

I have given the President of the United States a presumption of correctness in his assessment of our national security interest.

But, Madam President, tonight I am going to vote no on this resolution. The reason is this resolution is too timid. It is too limiting. It is too weak. This resolution fails to recognize the new reality of the era of terrorism. And that reality is that war abroad will, without assertive security actions, increase the prospects of terrorist attacks here at home.

In fact, war on Iraq alone leaves Americans more vulnerable to the No. 1 threat facing us today, those international terrorist organizations that have the capability to inflict upon us a repeat of the tragedy of September 11.

The resolution I had hoped we would pass would contain what the President has asked for relative to the use of force against Saddam Hussein's regime in Iraq, and more.

It also should provide the President all necessary authorities to use force against the international terrorist groups that will probably strike the United States as the regime of Saddam Hussein crumbles.

I offered an amendment on this floor yesterday that would have given the President the authorities he needs to deal with the threat posed by the five deadliest terrorist organizations in addition to al-Qaida—that would gladly join Saddam Hussein in his retaliatory strike.

Those five organizations have already killed hundreds of Americans. Those five organizations have ties to countries that could provide them with weapons of mass destruction. Those five organizations have the capability to strike within our homeland. They have recruited, trained, and placed operatives in our hometowns.

I argued that the President should have the option to set priorities and choose our targets, and to be able to preempt terrorists before they can order strikes against us in our homeland. Unfortunately, that amendment was rejected.

Some said I was incorrect in my contention that the President, as Commander in Chief, lacks the power to expand the war on terrorism beyond al-Qaida. I disagree. But I will not repeat the legal arguments that I made yesterday.

But even accepting the fact that others may disagree, how is it in the interest of our Nation's security to leave the question in doubt as to whether the President has the authority to attack these international terrorist organizations that represent such a lethal threat to the people of the United States?

There have been some past administrations which have allowed leaders of rogue states to be uncertain as to how America would respond if they used weapons of mass destruction. This administration should not repeat that fundamental error.

If we want to deter the world's terrorists and madmen, shouldn't we tell them, in the most explicit terms, what they will face by U.S. retaliation to their action?

I also want to restate my conviction that this resolution forces the President to focus our military and intelligence resources on the wrong target. A historical example, which has been used repeatedly in this debate, is the example of the 1930s: that England, France, and other nations, which would eventually join in the world's greatest alliance, slept while Hitler's power grew.

They say the equivalent of passing this resolution is to have declared war on Hitler. I disagree with that assessment of what this lesson of history means. In my judgment, passing this resolution tonight will be the equivalent of declaring war on Italy. That is not what we should be doing. We should not be declaring war just on Mussolini's Italy. We should also be declaring war on Hitler's Germany.

There are good reasons to consider attacking today's Italy, by which I mean Iraq. Saddam Hussein's regime has chemical and biological weapons and is trying to get nuclear capacity. But the briefings I have received suggest our efforts, for instance, to block him from obtaining necessary nuclear materials have been largely successful, as evidenced by the recent intercept of centrifuge tubes, and that he is years away from having nuclear capability.

So why does it make sense to attack this era's Italy and not Germany, especially when by attacking Italy, we are making Germany a more probable adversary?

The CIA has warned us that international terrorist organizations will probably use United States action against Iraq as a justification for striking us here in the homeland. You might ask: What does the word "probably" mean in intelligence speak. "Probably" means there is a 75 percent or greater chance of the event occurring. And the event is that international terrorist organizations will use United States action against Iraq as a justification for striking us here in the homeland.

Let me read a declassified portion of a CIA report recently presented to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence:

Baghdad for now appears to be drawing a line short of conducting terrorist attacks with conventional or [chemical and biological weapons] against the United States.

Should Saddam conclude that a U.S.-led attack could no longer be deterred, he probably would become much less constrained in adopting terrorist actions.

Such terrorism might involve conventional means . . . or [chemical and biological weapons].

Saddam might decide that the extreme step of assisting Islamic terrorists in conducting a [weapon of mass destruction] attack against the United States would be his last chance to exact vengeance by taking a large number of victims with him.

In other words, the odds of another strike against the people of the United States by al-Qaida or one of the international terrorist groups goes up when we attack Baghdad.

The President should be in the most advantageous position to protect Americans, to launch preemptive strikes and hack off the heads of these snakes. With the resolution before us, we are denying the President that opportunity, and we are sending confusing signals to our people and our allies as to the sincerity of our commitment to the war on terrorism.

The American people and our allies gave President Bush their wholehearted support in the war on terrorism after September 11. They cheered our efforts to remove Osama bin Laden and the Taliban government from Afghanistan. A year after we commenced that war, action in Afghanistan has ground to a virtual halt. Osama bin Laden remains at large, and we have not moved aggressively beyond Afghanistan to take on the cells of al-Qaida operatives in other parts of the world.

We also know of sanctuaries, training camps where the next generation of terrorists are being trained and that those sanctuaries are going unattacked.

With sadness, I predict we will live to regret on this day, October 10, 2002, we stood by, and we allowed those terrorist organizations to continue growing in the shadows. It may be days, weeks, months, or years before they strike Americans again, but they will, and we will have allowed them to grow that capability.

If we are going to pass this resolution—and I expect we will—there are several things we should say about the need to protect the American people. Within the region of the Middle East and central Asia, we have a constellation of challenges, threats, and commitments of the United States. We need to use this period of time to begin to reduce the threat environment in that area by active, sustained U.S. diplomacy on two half-century-old disputes: The dispute between Israel and Palestine, and the dispute over Kashmir, the festering sore between two nuclear powers, India and Pakistan.

Second, the President a year ago should have ordered all of the law enforcement agencies under his control to design a comprehensive means of determining the number, location, and capability of terrorists who are living among us. But tonight, no one in our government can fully tell us which, when, where, and how terrorist organizations might hurt us. This I consider to be a stunning admission and an unnecessary vulnerability.

At this late hour, such action should be of the most urgent priority. This should be done, of course, within the confines of the protections afforded to all American persons by the Constitution of the United States.

Third, we should be moving to detain all those who can be legally detained who represent a threat to the United States.

Fourth, the President should direct the military forces of our country to prepare to execute a full-fledged war on terrorism. We must complete our mission in Afghanistan and then move to the next targets of al-Qaida cells.

Finally, I would advise the President to request of the Congress the authorities he needs to execute the war on terror and to protect Americans. Specifically, this should include the authority to use force against those international terrorist organizations with the greatest capability to kill Americans here at home, with the greatest history of having used their evil intent against Americans, and with the largest number of terrorist operatives located within the United States.

Our people need to know their government is doing all it can to keep them safe. Tonight many Americans are anxious and frightened, and they have cause to be. One year ago letters carrying anthrax killed five Americans, including one in my home State, and created great concern. That case has not yet been solved.

One year later, here in the Capital region, a sniper is randomly taking lives of innocent people going about their daily activities. Just hours ago, police confirmed the man who was shot last night while pumping gas into his car at a service station is the eighth victim, six of whom are dead. And in today's Washington Post, a front page article has the headline "Probe Less Cohesive Than Advertised."

It states:

Behind the scenes at the command central, however, interviews with leading investigators suggest that while some aspects of the massive effort are working well, others are fraught with the same turf battles, politics, leaks and confusion that historically have characterized manhunts of this size.

Are these acts that we are trying to unravel those of a madman, a mad scientist, a terrorist? The honest answer is that we do not know. In these frightening times, it is irresponsible to add to the anxiety of the American people by going to war with Iraq—without taking the additional steps required to curtail the possibility of more horrors being inflicted upon us here in our homeland. This resolution fails to take those steps.

Different people have different opinions of what our national security priorities should be. Clearly, some—including the President—believe the first priority should be regime change in Baghdad. Others believe our first priority should be to disarm Iraq by removing its weapons of mass destruction. As important as they may be, I have a different view.

The United States has many challenges, threats, and commitments to respond to, particularly in the region of the Middle East and central Asia. These include the Israel-Palestine conflict, the India-Pakistan standoff, and the threats posed by weapons of mass destruction. Even if we say the No. 1 issue in the region should be containing weapons of mass destruction—especially nuclear weapons—I frankly do not believe Iraq should be our first concern. We do not know the full capabilities of the State of Israel, although we believe it has the full capacity to defend itself against attacks, or the threat of an attack. We are aware of the significant capacity possessed by India, Pakistan, and Iran. I can say without fear of contradiction that all of these possess substantially greater capabilities and means of delivering nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction than Iraq.

Of all the issues we care about, and those issues over which we have some capability to determine the outcome, in my judgment, the No. 1 priority should be the war on terrorism and its threat to the people of the United States in our homeland. Our top targets should be those groups that have the greatest potential to repeat what happened on September 11, killing thousands of Americans. Passing this timid resolution, I fear, will only increase the chances of Americans again being killed. That is not a burden of probability I am prepared to accept. Therefore, I will vote no.

I close with the words spoken in one of the darkest periods of the history of the Western World. In 1941, Winston Churchill said:

Never, never, never believe any war will be smooth and easy, or that anyone who embarks on the strange voyage can measure the tides and hurricanes he will encounter.

The statesman who yields to war fever must realize that once the signal is given, he is no longer the master of policy, but the slave of unforeseeable and uncontrollable events.

Mr. REID. Madam President, how much time did the Senator from Florida use?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator used 20 minutes.

Mr. REID. And he had 30 allocated to him. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that Senator MIKULSKI be recognized for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam President, after careful consideration, I have decided to oppose the Bush resolution on Iraq. This resolution would give President Bush the unilateral authority he seeks to go to war against Iraq without international support or international resources. The resolution includes only tepid language supporting diplomatic efforts at the United Nations.

The Senate is making a grave decision: Whether to give the President unlimited authority to go to war and send American military men and women into harm's way.

I take this responsibility very seriously. I have listened to the President and his advisors. I have consulted with experts and wise heads. I have participated in hearings and briefings as a member of the Senate, and particularly as a member of the Intelligence Committee. I have listened intently to my own constituents.

The American people are deeply ambivalent. The American people want a safer world, a world in which distant tyrants can't threaten us and our bases and our embassies and our treasured allies. The American people are counting on us to assess the Iraqi threat and to confront it with our allies. They and I firmly believe that Saddam Hussein is duplicitous, deceptive, and dangerous.

Iraq has grim and ghoulish weapons to carry out his evil plans. As part of the Gulf War cease-fire agreement, Saddam Hussein committed to destroying its chemical and biological and nuclear weapons programs and longer-range missiles. Instead, Saddam Hussein is trying to add nuclear weapons to an arsenal that already includes chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missiles.

These threats cannot be ignored and allowed to grow. But these are not only threats to us. These are threats to the international community, and the international community must share the responsibility of addressing them.

I support a robust multinational response to the Iraqi threat. That's why I supported the Levin resolution, urging the United Nations Security Council to fulfill President Bush's request to demand Iraqi disarmament, verified by unfettered inspections, and to authorize the use of multinational force if Iraq refuses to comply.

If the UN refuses to act, then Congress would consider a request from the President to authorize acting alone against Iraq.

Let me be very clear on one point. The United States always has the authority to take military action in self-defense. That is our right under international law, included as Article 51 of the United Nations Charter, and I support that.

President Bush says he has not yet decided whether the use of military force is necessary, and I take him at his word.

The United States should first exhaust all diplomatic and other non-military means.

The United States should give the United Nations the opportunity to fulfill its responsibility to address the Iraqi threat.

The United States should fully pursue whether the UN Security Council will authorize the use of multinational force.

The Bush resolution, the White House resolution, would authorize the President to send our Armed Forces to war against Iraq without any further consideration by Congress.

Under the Levin resolution, which I cosponsored, Congress would remain in session, standing ready to promptly reconsider if the UN does not meet the challenge.

I have had to ask myself, "Why should the Senate wait to see what the United Nations will do before deciding on the unilateral use of force?"

The answer is this:

Voting now in support of unilateral action would take the international community off the hook.

Why would the other members of the United Nations Security Council make the tough decision to effectively authorize war against a member state if they know the U.S. will do it by ourselves?

I believe this resolution would actually weaken the negotiating position of the President and the Secretary of State at the United Nations.

Why would other nations send their troops into harm's way if America is ready to send our troops without them?

Why would other nations join us to rebuild Iraq after a war if Uncle Sam is willing to bear the financial burden, as well as the dangers?

I'm concerned about the prospect of America going it alone because I've thought about the risks and consequences.

The risks and consequences of acting alone are so much greater than they would be for multinational action.

The risks to our troops are greater if allied forces do not join the mission.

The challenge in post-conflict Iraq is greater if other nations do not share the burden and the cost.

The consequences for the war on terrorism are greater if we lose the essential cooperation of other nations in the effort to pursue al-Qaida and other terrorist groups. The consequences on our economy would be severe.

A mandate from the United Nations would mean the international community against Saddam instead of the United States against Iraq, and other countries in the region would join our coalition rather than obstructing or opposing us.

I recognize that I will likely be in the minority on this vote. The Senate and House of Representatives will probably grant the President the broad authority he now seeks.

I will vote differently than the majority, but I want my constituents, particularly our men and women in uniform, to know that I believe my vote represents the wisest, most prudent course with them in mind.

America's soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines will always have my full and steadfast support. I stand accountable to the oath I took to defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. I hold myself accountable to my constituents, and I am prepared to defend this vote because I think when history is written, it would have been wiser not to give authority to go it alone right now.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I thank the Chair.

Madam President, I can recall 11 years ago—12 years ago actually—I made my maiden speech on the floor of the Senate. It was about Saddam Hussein and going to war with President Bush in office. Here we are 12 years later doing the same thing.

I rise today to again support the President in his duty, I believe, to stop Iraq from bringing weapons of mass destruction throughout the world. When I addressed this topic in January of 1991, I said then that there was a lot of talk about George Bush—President Bush 41—leading us into war. What I said then, and I will say now, is that was wrong. It is Saddam Hussein who is leading us into war. The same holds true today as it did 12 years ago.

Those voices against the Desert Storm operation, some of whom are repeating this same antiwar rhetoric today, are simply wrong. The war-monger is Saddam Hussein. He is now moving us toward another major military engagement with the stakes even higher than they were 12 years ago.

Unfortunately, Desert Storm did not finish the job. There has been some criticism about that. Given the data and facts President Bush had at the time and with the U.N. resolution, he did what he had to do.

If we calculate the costs of air operations, no-fly zones, and other activities over these past 12 years, containment has not worked. In this age of weapons of mass destruction, relying on a policy of containment and deterrence is a risk we cannot and must not take.

I pulled out a copy of the speech I made in 1991. I do not know anyone in this body who wants war. I do not know anyone in America who wants war. I certainly do not. The President does not. Nobody wants war. Yet we heard today on the floor that President Bush is leading us into war, and that is wrong.

Thomas Paine, who is often quoted, over 200 years ago said: These are the times that try men's souls. This is the time that American service men and women are keenly aware of the enormous burden which the world events have placed upon us. I said that in 1991, and it is true today.

Unfortunately, Saddam Hussein is still with us. The stakes are high. We are in a virtual state of war now with Saddam Hussein and with Iraq, but it has not produced the necessary results. Saddam is again developing the potential to threaten us with weapons of mass destruction and with terrorist attacks.

This threat has to be met. It just simply has to be met head on. And the only answer is the overthrow of Saddam's regime one way or the other—domestically if possible, militarily if necessary. The stakes are simply too high not to do it.

I served in Vietnam. Others have served in war. We all know the stakes. If we do not do this, people may die. If we do this, people will die. Imagine the tremendous burden that is placed now upon the President of the United States.

Democracies do not threaten democracies, and democracies do not start wars. We would all be much safer nations if everybody believed the way we did, but that is not the way it is.

We have learned much in the wake of the vicious attack upon our country on September 11. Frankly, we were pretty much asleep. We were complacent. The terrorist attacks in Africa, the USS Cole, Khobar Towers, our barracks in Saudi Arabia—these losses were largely inflicted on our military and on our State Department personnel, but we were still largely oblivious to the risks we faced right here on American soil. We were not prepared for the devastation of 9/11 and the lives of nearly 3,000 innocent Americans lost. The total costs are immeasurable. Some say as much as a trillion dollars, but how about in the human loss? All the children orphaned, young people, men and women who were embarking on careers—what they might have contributed to America over the next several years we will never know.

What Saddam Hussein is doing has to be met. He is a threat to the people of the world. He is indeed a threat to the world. I know. I have seen enough intelligence on this over the past several years to know—not only to believe it but to know it. Weapons of mass destruction—nuclear, biological, and chemical, whatever they may be—can kill millions in insidious ways throughout the world. We simply cannot let this stand.

I know, having been there, the enormous burden felt by young men and women in uniform who will be there when and if this happens. They need our support. Have the debate, get the debate behind us, and get behind our men and women because they are going to have to do the work, and they deserve our support, unlike Vietnam when the troops did not get that support.

We need to find out where the links to al-Qaida are. They annihilate innocent people by virtue of their religious faith or their national identity. That is what they are doing. They will do it with terrorist bombs on their backs. They can do it with nuclear missiles or biological or chemical missiles as well.

If there are some in doubt, I urge them to go down to the Holocaust Museum and take a look and see what the cost of doing nothing is: 6 million innocent lives annihilated because we stood by as a world and let it go too long, and then we finally stopped it. We cannot let this go too long. Six million lives lost the way Hitler took them is horrible, and as despicable as it was, it is nothing compared to the number of lives that can be taken in more evil and despicable ways now.

Some say we should not take preemptive action. Preemptive action? There is already action taken against the United States of America. Remember the 3,000 people dead. This is not preemptive. We are reacting.

Our survival as a nation is at risk. Earlier this year in the wake of the unprecedented and vicious attack in the United States and world by al-Qaida, President Bush came before the American people in his State of the Union Address and unveiled his advocacy for regime change in Iraq.

That is a sound policy. And this is a terrible dilemma. How would you like to be the President of the United States today, sitting in the White House contemplating what has to be done? Criticized if you take action, criticized if you don't; risking death if you do, risking death if you don't.

There is no time in American history where a decision has been more important. There is no more important debate, ever, in my view, in American history where the stakes are higher than they are right now.

I am standing right now at the desk of Daniel Webster. He probably from this desk made some of the greatest speeches in the history of this body, but none of them, whether they were about slavery or all the great issues of the day of the 1830s and 1840s, even come close to the impact of what could happen by allowing this man, this despot, to move forward in the world unchecked.

We cannot rely on the United Nations, weapons inspectors, or Saddam's word that he is going to comply with inspections and disarm. I wish we could. Neville Chamberlain thought that about Hitler, didn't he?

Saddam Hussein's brutal dictatorship has reigned for 30 years. During these three decades, we have seen him attack Iran in a war that took a million lives; we have seen him repress, through murder and terror, ethnic and political elements in Iraq; we have seen him use weapons of mass destruction on 250 occasions against the civilian population. He had come close to producing a nuclear device before the Gulf war and is successfully continuing these efforts despite several years of failed weapons inspections. He has breached international law. He has invaded Kuwait. He set oil wells on fire. He has threatened the stability of the world. He prompted the use of military force to contain him, and Saddam Hussein has tried to assassinate a former President of the United States of America.

He is a sponsor of Islamic terrorism throughout the world, and his regime has harbored the likes and established relations with Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida. What more evidence do we need to act?

This resolution also touches my heart in another way. This resolution makes very brief mention that Iraq has failed to account for an American serviceman. It might be a small matter compared to the big issue of war with Iraq, but Captain Speicher, who was shot down over Iraq, was the first pilot lost in the war. He was pronounced dead by the Pentagon, but there is no evidence that he is dead. The information was incorrect. His status changed in January 2001. I worked for 7 years to change that status and President Clinton, to his credit, prior to leaving office, changed that status. I give him great credit for that because he very well may be a prisoner held by Saddam Hussein today. In short, whether he is a prisoner or not, Saddam Hussein knows what happened to him. We do not. This is simply unacceptable.

By not seeking a regime change in Iraq, by not backing our policies with military force, by not dismantling Saddam's regime and weapons of mass destruction, I am concerned America will repeat its folly and give Saddam the breathing room to produce a nuclear device, proliferate it, threaten to use it, or use it. He will continue to support terrorism which devastated our Nation.

I supported the resolution on Iraq during the administration of President Bush 41, and I will support the resolution of this President Bush to give him the power to authorize the use of military force against Iraq.

I will close with a comment I made in my closing remarks in 1991:

Stand with the Commander in Chief. Have the courage to stand with him who was elected by all of the American people. Stand with him, and stand with our sons and daughters in the Persian Gulf. Do not give Saddam Hussein a reason to doubt our resolve. Stand together. Let us discard Saddam Hussein on the garbage heap of history along with the other despots like Khrushchev, Stalin, and Hitler. That is where he belongs, and that is where we are going to put him sooner or later.

Unfortunately, it is a little bit later than we expected. We need not fear. We are the greatest Nation in the world, with the greatest people, and I believe it is the right thing to confront this monster and do it now. That is why I will be supporting President Bush.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURBIN). The Senator from Washington is recognized for 30 minutes.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to discuss S.J. Res. 46, the Lieberman, Warner Bayh-McCain resolution, and the issue that everyone of my colleagues agree on—that Iraq is in serious violation of its U.S. and U.N. agreements prohibiting its possession of weapons of mass destruction.

What my colleagues cannot agree on is how we should go about disarming Iraq.

Let me add my views.

I believe that the best way to deal with the threat posed by Saddam Hussein is to build a multinational coalition and engage the United Nations.

But we can't ask the United Nations to disarm Saddam Hussein if we are not willing to disarm him ourselves.

Today's vote for S.J. Res. 46 is a statement of national resolve to disarm Saddam Hussein. By showing our unity as a nation, we help the United States unite the world against his continued effort to use weapons of mass destruction.

History has shown that we have been very patient with Saddam Hussein.

First, let us remember that the United States and 34 other nations were at war with Iraq in 1991.

After 3 months of war in which the U.S. coalition lost 556 lives and 502 wounded—including seven young men from my home State—not to mention the estimated 100,000 Iraqis killed—we negotiated a cease-fire agreement with Iraq that ended our military campaign.

This cease-fire was approved in return for Saddam Hussein's promise that he would unconditionally accept the destruction and removal of all biological, chemical and nuclear weapons and to allow U.N. inspectors to verify the elimination of these programs.

This cease-fire agreement was even signed by the Iraq government.

We staked lives, resources, and diplomatic weight on that promise, and yet here we are today because of the non-compliance of that issue.

If military action is eventually taken by a UN-backed effort or multinational US effort, that military action would not be a pre-emptive strike, but the enforcement of the Iraqi government cease fire agreement.

In fact, I would say we have been in a constant battle of enforcement for 11 years on this enforcement issue.

Shortly after the cease-fire agreement in 1991, Saddam Hussein started to thwart the cease fire agreement.

For 7 years, inspectors were sent to Iraq to verify his promise to disclose and destroy his cache of chemical, biological and nuclear weapons, and for 7 years Hussein obstructed the inspectors efforts.

Saddam Hussein did hide and inspectors did find weapons of mass destruction—literally tons of them—most of which were unaccounted for in the final reports—and in clear breach of the cease-fire agreement.

Saddam Hussein even bugged the UNSCOM offices in Bahrain and New York, disguised weapons and hid them in various places. He leaked false intelligence and blatantly lied over, and as Sandra Mackey outlines in her book, "The Reckoning, Iraq and the Legacy of Saddam Hussein," "Hussein's tactical war of cheat and retreat with UN arms inspectors gave him power to remain a world figure and gain a hold over his own people."

What has been our response and the response of the United Nations?

We have tried economic sanctions to get Iraq to comply with the disarmament agreement—and they have failed miserably.

It is the innocent Iraqi people that feel the effects of sanctions, including hunger and a lack of medical care.

Saddam Hussein not only continues to eat well—hoarding much of the aid and food imported into Iraq through the oil-for-food program—but he builds palaces, and he devotes substantial riches toward developing weapons of mass destruction.

We have tried sending a strong signal to the United Nations.

In 1994, I joined my colleagues in the House of Representatives in calling for the United Nations to take action on Iraq's noncompliance.

The House resolution went even further and urged the President and the United Nations to establish a tribunal to charge Saddam Hussein as a war criminal.

That vote showed a clear consensus eight years ago when members of the House agreed that Saddam Hussein was neither a legitimate ruler nor an honest actor in the ceasefire and UN agreements.

In 1998, we increased military pressure in the region and even conducted a military strike under President Clinton called Operation Desert Fox—hoping that the threat of force and the destruction of military installations would bring Hussein to reason and allow the inspectors back in.

While this limited military pressure produced some initial results, as soon as the United States turned down the heat Saddam Hussein went back to his old ways.

Where are we today.

For 11 years since our cease-fire agreement with Iraq we have tried to stop Iraq's effort to develop weapons of mass destruction.

In reality, our efforts have failed to stop his continued build-up of weapons of mass destruction.

The United Nations should never have allowed Saddam to negotiate the terms of inspections.

When he crossed the line in the sand that separated Iraq from Kuwait, Hussein demonstrated to the world his absolute disregard for international law; and his defiance of the will of the international community.

He also displayed, on a world platform, his utter disdain for the principles of human rights and a free society; and revealed to the world a frightening weapons capacity, including chemical and biological weapons and substantial progress towards developing a nuclear weapon—all of which he intended to use to advance his regional ambitions and threaten enemies.

Saddam Hussein is a global menace that we cannot simply wish away.

By doing nothing the world is not only failing to enforce the terms of a cease-fire that we fought for; but it is allowing a dangerous threat to grow that deserves renewed immediacy.

This immediacy was demonstrated 13 months ago, when we witnessed the devastating steps that terrorists were willing to take and we know that this problem is not going away; and Saddam only increases the danger.

Some citizens say there are other countries in the world producing weapons of mass destruction and could be a source of aid to terrorists. Why worry about Iraq?

I know of no other country that has posed such a unique threat by: Violating of US/UN cease-fire agreement to stop development of weapons of mass destruction; Using weapons of mass destruction in war or against its own people; and Refusing to help the U.S. in the Afghanistan war on terrorism and actually applauded the efforts of Al Quida of 9/11.

We are now considering a resolution that I believe will take a positive step towards effectively dealing with the threat of Saddam Hussein, his failure to comply with the terms of the 1991 ceasefire agreement.

The best way to do that is to bolster the President's and the U.S. efforts by sending a message to the U.N. Security Council that we must act. This vote tells the President of the United States we agree Saddam Hussein and his failure to comply with the cease-fire agreement constitutes a serious breach and a threat to global stability.

The vote tells the President we firmly support his promise to go to the United Nations Security Council and live up to the responsibilities to enforce a cease-fire agreement that Iraq has continued to try to subvert. This vote is a statement of national resolve that Saddam Hussein must be disarmed by peaceful means, if necessary, but by showing our unity as a nation, that we, the United States, will help eliminate this threat and will unite the world behind it.

Some have called this unconditional authorization. That is not the case. Senators LIEBERMAN, WARNER, BAYH, and others have made great progress on this legislation. There are conditions. It requires a limited scope of operations in the Iraq theater, continued consultation with Congress on military action, and serious reporting requirements to inform Congress of the commencement progress and plans of both operations and postwar strategies.

I make clear this resolution does not endorse a unilateral action. If for some reason the U.N. Security Council does not act, I expect the President to make a major and aggressive diplomatic effort to enlist other partners around the globe in doing the right thing to stop Hussein's efforts. The President has promised Members of Congress, including the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, that he would be committed to developing a coalition of allies for military action. We know how important these coalitions are. We expect the President to fulfill this promise.

My vote for this resolution does not mean I am convinced the administration has answered all the questions. In fact, I believe the following issues must be addressed—there are several—before the U.N. or the United States takes military action: First, it is clear we need a continued, multilateral approach. The President must continue to make the disarmament of Iraq a global issue. The rhetoric surrounding Iraq earlier this summer was unilateralist. It offended our allies and others who might have been with us. It brandished the view around the world that the United States is an arrogant power, and did serious damage to our relationship with many important powers in the Middle East region.

The President's September speech to the United Nations reflected a new chapter and much needed improvement in the administration's efforts to confront Saddam Hussein. He made clear that the priority of the administration was to mobilize an international effort to enforce the cease-fire.

Second, we must understand what our successful military strategy is. This vote is not an endorsement of the President's military strategy, mainly because we have not been given what it is. However, there is good reason to believe that this operation, which may require force to enter Baghdad, will prove substantially more complex and difficult and costly than Operation Desert Storm—not only in its economic cost, but most important, in the lives of soldiers and innocent Iraqi citizens. This is, indeed, a troubling scenario. And if the administration ultimately acts within the scope of this authorization, it must be up front and honest with Congress and the American people in explaining what we are up against.

Third, we must have a postwar commitment strategy. This vote is not an endorsement of the President's postwar scenario either, largely because I have not seen details on that. We have heard some broad outlines, if, in fact, action by the U.N. or U.S. troops were taken. But we need to realize the process of creating a peaceful and stable post-Saddam Iraq will be huge and expensive and politically volatile.

If the President does not commit to multilateral military action, we must similarly commit ourselves to a serious long-term strategy to bring about freedom, representative democracy, and prosperity to the people of Iraq. This will require a substantial obligation and commitment.

Fourth, fighting the broader war on terrorism cannot be left behind. And while the President has made the point that this effort is related, we need to make sure if we commit troops to the Persian Gulf, that we will not be diminishing our other efforts on the war on terrorism.

Fifth, and probably the challenge that most of my colleagues have tried to address, maintaining the Middle East stability. I do remain very concerned about the effective military action and the volatile situation that may occur in the Middle East. The Israeli-Palestinian conflict remains in a disappointing and potentially volatile state. We must be aware that any action in Iraq and the possible extension to Israel poses a serious threat to the future peace in this region.

If the administration or the U.N. selects military action against Iraq within the scope of this resolution, we must work aggressively through diplomatic channels to ensure that such action is kept separate and distinct from the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

And lastly, we must protect Iraqi civilians. We cannot diminish the serious concerns regarding the effective potential military action on that population. They have been the victims of a brutal, harsh and inhumane dictator who has not only stripped away their political liberty and free expression but also distributed to Iraqi populations economic deprivation, malnutrition, lack of medicine, and diverted billions of dollars into other programs.

If the President of the United States or the U.N. determines that we should move forward within the framework of this resolution and military action must be taken, it must be used as a last resort.

The President needs to take leadership and work with Congress to incorporate the issues I have just mentioned and come back to Congress and consult with them.

I take this vote very seriously. The men and women in the Armed Forces from Washington State may very well be called into action. Whether it be our troops at Fort Lewis, our refueling tankers flying out of Fairchild Air Force Base in Spokane, our cargo planes from McChord, our radio jammers or P-2 aircraft out of Whidbey Island, or even the men and women of the USS Abraham Lincoln who were recently in the Persian Gulf, or the thousands of men and women serving in Washington State—I hope our vote tonight with the President's multilateral effort will lead to a successful result where we would not need to use these personnel. But if we do, I know these men and women will be ready to meet the task with conviction, resolve, and professionalism.

I do not now, nor have I ever believed, that military action is our preferred method to address international conflict. But I have seen over the last 11 years, Saddam Hussein has consistently failed to live up to the 1991 ceasefire agreement, and his noncompliance is a dangerous failure that this body must address. This problem is not going away. If anything, it will grow increasingly more dangerous as Saddam Hussein increases his chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons stockpile.

There is no question that we are looking for a strong and effective response from the United Nations Security Council, and I believe this vote sends an important message to the United Nations Security Council and gives the President the domestic backing he needs to get that international support. By being serious, forceful, and resolute in expressing our dissatisfaction with Saddam Hussein for his continued noncompliance, I think we are charting the best course for an international response. We are taking action in this body tonight, and we want the international community to take action with us.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota for 30 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, in a few moments we will make one of the most fateful decisions for our country. We will decide if we authorize the President to take this Nation to war. As with every momentous debate in this Chamber, our deliberations will resonate long into the future. Few decisions will have greater consequences to the people we represent and to the future of our Nation.

Before I ask young men and women to put themselves in harm's way, I must be convinced we have exhausted every other possibility, pursued every other avenue. For me, and I believe for the people I represent, war must be the last resort.

As we debate the course this Nation will take, some facts are clear and unassailable. Saddam Hussein is a menace to the whole region of the Middle East and a vicious tyrant who harms and oppresses his own people. He has waged war against neighboring nations, and he has attacked the people of his own country. He has acquired chemical and biological weapons. He is attempting to acquire nuclear weapons and the means to deliver those weapons using ballistic missiles.

There is no question that Saddam Hussein is ignoring the will of the United Nations and that he has not honored the agreements he made following the Gulf War. Saddam Hussein is a dangerous force in the world.

I agree that we must take action. The question is, What course do we take? How do we best protect the national security of our country?

A decade ago in the gulf war, Saddam Hussein launched a surprise attack on Kuwait and we rallied a powerful international response to defeat him. Today, we debate a much different scenario. Saddam has not directly threatened his neighbors since the gulf war. In a recent threat assessment from the Central Intelligence Agency, it concludes that Iraq is not likely to initiate a chemical or biological attack on the United States. Yet the President is contemplating a preemptive invasion of Iraq with the goal of ousting Saddam Hussein and installing a new regime. Never before in the history of this Nation has the Congress voted to authorize a preemptive attack on a country that has not first attacked us or our allies.

Let me be clear. I do not oppose the use of force against this lawless and dangerous tyrant, but I cannot support the resolution before us as it stands. It is too broad and open-ended, and I do not believe it is in the national security interest of the United States. In my judgment, an invasion of Iraq at this time would make the United States less secure rather than more secure. It would make a dangerous world even more dangerous.

First, we have unfinished business with the terrorists of al-Qaeda. For the past year we have all agreed that combating al-Qaeda was our first priority. News reports just this morning warned us of the danger of renewed terrorist attacks against our country, organized and orchestrated by al-Qaeda. I believe defeating the terrorists who launched the attacks on the United States last September 11 must be our first priority before we launch a new war on a new front. Yet today the President asks us to take action against Iraq as a first priority. I believe that has the priority wrong.

Second, a unilateral invasion could prompt the very attack we seek to preempt. In just the last few days, the CIA has reported that there is a very low probability Saddam Hussein would launch a biological or chemical attack against the United States or our interests in the region. However, if we launch a unilateral invasion, the risk rises dramatically that a desperate Saddam would use biological and chemical weapons.

Brent Scowcroft, National Security Adviser to former President Bush, wrote that in the wake of an invasion:

Saddam would be likely to conclude he had nothing left to lose, leading him to unleash whatever weapons of mass destruction he possesses.

Third, an invasion of Iraq for the purposes of regime change would necessitate a march on Baghdad. Such a course would expose our forces on the ground to serious risks in hand-to-hand, street-by-street urban warfare in a foreign capital. We would lose much of our advantage in superior airpower and technology. The military and civilian casualties could be substantial.

The former Commander in Chief of the U.S. Central Command, retired Marine Corps General Joseph Hoar, testified before Congress:

In urban warfare you could run through battalions a day at a time. All our advantages of command and control, technology, mobility . . . are in part given up.

Those are sobering words—battalions a day at a time.

Fourth, a unilateral attack by the United States could destabilize an already volatile and dangerous region and inflame anti-American interests around the globe. An American invasion could doubtless impact the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The backlash in Arab nations could further energize and deepen anti-American sentiment. Al-Qaida and other terrorist groups could gain more willing suicide bombers and raise even greater financial resources from the wealthy nations of the region.

General Wesley Clark, the former Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, put it succinctly: "If we go in unilaterally or without the full weight of the international organizations behind us, if we go in with a very sparse number of allies. . . . we're liable to super-charge recruiting for al Qaeda." Let me repeat that. "We're liable to super-charge recruiting for al Qaeda."

Fifth, if this nation asserts that preemptive military attacks are justified in this conflict, what are the consequences for other conflicts around the globe? Would India or Pakistan claim the same justification in Kashmir, raising the prospect of nuclear war in South Asia? Could China use this precedent to attack Taiwan, potentially drawing the U.S. into a major war with China? Could Russia use this justification to re-occupy parts of the former Soviet Union?

And sixth, while the financial costs of this effort should not drive this debate, we cannot ignore them. The Congressional Budget Office has just estimated that an invasion of Iraq could cost this nation $6 billion to $9 billion a month. That is a significant financial toll at any time, but particularly when we are still engaged in conflict in Afghanistan. The economic downturn makes the expense even harder to bear.

CBO estimates that the costs of an invasion plus a five-year occupation would reach some $272 billion. How will we pay for this? Does the White House propose new taxes? Or are we to assume that this will be paid for out of the Social Security trust funds? Will we go deeper and deeper into debt? Or does the President suggest cuts in key domestic programs, such as education, highways, or healthcare.

Which brings me to my final point. If our goal is to topple Saddam, what is our responsibility for the regime that follows:

Forming a new government in Iraq is far from simple. There is no clear successor to Saddam Hussein. Iraq is a country filled with competing ethnic groups and religious and tribal factions with no history of democracy.

I do not want to see our forces mired in a long occupation, in dangerous territory, in a destabilized region, subject to violence within Iraq. I do not want to see the United States responsible for the stability of Iraq, the economy of Iraq, and the political future of that nation.

I began by saying that while I do not oppose the use of force against this dictator, war must be our last resort. I believe history has important lessons for us.

Many other dangerous dictators have acquired weapons of mass destruction, or tried to. Yet we successfully contained the Soviet Union, Communist China, and North Korea and others without resorting to a pre-emptive first strike. Again and again, we have seen the scenario. A vicious dictator amasses weapons of mass destruction, threatens his neighbors, and threatens the United States.

Always in the past, we have chosen containment and deterrence—not invasion. In the past, we have contained the dictator, rallied international support to isolate him, and together with our allies carried out a disciplined, forceful and effective strategy of deterrence. We did not launch an invasion.

Even when the Soviet Union placed nuclear missiles just 90 miles off our coastline, we did not invade. Rather, President John F. Kennedy issued an ultimatum—a successful ultimatum. We demanded the removal of those missiles. We succeeded, and we brought the world back from the brink of a nuclear conflict that might have engulfed the world.

Historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., recently asked: “Why not . . . try the combination of containment and deterrence that won us the Cold War? Saddam is not likely to attack other countries. He knows that he would be playing into Bush’s hands. Retaliation would be prompt and overwhelming, and Saddam has no interest in suicide. The one situation that might induce him to use his weaponry is a U.S. attack on Iraq.”

The historical lesson is clear. There are disciplined and forceful actions we can take against dictators and aggressors short of invasion, actions that can succeed.

Clearly, if Saddam Hussein were to attack this country—or if we had strong evidence that an attack on this country were imminent—we would have every right to defend ourselves. In that case, Saddam should have no doubt that the United States would obliterate him.

If the President has new knowledge on an imminent threat from Iraq that contradicts the statement of his CIA Director just this week that an attack is unlikely, he should reveal it to this Congress. I believe in protecting our people and our allies from imminent danger. But I believe the President must present stronger evidence to the Congress and the American public before he reverses a strategy that has worked well against dictators around the world. Before this nation strikes first, strikes unilaterally, strikes pre-emptively, we must know how this threat is different from those that have come before.

Inaction and appeasement are not options. We must be prepared to use force to defend out national security interests, with or without the support of the UN. And I support the use of force against Iraq in the following circumstances.

We need no one’s permission to fight back when attacked, and force would be fully justified in the case of an Iraqi attack against this country or our allies. Force would also be justified if we were presented with clear and compelling evidence Saddam was preparing an imminent attack on this nation, or on our allies.

Additionally, the use of force would be justified if we were provided with credible evidence that Saddam was linked to the September 11th attacks on this nation or if Saddam were to provide weapons of mass destruction to terrorists.

Finally, I believe we must be prepared to use force in concert with our allies to destroy Iraq’s weapons of mass destruction if Saddam refuses to comply with UN resolutions ordering him to disarm.

I support the use of force when it is in our national security interest. I voted for the Levin amendment to authorize the use of force to disarm Saddam Hussein and affirm our right to self defense. I also voted for the Durbin amendment to authorize the use of force to destroy Iraq’s weapons of mass destruction.

For all the reasons I have cited, I believe an invasion of Iraq must be a last resort, not a first response. Instead, I believe we can and should take a phased approach.

First, we should exhaust every option available to us at the United Nations. Saddam has defied the U.N. in the past, but the growing U.S. and international pressure, and the imminent threat of military action may give the process new life. Further, our allies will be more willing to join with us if we exhaust every option at the U.N.

Next, we should make every attempt to forge the same strong coalition of nations that brought Saddam to his knees during the Gulf War. The knowledge that he is an outlaw in the eyes of the world community will send a powerful message to Saddam to comply with the U.N. resolutions he agreed to after the Gulf War.

I believe we should issue an ultimatum to Saddam to allow weapons inspections and immediately disarm. If he does not comply we can then take swift military action to force his compliance and deprive him of his weapons. But I do not believe we should authorize an invasion of Iraq tonight.

I know this vote will place me with a small minority of colleagues here, but I must vote my conscience.

I say to the President and to my colleagues that while I do not support this resolution, I know it will pass. And if the President exercises the authority it grants him to launch a unilateral invasion of Iraq, I will stand with him. I will do everything in my power to support our troops and ask for the support of our allies. Like every American on that day, I will pray for the safety of our soldiers in battle, the wisdom of our leaders, a swift victory, and the lasting peace that has so far eluded the troubled peoples of the region.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to explain why I am voting against final passage of the Lieberman amendment. I have already explained much of my reasoning during the debate on my earlier amendment, but I wanted to state my opposition in one place.

Section 4 of the Lieberman amendment authorizes the President to use the Armed Forces of the United States, one, “against the continuing threat posed by Iraq;” and, two, to “enforce all relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions regarding Iraq.”

This grant of authority under (1) above, with its threshold of “continuing threat,” is virtually the issuance of a blank check to the President to use U.S. military force, since the Findings section of the amendment already contains the statement that “Iraq poses a continuing threat to the national security of the United States.”

The only limitation on the President’s authority is found in section 4 of the amendment which requires that the President submit his determination to the Congress, within 48 hours after he exercises such authority, that further diplomatic or other peaceful means alone will not protect our national security or is not likely to lead to enforcement of all relevant Security Council Resolutions and that exercising such authority is consistent with the continuation of the United States and other countries actions against international terrorism.

This grant of authority is also unacceptable since it empowers the President to initiate the use of U.S. military force although the threat against which it is used is not imminent. International law has required that there be an imminent threat before one initiates an attack under the rubric of self defense. The resolution’s language regrettably, therefore, serves to implement the President’s desire, as expressed in his September 2002 National Security Strategy, to “adapt the concept of imminent threat to the capabilities and objectives of today’s adversaries.” This unfortunate precedent, if followed by, for example, nation A as a justification to use aggressive military force in the name of self-defense against nation B that nation A perceives poses a continuing threat to it, although the threat is not imminent, could lead to an increase in violence and aggression throughout the world. And it could have extraordinary consequences for the world if one or both of such nations possess nuclear weapons, such as India and Pakistan.

The grant of authority under (2) above, to enforce all relevant U.N. Security Council Resolutions regarding Iraq is also unacceptable. For instance, Iraq is presently in default on its obligations under relevant Security Council Resolutions that require it to return Kuwaiti archives and property. It is exceedingly unwise to provide such a broad grant of authority when the real threat that Iraq poses is because of its refusal to destroy its weapons of mass destruction and prohibited delivery systems.

The Lieberman amendment also sends the wrong message to the United Nations. It contradicts the thrust of the President's speech to the U.N. General Assembly on September 12 when he said "We will work with the U.N. Security Council for the necessary resolutions" and "We want the United Nations to be effective, and respectful, and successful." That is so because, at the same time that Secretary of State Powell is trying to negotiate with the U.N. Security Council for the very resolution that the President said he wants, the Congress would be vesting extraordinary authority in the President of the United States to "go it alone," to use U.S. military force whether or not the Security Council authorizes Members States to use military force to enforce its resolutions. By telling the Security Council, if you don't act, we will, we are letting them off the hook. We should, instead, as we did at the time of the Gulf War, be putting all of our focus on having the Security Council adopt the requisite resolution and committing forces to implement it. We should be working to unite the world community, not divide it.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, the Lieberman amendment compounds all of these problems by authorizing the use of U.S. military force at this time unilaterally, i.e., without U.N. Security Council authorization. The unilateral, go-it-alone use of U.S. military force carries with it all of the risks that could be avoided or, at least, reduced by acting multilaterally, i.e., with the strength and world-wide political acceptance that flows from U.N. authorization. If we act unilaterally, will we be able to secure the use of airbases, supply bases, and overflight rights that we need; will there be a reduction in the international support we are receiving for the war on terrorism; will it destabilize an already volatile region and undermine governments such as Jordan and Pakistan; will Saddam Hussein and his generals be more likely to use weapons of mass destruction against our forces and other nations in the region; will we be undercutting efforts to get other nations to help us with the expensive, lengthy task of stabilizing a post-Saddam Iraq? These are serious short- and long-term risks that will be exacerbated if we act unilaterally rather than multilaterally.

Accordingly, and for all of these reasons, I will cast my vote against final passage of the Lieberman amendment.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 4856, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the question now occurs on agreeing to amendment No. 4856, as modified.

The amendment (No. 4856), as modified, was agreed to.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, in 1991, just prior to the Persian Gulf war, I was the author of legislation that would have allowed one parent of a dual military couple to receive a waiver from deployment to areas where combat is imminent.

I remain very concerned about this issue and fear that if the President decides to use force against Iraq, minor children may face a situation in which both parents are deployed. The Military Family Resource Center estimates that there are approximately 35,000 dual military couples with children serving in the military today.

According to the Department of Defense, request for combat exceptions can be submitted at any time and military personnel may apply for reassignment for humanitarian or compassionate reasons. However, there are no specific policies restricting both parents from being assigned to a war zone.

I hope the Senator from Virginia, the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, will join me in urging the Secretary of Defense to do everything possible to see that dual military couples are not deployed concurrently to a war zone.

Mr. WARNER. I understand the Senator's concerns, and I believe that the Department of Defense is already very sensitive to this situation, as reflected in the assignment policies of the military services. I trust the Department will continue to make every reasonable effort, through existing practices and policies, to avoid situations in which both parents would be deployed to a combat zone.

I thank the Senator from California for once again focusing attention on this issue.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this is an important issue that Senator BOXER has raised and that she has been concerned about for many years; that is, when both parents of minor children are in the military, the Secretary of Defense should make every effort to ensure that both parents are not deployed in combat at the same time.

If we do indeed go to war against Iraq, this is an important issue that needs to be addressed, and I thank the Senator from California for raising it.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the resolution authorizing the use of military force against Iraq.

I support this resolution because the threat posed by the brutal dictatorship of Saddam Hussein is real, immediate, and growing.

The threat is real because Saddam possesses conventional, chemical, and biological weapons. He also is doing everything in his power to acquire the means to construct and field nuclear weapons.

The threat is real because Saddam has used his conventional and chemical weapons to attack his neighbors and his own people.

The threat is real because Saddam has openly defied the world and has made no secret of his enmity toward the United States and our allies. Saddam even attempted to assassinate a former American President.

The threat is immediate and growing because Saddam has extensive and growing ties to terrorist organizations that have either attacked the United States or declared the United States to be a legitimate target of their twisted crusade that they call "jihad."

The threat is immediate and growing because Saddam has developed the ability to deliver his poisons and pestilence by unmanned aerial vehicles that can easily be smuggled into the United States.

The threat is immediate and growing because Saddam has circumvented the sanctions regime to such an extent that he is virtually unrestrained by resources in his pursuit of weapons of mass destruction.

Let me put this in a historical context.

Following its bloody war with Iran, Hussein's Iraq was heavily in debt. While continuing to spend billions on weapons of mass destruction and long-range missiles, Saddam, in 1990, invaded and plundered Kuwait in order to help pay his bills. With that act, he made it clear that his priority was to feed the war machine which kept him in power.

In 1991, Kuwait was liberated and the Persian Gulf war ended when Saddam Hussein committed to abide by U.N. Security Council resolutions. Since then, he has broken those commitments. He ignored U.N. weapons prohibitions and ruthlessly crushed rebellions of the Shia and the Kurds.

Today, he continues to violate U.N. resolutions, the very commitments he made to save his regime. His actions continue to impose terrible hardships on his own people. After a decade of sanctions, Saddam's unwillingness to relinquish his prohibited weapons programs continues to cost his country tens of billions of dollars.

There are those who believe that a new U.N. Security Council resolution and renewed inspections are the answer. In reality, inspections will accomplish little, delay the inevitable and provide Saddam with yet more time to field additional weapons of mass destruction.

U.N. Security Council Resolutions have required much of Saddam and produced very little.

Starting in April 1991, Resolution 687 requires Iraq to declare, destroy, remove, or render harmless under U.N. or International Atomic Energy Agency supervision and not to use, develop, construct, or acquire all chemical and biological weapons, all ballistic missiles with ranges greater than 150 kilometers, and all nuclear weapons-usable material, including related material, equipment, and facilities. What has happened?

Saddam has refused to declare all parts of each WMD program, submitted several declarations as part of his aggressive efforts to deny and deceive inspectors, and ensured that certain elements of the program would remain concealed. The prohibition against developing delivery platforms with ranges greater than 150 km allowed Baghdad to research and develop shorter-range systems with applications for longer-range systems.

Additionally, the prohibition did not affect Iraqi efforts to convert full-size aircraft into unmanned aerial vehicles for use as potential WMD delivery systems with ranges far beyond 150 km.

Resolution 707 enacted in August 1991, requires Iraq to allow U.N. and International Atomic Energy Agency, IAEA, inspectors immediate and unrestricted access to any site they wish to inspect. It also demands that Iraq provide full, final, and complete disclosure of all aspects of its WMD programs; cease immediately any attempt to conceal, move, or destroy WMD-related material or equipment; allow UNSCOM and IAEA teams to use fixed-wing and helicopter flights throughout Iraq; and respond fully, completely, and promptly to any Special Commission questions or requests. What has happened?

In 1996, Saddam negotiated with the UNSCOM Executive Chairman modalities that it used to delay inspections, to restrict to four the number of inspectors allowed into any site Baghdad declared as "sensitive," and to prohibit them from visiting altogether sites regarded as sovereign. These modalities gave Iraq leverage over individual inspections. Iraq eventually allowed larger numbers of inspectors into such sites but only after time consuming negotiations at each site.

Resolution 715 adopted in October 1991, requires Iraq to submit to long-term monitoring of Iraqi WMD programs by UNSCOM and IAEA; approved detailed plans called for in United Nations Security Council Resolutions 687 and 707 for long-term monitoring.

In reality, Iraq generally accommodated U.N. monitors at declared sites but obstructed access and manipulated the monitoring process.

Beginning in March 1996, Resolution 1051 established the Iraqi export and import monitoring system. This system requires U.N. members to provide IAEA and UNSCOM with information on materials exported to Iraq that may be applicable to WMD production, and requires Iraq to report imports of all dual-use items.

In reality, Iraq is negotiating contracts for the procurement, outside of U.N. controls, of dual-use items with WMD applications. The U.N. lacks the staff needed to conduct thorough inspections of goods at Iraq's borders and to monitor imports inside Iraq.

In June 1996 the following resolutions were adopted: Resolutions 1060, 1115, 1134, 1137, 1154, 1194, and 1205. These demand that Iraq cooperate with UNSCOM and allow inspection teams immediate, unconditional, and unrestricted access to facilities for inspection and access to Iraqi officials for interviews. U.N. Security Council Resolution 1137 condemns Saddam for his refusal to allow entry into Iraq of UNSCOM officials on the grounds of their nationality and for his threats to the safety of U.N. reconnaissance aircraft.

Throughout the inspection process in Iraq, Saddam consistently sought to impede and limit UNSCOM by blocking access to numerous facilities, sanitizing sites before the arrival of inspectors and routinely attempting to deny inspectors access to requested sites and individuals. At times, Saddam would promise compliance to avoid consequences, only to renege later.

Resolution 1154 enacted in March 1998, demands that Iraq comply with UNSCOM and IAEA inspections and endorses the Secretary General's memorandum of understanding with Iraq, providing for "severe consequences" if Iraq fails to comply.

Resolution 1194 adopted in September 1998, condemns Iraq's decision to suspend cooperation with UNSCOM and the IAEA.

Resolution 1205 adopted November 1998, condemns Iraq's decision to cease cooperation with UNSCOM.

These resolutions were meaningless without Iraqi compliance. Baghdad refused to work with UNSCOM and instead negotiated with the Secretary General, whom it believed would be more sympathetic to Iraq's needs.

Finally, in December 1999, Resolution 1284 established the United Nations Monitoring, Verification, and Inspection Commission, UNMOVIC, replacing UNSCOM. The resolution demanded that Iraq allow the commission's teams immediate, unconditional, and unrestricted access to any and all aspects of Iraq's WMD programs.

Iraq repeatedly has rejected the unrestricted return of U.N. arms inspectors and claims that it has satisfied all U.N. resolutions relevant to disarmament. Compared with UNSCOM, Resolution 1284 gives the UNMOVIC chairman less authority, gives the Security Council a greater role in defining key disarmament tasks, and requires that inspectors be full-time U.N. employees.

Saddam has manipulated the U.N. before, and if permitted, he will do it again. Right now, Saddam is "shuffling the deck" to hide his prohibited items in anticipation of the return of inspectors.

I believe that inspectors will not set foot in Iraq until Baghdad is ready for them. If they were to return, they would be starting from square one in a hostile and deceitful environment.

In a June 11, 2000 article, Charles Duelfer, the former deputy executive chairman for UNSCOM, noted that, "... the attempt to disarm Iraq of its weapons of mass destruction was doomed from the start. This failure repeats the same mismatch between disarmament goals and disarmament mechanisms that frustrated efforts to disarm Germany . . ." after the First World War.

In the Versailles Treaty of 1919, the victorious allies imposed disarmament obligations upon a defeated Germany. An international organization called the Inter-Allied Control Commission was created to implement those provisions. The Germans, however, were very adept at denial and deception. Consequently, Germany was able to preserve illicit armaments and weapons production. The Germans argued that the inspectors were too demanding and acted like spies. Does this rhetoric sound familiar?

The lessons of appeasement are not intended solely for history classrooms. These lessons are to be learned and where relevant, applied. Saddam Hussein's priorities have not changed and I do not believe that they ever will, so we must act before his alliance with terror finds its way to our shores.

Much has been said about how unprecedented it would be to engage in anticipatory self defense by taking military action against Iraq. In one respect, this is true: it is a step that our country has historically tended to shy away from taking.

But "unprecedented" is not the same thing as illegal or improper. Scholars have debated the idea of anticipatory self-defense for many years, and while there is no consensus upon its exact meaning, the idea is clearly not foreign to international law.

Under article 2 of the United Nations Charter, countries may not use the "threat or use of force" in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. Article 51 of the charter also recognizes that countries have an inherent right of both individual and collective self-defense.

Reading articles 2 and 51 together, it is clear to me that the right to self-defense can arise not only in response to the "use" of force but also in response to the threat of the use of force.

That this must be the case should be clear to anyone familiar with the dangers of the modern world. At some point in the past, it might have been possible to wait until an attack actually occurs before striking back. Today, however, such a rule would clearly be unworkable, so dangerously unworkable as to imperil the inherent right of self-defense in the first place.

Today, the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction make it madness to wait until one is attacked first. These basic military realities compel us to understand the idea of self-defense in response to a threat in broader ways than before.

To paraphrase U.S. Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, the law is not a suicide pact.

The law does not require us to wait for a biological weapon such as smallpox or a genetically engineered anthrax strain to be used to kill potentially millions of Americans before we have the right to attack the would-be user.

Especially in this age of modern transportation, biological weapons know no boundaries. From 1918 to 1919, the influenza pandemic killed between 20 and 40 million people worldwide. Today's biological weapons scientists have the capacity to cause even worse mayhem, not just to any single target country, but perhaps to everyone on the planet.

We have long recognized such principles in our domestic law. A policeman, for instance, need not wait for a criminal to actually shoot at him before he can use lethal force in self-defense.

The United States has been involved in Iraq for years in attempting to enforce the many Security Council resolutions violated by Iraq. Throughout this entire period, Iraq has continually fired upon our forces, and those of our allies, with conventional weapons.

Iraq has a large and expanding biological and chemical weapons program. And he is doing everything in his power to add nuclear weapons and long-range ballistic missiles to his arsenal.

The law does not require us to wait to be attacked with the other weapons in Saddam's arsenal before completing the task the Security Council has set for ending the threat Iraq poses to international peace and security. The law does not require this, and our security, and that of other countries in the region, and around the world, does not permit it.

I will close with these final thoughts. There are those at home and abroad who criticize U.S. intent to take action. I remind them that the United States did not pick this conflict. The United States does not want this fight. Saddam Hussein forced our hand by not complying with his obligations under the 1991 cease fire. He forced our hand by not complying with U.N. resolutions. He forced our hand by building alliances with terrorists.

We do not make this decision lightly, we are very aware of the potential costs of taking action, but we are much more aware of the costs of not taking action. As said by Edmond Burke, "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is that good men do nothing."

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have decided that I will cast a vote tonight to authorize the President to use force if necessary to find and destroy any weapons of mass destruction under the control of Saddam Hussein in Iraq.

Some of my colleagues have expressed the ease with which they will vote to authorize the use of force. For me it has been very difficult.

When we cast a vote that could send our sons and daughters to war, it is deadly serious business. It requires us to ask tough questions and demand good answers.

And while I will vote to authorize the President to use force if necessary, I do so with reservation because I believe very strongly that force should be an option that is used only as a last resort, after all other diplomatic and peaceful means have been exhausted. And, if force is necessary, it ought to be carried out with a coalition of countries in whose interest it is to rid Iraq of weapons of mass destruction.

I want to stress that I would never have voted for the resolution in the form that the White House originally asked Congress to approve. That proposal asked Congress to give the President a blank check to use force, with or without the backing of other nations, not just to disarm Iraq, but also to deal with unspecified threats to American interests anywhere in the region.

However, the Joint Resolution that Congress will vote on tonight is fundamentally different from the one the President sent to us. It was narrowed substantially in scope through bipartisan negotiations.

First, this resolution focuses specifically on the threat posed by Iraq, instead of giving the President broad and unfocused authorization to take action in the region, as the Administration originally sought. Second, the resolution expresses the conviction that President Bush should continue to work through the United Nations to secure Iraq's compliance with U.N. resolutions. Third, this resolution makes it clear that the President must exhaust diplomatic and peaceful efforts before he can use force against Iraq. And fourth, this resolution protects the balance of power by requiring the President to comply with the War Powers Act.

I believe it is the right course to go to the United Nations, extract from the Security Council the tough new resolution requested by the President, and then coercively enforce that resolution with a coalition of countries who will not only bear the burden of fighting along side us if it is required, but who will also bear the expensive burden of occupation, peace keeping and nation building following any military action.

My fervent hope is that the Joint Resolution we pass tonight authorizing the President to use force if necessary to disarm Iraq will spur the United Nations Security Council to take similar action. And I hope that the action of Congress and the United Nations together will convince Saddam Hussein to allow complete and unfettered inspections and to cooperate in the elimination of any weapons of mass destruction that he still possesses.

With a backdrop of the September 11 terrorist attacks on the United States and the clear and present danger to our country of future terrorist attacks, coupled with the evidence that Saddam Hussein is aggressively trying to acquire nuclear weapons, I finally concluded that, if we err in this matter, we must err on the side of our national security interests. The stakes are too high, and the consequences too deadly to do otherwise.

The final point I will make about this resolution is that our confrontation with Iraq is dramatically different from our confrontation with any other "rogue" country. Saddam Hussein has consistently defied the terms of surrender to which he agreed at the end of the Gulf War in 1991. We know that he lied about his weapons of mass destruction and hid them from United Nations inspectors. We know that he secretly continued to produce chemical and biological agents. We know that he is still trying to acquire nuclear weapons.

I've been to the Incirlik Air Base in Turkey where American fighter pilots fly air cover over the Northern Iraq no-fly zone. I know firsthand that Iraq continues to fire on our pilots who are just doing what Saddam Hussein promised to allow under the terms of the Gulf War surrender.

I know there are some who say, "well, let's not be so hasty. There's another way, let's explore other options." But the fact is we have worked for 10 years without success to force Iraq to comply with the terms of its surrender following the Gulf War. So, to those who say let's give them more time, I say this situation is unique. Iraq has had a decade to comply, and the tyrant who runs it has demonstrated that he has no intention of complying without the threat of the use of force.

I will vote for this resolution because I think that it is important that we unite behind our President to deal with the clear and present danger that Iraq poses to our national security. But I want to point out a few concerns about aspects of this administration's foreign policy which I consider to be very troubling.

Recently the Bush administration released a new 33-page National Security Policy document that has alarmed even our closest allies because it declares that it is America's new policy to maintain overwhelming military might and to use preemptive force whenever and wherever it suits our national interests.

Few would deny that the United States has the right to go after terrorists or rogue states preemptively if we are in serious danger of being attacked by a weapon of mass destruction. So what in the world was the administration thinking when it decided to release this document at the same time that our diplomats around the world are seeking the support of the international community for action against Saddam Hussein?

In my judgment, this is an example of the Bush administration's approach to foreign policy that has largely abandoned the successful strategies we've employed for decades to weld together alliances and coalitions of our allies to tackle the threats and challenges of an unstable world.

Another issue that relates to this debate is America's role in the international effort to stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

One of the centerpieces of the debate about the danger Iraq poses for the rest of the world is that Saddam Hussein might soon possess a nuclear weapon. I acknowledge the danger that would pose for the region and the rest of the world, but I want to ask those who are experiencing seizures over that prospect: where is their concern about the larger danger posed by the spread of nuclear weapons to other countries and to terrorists?

Year after year, and time after time those who now appear most alarmed about the prospect that Iraq would possess even one nuclear weapon, are the same people who are unwilling to exert U.S. leadership in the international effort to stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

For example, President Bush has appointed John Bolton to be the Assistant Secretary of State responsible for arms control even though Bolton's stated position is that he doesn't believe in arms control. This administration, and its supporters in Congress, have demonstrated a lack of interest in making any effort to stop the spread of nuclear weapons.

They oppose the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty even though a blue-ribbon panel of the National Academies of Science recently concluded that the treaty would significantly enhance U.S. security by slowing the spread of nuclear weapons.

And this administration and its supporters want to deploy a new generation of "designer" nuclear weapons that could be used like conventional weapons. Nothing would do more to undermine international efforts to stigmatize countries that aspire to become nuclear powers.

Perhaps now the prospect of a country like Iraq acquiring one nuclear weapon will convince the Bush administration that safeguarding the nuclear weapons that exist around the world, reducing nuclear stockpiles, and stopping the proliferation of nuclear weapons to other countries and to terrorists must be among this country's top priorities.

There are somewhere in the neighborhood of 25,000–30,000 nuclear weapons in the world today. A fair number of them are not very well controlled, particularly in Russia, which has thousands of nuclear weapons in storage facilities that fall far short of American security standards. Russia also has enough highly enriched uranium and weapons-grade plutonium for 80,000 nuclear weapons. Much of it is poorly protected against theft or diversion.

One nuclear weapon in the wrong hands will make the devastating tragedy of 9/11 seem like a small incident by comparison. That is why this issue is so critical, and it is why I raise it now to point out the inconsistency of those who are pushing so hard to use force against Iraq but who are so unwilling to exhibit any muscle in dealing with the broader and potentially more devastating problem of the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

So I will vote for this Joint Resolution because I am convinced it is time for the United States to assume leadership in the effort to disarm Saddam Hussein and make Iraq live up to the commitments it made after the Gulf War. But I hope that President Bush will help prevent further Iraqs by stepping forward and exerting US leadership in the international effort to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I am here to speak in support of the resolution before us, which I cosponsored. I believe we must vote for this resolution not because we want war, but because the national security of our country requires action. The prospect of using force to protect our security is the most difficult decision a Nation must ever make.

We all agree that this is not an easy decision. It carries many risks. If force proves necessary, it will also carry costs, certainly in resources, and perhaps in lives. After careful consideration, I believe that the risks of inaction are far greater than the risks of action.

Saddam Hussein's regime represents a grave threat to America and our allies, including our vital ally, Israel. For more than two decades, Saddam Hussein has sought weapons of mass destruction through every available means. We know that he has chemical and biological weapons. He has already used them against his neighbors and his own people, and is trying to build more. We know that he is doing everything he can to build nuclear weapons, and we know that each day he gets closer to achieving that goal.

Iraq has continued to seek nuclear weapons and develop its arsenal in defiance of the collective will of the international community, as expressed through the United Nations Security Council. It is violating the terms of the 1991 cease-fire that ended the Gulf war and as many as 16 Security Council resolutions, including 11 resolutions concerning Iraq's efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction.

By ignoring these resolutions, Saddam Hussein is undermining the credibility of the United Nations, openly violating international law, and making a mockery of the very idea of collective action that is so important to the United States and its allies.

We cannot allow Saddam Hussein to get nuclear weapons in violation of his own commitments, our commitments, and the world's commitments.

This resolution will send a clear message to Iraq and the world: America is united in its determination to eliminate forever the threat of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

The United States must do as much as possible to build a new United Nations Security Council coalition against Saddam Hussein.

Although the administration was far too slow to start this diplomatic process, squandering valuable time to bring nations to our side, I support its recent efforts to forge a new U.N. Security Council resolution to disarm Iraq.

If inspectors go back into Iraq, they should do so with parameters that are air-tight, water-tight, and Saddam-tight. They should be allowed to see what they want when they want, anytime, anywhere, without warning, and without delay.

Yet if the Security Council is prevented from supporting this new effort, then the United States must be prepared to act with as many allies as possible to address this threat.

We must achieve the central goal of disarming Iraq. Of course, the best outcome would be a peaceful resolution of this issue. No one here wants war. We all hope that Saddam Hussein meets his obligations to existing Security Council Resolutions and agrees to disarm, but after 11 years of watching Hussein play shell-games with his weapons programs, there is little reason to believe he has any intention to comply with an even tougher resolution. We cannot trust Saddam Hussein, and we would be irresponsible to do so.

That is why we must be prepared to use force, if necessary, to disarm Saddam Hussein, and eliminate Iraq's weapons of mass destruction once and for all.

Almost no one disagrees with these basic facts: that Saddam Hussein is a tyrant and a menace; that he has weapons of mass destruction and that he is doing everything in his power to get nuclear weapons; that he has supported terrorists; that he is a grave threat to the region, to vital allies like Israel, and to the United States; and that he is thwarting the will of the international community and undermining the United Nations' credibility.

Yet some question why Congress should act now to give the President the authority to act against Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction.

I believe we should act now for two reasons: first, bipartisan congressional action on a strong, unambiguous resolution, like the one before us now, will strengthen America's hand as we seek support from the Security Council and seek to enlist the cooperation of our allies.

If the administration continues its strong, if belated, diplomacy, backed by the bipartisan resolve of the Congress, I believe the United States will succeed in rallying many allies to our side.

Second, strong domestic support and a broad international coalition will make it less likely that force would need to be used. Saddam Hussein has one last chance to adhere to his obligations and disarm, and his past behavior shows that the only chance he will comply is if he is threatened with force.

Of course, there is no guarantee that he will comply even if threatened by force, but we must try.

Others argue that if even our allies support us, we should not support this resolution because confronting Iraq now would undermine the long-term fight against terrorist groups like al-Qaida. Yet, I believe that this is not an either-or choice. Our national security requires us to do both, and we can.

The resolution before us today is significantly better than the one the president initially submitted. It is not a blank check. It contains several provisions that I and many of my colleagues have long argued were required.

First, it gives the administration the authority to use all necessary means to eliminate the threat posed by Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction.

Second, it calls on the administration to do as much as possible to forge a new U.N. Security Council mandate, understanding that if new Security Council action proves impossible, the United States must be prepared to act with as many allies as will join us.

Third, it requires the administration to report to Congress on its plans to assist with Iraq's transition to democracy after Saddam Hussein is gone.

It is in America's national interest to help build an Iraq at peace with itself and its neighbors, because a democratic, tolerant and accountable Iraq will be a peaceful regional partner. Such an Iraq could serve as a model for the entire Arab world.

So far, we have not heard nearly enough from the administration about its plans for assisting the Iraqi people as they rebuild their lives and create a new, democratic government. The president has said that the U.S. will help, but he hasn't offered any details about how.

As we have learned in Afghanistan, this administration's words are not enough. This resolution will require the administration to move beyond its words and share with Congress, and the world, its concrete plans for how America will support a post-Saddam Iraq.

Finally, in taking this action, Congress must make clear that any actions against Iraq are part of a broader strategy to strengthen American security in the Middle East, and indeed around the world.

We must do more to support existing non-proliferation and disarmament programs that can help prevent access to the weapons-grade materials that tyrants like Saddam Hussein want. We must demand America's active and continuous involvement in addressing the crisis between Israel and the Palestinians, and promoting democratization throughout the Arab world. We must commit to developing a national strategy for energy security, one that would reduce our reliance on the Middle East for such critical resources.

The decision we must make now is one a nation never seeks. Yet when confronted with a danger as great as Saddam Hussein, it is a decision we must make. America's security requires nothing less.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to speak out on the issue of Iraq. This conceivably is one of the most important issues that we as a governing body will address in what remains of the 107th Congress.

Let me start by saying that Saddam Hussein is a dangerous man. As many of my colleagues have already pointed out, he has actively engaged in attacking Americans in the region. He has actively engaged in deploying chemical and biological weapons against his own people. He has participated in genocide against his own people. He has continually deceived U.N. weapons inspectors. He has failed to comply with U.N. resolutions to disarm his weapons of mass destruction. He was involved in an assassination attempt against former President George Bush senior. He has committed serious acts of aggression against his neighbors.

These are all acts of a man that cannot be trusted.

Back in 1998, the Senate passed the Iraqi Liberation Act that declared it should be the policy of the United States to seek to remove Saddam Hussein from power in Iraq and replace him with a democratic government. I supported this bill and believe that Saddam continues to be a detriment to his people. The Iraqi people deserve a chance to be free from a vicious dictator.

Our actions today go far beyond declaring Saddam a danger to his people and to the rest of the world. Our actions today will authorize the use of force in the case Saddam refuses once again to defy U.N. resolutions and disarm. Our actions today could send our sons and daughters to battle. And, our actions today, if not handled cautiously, could erupt into a conflict we as a nation are not prepared to address. This is not something we can take lightly.

Last week, a bipartisan group of Congressmen and Senators brokered an agreement with the President and produced a resolution that strikes a good balance between diplomacy and force. The resolution supports exhausting diplomatic means to disarm Saddam prior to engaging in the use of force. It also provides the President with adequate flexibility to do what needs to be done in the case that Saddam refuses to disarm. I have cosponsored this bipartisan agreement and believe that the focus of the resolution is appropriate.

I believe that a strong resolution is necessary to protect the American people from threats posed by Saddam Hussein. And while I believe we should strive to garner the support of the U.N. and our allies around the world, we must ensure that we don't limit our ability to act to protect American lives.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I have the privilege of serving in what was, for 30 years, Mark Hatfield's seat in the United States Senate. And as those who served with him know, no one is more dedicated to peace than Mark Hatfield. As I have thought about the question of going to war with Iraq, I find myself mindful of Senator Hatfield, and I am likewise committed to working for peace.

I am also very mindful of the Oregonians who have expressed to me their hopes and prayers for peace. And it is precisely because I want peace that I stand today to express my support for this resolution.

I believe in peace and diplomacy. These values have guided my service on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. And rather than an immediate declaration of war, I strongly believe that this resolution is but one step in a continuing diplomatic process.

I have no doubt that Saddam Hussein presents an imminent threat to America, our freedom and our way of life. The proof lies in Baghdad. Over the last decade we have collected a considerable body of evidence that Hussein is amassing weapons of mass destruction, weapons that he has already used on his own people.

It is only with a heavy heart that any of us can reach the solemn conclusion that our young men and women may have to risk their lives in defense of our Nation. But the heavy weight of proof moves us now to prevent the loss of more American lives.

More than a decade ago, the United States led a coalition of nations against the tyrannical regime of Saddam Hussein. The United Nations resolutions that followed Saddam's surrender required Iraq, among other things, to halt its chemical, biological and nuclear weapons programs, account for POWs from the Gulf War, and cease its support for terrorism. Since that time, Saddam Hussein has continually and flagrantly violated the U.N.'s requirements. In less than 12 years, he has defied 16 Security Council resolutions and provoked at least 30 Council statements condemning these violations. He has exploited the goodwill of the international community, oppressed his people, devastated his nation and developed weapons of mass destruction.

Today, as it was then, we are called as Americans not simply to contribute to an international coalition, but to lead it. That obligation became all the more clear when last year's terrorist attacks ushered in an era when threats are more tangible, where civilians are at risk, and where deterrence no longer works. I believe the free nations of the world will again join us in the fight against tyranny, and I still hold out hope that the danger Iraq poses can be eliminated without war.

But today, we must choose whether to allow Saddam Hussein to continue threatening the civilized world or to disarm him. I believe we must choose the latter. We will first exhaust every peaceful means in our effort, but confront him we must.

Saddam Hussein has attacked Iran, Israel, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. He recently called on the people of the Arab world to attack the United States and he is an avowed enemy of the democracy in the Middle East, Israel. He is a man who murdered his own people in chemical attacks and systematically attempted to destroy an ethnic minority in his nation. To believe that Saddam Hussein would hesitate to launch future attacks would be to turn a blind eye to a lethal mix of weapons of mass destruction and terrorists waiting to use them.

In addition to the arms we are certain he has, overwhelming evidence indicates that he continues to develop weapons of mass destruction with the full intention of using them. High level Iraqi defectors have provided similar evidence of biological and nuclear weapons programs, evidence that is substantiated by Saddam's actions. We know that he has sold $3 billion worth of oil illegally this year, money that is unaccounted for, while importing materials used in nuclear enrichment programs. All the while, he has called Iraq's nuclear scientists "the salvation of his nation."

On September 12, President Bush outlined these facts when he spoke to the United Nations. As he said then, Saddam is truly defying the U.N., not only the United States. The 16 resolutions

Iraq has violated were not issued by the U.S. Congress, but by the U.N. Security Council, the highest body of international diplomacy. While few reasonable people would disagree that Saddam Hussein is dangerous and will attack America and its allies whenever it is possible, the President was correct in seeking international support for confronting Iraq.

Diplomacy and efforts toward peace are always preferable to war. But if war is unavoidable, it is best to have the backing of the world community. Immediately following the president's call to action, international support began to increase. And the president continues to build on that support. I believe that with the passage of this resolution we will see our allies join in lending our sons and daughters in seeking a peaceful regime in Iraq.

The United Nations now has the opportunity to prove itself to be an important world body. It is incumbent upon the U.N., and especially the Security Council, to ensure that if Saddam Hussein fails to fulfill his most recent commitments to weapons inspectors, he does not do so with impunity.

I would like to conclude by telling you about a trip I made earlier this year. I traveled to Coos Bay, OR to attend the memorial service of a remarkable young man named Bryan Bertrand. Bryan was a 23-year-old Marine who gave his life for his country when his C-130 crashed into a mountain near the Afghan-Pakistan border. The memorial service program included excerpts from the last letter that Bryan had sent his parents.

In this letter he explained why he had turned down the opportunity to return to duty in the United States. "You know me," wrote the former high school athlete, "I always hated sitting on the bench."

In those words, we can find our calling as a Nation. If Saddam Hussein does not comply with United Nations resolutions and if he continues to build and stockpile weapons of mass destruction, then America can no longer sit on the bench. We must take the heavy mantle of leadership to seek a peaceful regime change. This burden rests on the President, on the Congress, but more importantly, it rests on the people of the United States. For it is the American people, 3,000 of whom died on September 11, 2001, who are Saddam's targets. We are targets because ours is a Nation that is the beacon of liberty in the world. We must never forget that, and we must never take it for granted.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the debate here in this chamber is being held in community halls, meeting places and living rooms across America and across Iowa. Many Iowans have told me in recent weeks that going to war should be the last resort for our Nation and I agree with them.

Saddam Hussein is a brutal dictator, who has brought nothing but pain and suffering to the Iraqi people and threat and instability to his neighbors throughout the Persian Gulf and the Middle East. He invaded Iran before he invaded Kuwait. He has aided and abetted the suicide bombers. He is guilty of countless crimes against humanity. He has even used chemical weapons against men, women and children in his own country. I understand the grave danger posed to America and the whole international community by weapons of mass destruction in the hands of a reckless dictator like Saddam Hussein. Since the terrorist hijackings and anthrax attacks in America last year, which wantonly took the lives of more than 3,000 people, all Americans are rightly concerned about the safety of our homeland and united in supporting the brave men and women who defend us and the cause of freedom around the world.

While there is not definite evidence of prior close collaboration between the al-Qaeda criminals who attacked our nation last year and Saddam Hussein, there is no doubt they might find common cause in attacking us and our allies at any time. Simply put: it is clear to me that the current situation in Iraq is an ongoing tragedy for the Iraqi people and an unacceptable menace for us, his neighbors, and the world. President Bush is to be commended for calling on the United Nations to confront this menace and Iraq's flagrant disregard of past Security Council Resolutions. It remains to be seen whether and how the UN Security Council will meet head-on the direct challenge posed by the continued failure of Saddam Hussein and the Government of Iraq to fully comply with 16 resolutions approved by the Council since 1991, including an ironclad requirement that Iraq destroy all of its biological and chemical weapons, dismantle its nuclear program, and submit to rigorous international inspections to verify its compliance.

But there is a right way and a wrong way to confront Saddam Hussein and to force him to relinquish all of the weapons of mass destruction at his disposal. Our policy, and certainly any fateful decision to actually go to war, must be made after careful deliberation and in full accordance with the U.S. Constitution and our Nation's laws. No President of either political party should be allowed to take our nation into war like the one that is now possible solely on his or her own authority. That is why last July Senator SPECTER and I were the first members of the Senate to introduce bipartisan legislation to require the Congress to debate and vote on a resolution to require the Congress to debate and vote on a resolution authorizing the use of force by American armed forces against Iraq before the President issued such an order. I think the President was right to provide additional information to the Congress and the American people and to put this issue before the Congress with the draft resolution of three weeks ago.

In my view, that first draft amounted to a blank check for the President to go to war with Iraq and other countries in the region, whenever he saw fit, and regardless of whether we had the backing of our allies inside and outside the region or in the international community. I have said that I could not have supported that resolution. It was too broad, too unqualified, and too far-reaching. I am glad that since then Republican and Democratic Senators across the political spectrum have recognized the need to narrow and improve upon the President's initial request. Senators BIDEN and LEVIN, Chairmen of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Armed Services Committee respectively, held essential hearings and formulated thoughtful legislative proposals. Their work reaffirms that the focus of U.S. policy should be to secure the disarmament of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and the establishment of a new, effective international inspections regime to enforce that policy. Their careful approach also underscores the urgency and importance of maximizing our diplomatic efforts to secure the strongest possible U.N. Security Council resolution to force Saddam Hussein to relinquish his pursuit of weapons of mass destruction once and for all.

I also took to heart the President's statement in his address to the nation Monday night in which he said that the pending congressional resolution giving him the right to use force if necessary, "does not mean that military action is imminent or unavoidable." That statement is consistent with the approach I believe in, which can maximize the strength of our coalition and the success of our policy. Accordingly, at this point in time, I believe the President and the Congress should be united and focused like a laser on getting the strongest possible, enforceable resolution through the U.N. Security Council. That is why I will vote for the Levin resolution and why I ultimately will vote for the Lieberman resolution, too, if that is the final choice. But I want to be very clear that in voting for these resolutions, this Senator is not voting for immediate war with Iraq. I am voting for them in order to give the President and Secretary of State Powell the maximum leverage to persuade the UN Security Council to promptly approve a new, tough resolution that requires Iraq to immediately allow unconditional, unfettered inspections designed to secure the complete disarmament of Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction. There should be clear consequences that follow from his failure to comply. And the UN inspectors should be given enough time to complete their work and to determine whether Iraq can be disarmed short of going to war.

I am concerned that if we immediately move to unilateral U.S. military action or in concert with only our British allies we will weaken our coalition efforts to wage and win the international fight against terrorism. This would also undermine international respect for the rule of law and the multilateral problem-solving institutions that America helped to create and which have served as the foundation for principled U.S. leadership in the world for 50 years and more. Indeed, I am concerned that precipitous U.S. military action against Iraq could result in our nation and world becoming less rather than more stable and secure. Under the terms of these resolutions, the President will be required to report to the Congress every 60 days on on-going diplomatic efforts at the UN Security Council and elsewhere to establish a tough new inspections regime and to force Saddam Hussein to destroy his weapons of mass destruction. At that time, we will have the opportunity to examine the issues again. Nobody knows for certain at this time, including the President of the United States, how best to compel Iraq to get rid of all of its weapons of mass destruction. But we do know, we all agree, that war must be a last resort, not a first response. We must work with the international community as much as possible to find new and enforceable means to deal with the Iraqi danger in ways that make this a safe world.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, the resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq is before us.

We are being asked to decide some fundamental questions about the world in which we live. But more significantly, we are being asked to decide what kind of world we choose for our children.

Essentially, the question is this: Is the world going to be safer today, tomorrow and in the years ahead if the United States leads an effort to rid the world of not only Iraqi weapons of mass destruction, but of a ruthless terrorist-supporting despot as well?

Here is what we have learned.

There is agreement that Saddam Hussein is amassing weapons of mass destruction—chemical, biological, and even nuclear—but some continue to naively believe that diplomatic initiatives and weapon inspections must be given a chance to succeed. There is consensus that Iraq is a state sponsor of terrorism, but some believe that America should not act alone against Iraq and that an attack on Iraq will detract from our ongoing pursuit of al-Qaida. There is concurrence that Saddam Hussein is a mass murderer of Iraqi, Kurdish, Kuwaiti and Iranian men, women, and children, but some believe that Iraq poses no immediate threat to the American people or those in Saddam's backyard, including our allies.

My views on this issue could not be more clear: Our Commander in Chief has requested the authority to use force against Iraq to "defend the national security of the United States against the continuing threat posed by Iraq" and Congress must authorize it and must do so now.

Nine days after the al-Qaida attacks on our soil, President Bush promised Congress and the world that America would bring the war on terrorism to the terrorists wherever they may hide. He intends to do just that in Iraq. This Congress and our entire nation stood as one with President Bush following the September 11th attacks. A year later, we must continue to stand behind his outstanding leadership in combating terrorism around the globe. This war on terrorism will not end—it must not end—until terrorists and their supporters are destroyed.

Let me say to my colleagues who suggest that diplomatic initiatives and weapon inspections can prevent the coming conflict with Iraq to look at recent history. Saddam Hussein has violated each and every one of the 16 U.N. Security Council Resolutions pertaining to Iraq. His armed forces continue to fire on American and coalition aircraft in the no-fly zone. Al-Qaida terrorists continue to leave footprints on Iraqi soil. And Saddam Hussein and his henchmen continue to make billions of dollars by exploiting the U.N.'s oil for food program and through other illicit activities.

Although the regime recently proved that it can fool some embarrassingly naive visiting American lawmakers into believing its empty assurances of cooperation and compliance, they are not duping this Senator—or the President.

More importantly, the American people will not follow the lead of these modern-day Neville Chamberlains and allow the United States to be played for a fool. For it is only a fool who does not learn from past mistakes, and the world has ten years of Iraqi lies from which to learn. Speaking before the United Nations General Assembly a day after the anniversary of the September 11th attacks, President Bush challenged the United Nations to maintain its relevancy in a world challenged by terror:

Iraq has answered a decade of U.N. demands with a decade of defiance. . . . [America] will work with the U.N. Security Council to meet our common challenge. If Iraq's regime defies us again, the world must move deliberately, decisively to hold Iraq to account. We will work with the U.N. Security Council for the necessary resolutions.

The fact is that President Bush is giving the United Nations and the international community a final chance to disarm Saddam Hussein through diplomatic means. But under no illusions of Saddam Hussein's violent and irrational character, the President has made clear that if reason fails, force will prevail. I am reminded of President Franklin Roosevelt's insights into Nazi Germany and Adolph Hitler: "No man can tame a tiger into a kitten by stroking it. There can be no appeasement with ruthlessness. There can be no reasoning with an incendiary bomb."

Unfortunately, some of my colleagues seem to ignore this indisputable truth—and the fact that America is at war against global terrorists. Former Vice President Al Gore's recent attack on the President for his conduct of the war was ill-timed and ill-advised. A self proclaimed hawk, Mr. Gore alleged in a recent speech that in a single year, President Bush "squandered the international outpouring of sympathy, goodwill, and solidarity that followed the attacks of September 11th and converted it into anger and apprehension aimed much more at the United States than at the terrorist network. . . ." This is utter nonsense, and the American people are right to expect more from a former national leader.

Mr. Gore seems to have forgotten that in a single year the Bush administration liberated the people of Afghanistan from oppressive Taliban rule, destroyed and disrupted al-Qaida operations in South Asia and throughout the world, and bolstered homeland defense for the American people. If Mr. Gore belittles the victory in Afghanistan—against what he describes as a "fifth rate military power"—why was it that his own administration failed to take decisive action to topple the Taliban and al-Qaida? One might surmise that they were too busy "feeling pain" to inflict any.

Mr. Gore's characterization of the pre-emptive use of force to prevent terrorist attacks as "a troubling new element" of U.S. foreign policy is similarly misguided. In the post-September 11th world, the Bush doctrine of pre-emption makes plain old common sense. Who among us disagrees that terrorists should be destroyed before they have a chance to again bring death and destruction on our family, friends, or neighbors? What do we say to the victims of a terrorist attack that we could have prevented—sorry, but Moscow, Paris, or Beijing objected to pre-emptive action?

The fact is that America has the right and the responsibility to protect and defend its citizens against terrorism—be it from al-Qaida terrorists or weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

Let me also dispel the myth that military action against Iraq will detract from ongoing operations against al-Qaida. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld testified before Congress last month that "... Iraq is part of the global war on terror. Stopping terrorist regimes from acquiring weapons of mass destruction is a key objective of that war. And we can fight all elements of the global war on terrorism simultaneously."

We have no choice but to fight these threats simultaneously. Our nation is at war. Given Saddam Hussein's use of chemical and biological weapons against his own people and his neighbors, it is reckless to dismiss the immediacy of the threats posed by his regime to the United States. We already know that he is a mass murderer and that he is armed and dangerous—to treat him otherwise is folly.

Saddam Hussein is also a danger to the region. Those nations reluctant to confront him would be wise to take note of the British Government's assessment that Iraq is capable of deploying chemical and biological weapons within 45 minutes.

With Fort Campbell and the 101st Airborne Division in Kentucky, I understand firsthand what risks are posed to our military personnel by an attack on Iraq. Having fired the opening shots of Operation Desert Storm more than a decade ago, the Screaming Eagles are no strangers to that country. They—and the Special Forces soldiers of the 5th Group and the Night Stalkers of Task Force 160—are professionals, the best of best. America is fortunate to have such dedicated patriots serving on our front lines. We can be secure in the knowledge that if these troops return to the region, they will answer the call with the same determination and dedication as they did in 1991.

Let me conclude by saying that we did not ask for this war on terrorism. But we will fight it and win it—on our terms and conditions.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I have come to the floor to state that, after much deliberation, I have decided to vote for the resolution introduced by Senators LIEBERMAN, WARNER, BAYH and MCCAIN.

In two prior floor statements, I have expressed my views. I serve as the senior Senator from California, representing 35 million people. That is a formidable task. People have weighed in by the tens of thousands. If I were just to cast a representative vote based on those who have voiced their opinions with my office—and with no other factors—I would have to vote against this resolution. But as a member of the Intelligence Committee, as someone who has read and discussed and studied the history of Iraq, the record of obfuscation and the terror Saddam Hussein has sown, one comes to the conclusion that he remains a consequential threat.

Although the ties between Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida are tenuous, there should be no question that his entire government is forged and held together by terror: The terror of secret police in station wagons on street corners watching; The terror forged through assassinations and brutal murders of anyone who disagrees with him; And yes even of his own family members.

While the distance between the United States and Iraq is great, Saddam Hussein's ability to use his chemical and biological weapons against us is not constrained by geography—it can be accomplished in a number of different ways—which is what makes this threat so real and persuasive. I supported the Levin amendment, which authorized use of force pursuant to U.N. Security Council action, because it was the strongest resolution supporting a multilateral effort. I believe a multilateral effort, through the United Nations, provides a strong moral imprimatur and as such is preferable to America's taking preemptive action that could have consequences tomorrow and years after that—consequences we cannot imagine or even begin to understand today.

The original resolution sent to Congress by the President would have authorized a broad and sweeping use of force whenever or wherever he deemed necessary—literally any place on earth. It would have authorized the newly promulgated national security strategy of unilateral preemptive use of force in the defense of the nation in the war on terror. The resolution before us does not grant such a sweeping use of force. Rather, the use of force is confined to Iraq and targeted toward forcing Iraq to comply with 16 Security Council resolutions passed in the wake of the Persian Gulf war in 1991.

Most importantly, I believe the Lieberman resolution becomes a catalyst to encourage prompt, forceful and effective action by the United Nations to compel this long sought-after and much-evaded disarmament of weapons of mass destruction. Disarming Iraq under Saddam Hussein is necessary and vital to the safety and security of America, the Persian Gulf and the Middle East—let there be no doubt about this. But the decision to cast this vote does not come lightly. I continue to have serious concerns that there are those in the administration who would seek to use this authorization for a unilateral, preemptive attack against Iraq. I believe this would be a terrible mistake.

But I am reassured by statements made by the President in his address to the United Nations on September 12, which conveyed a major shift in the administration's approach—turning away from a preemptive strategy and, instead, engaging and challenging the U.N. Security Council to compel Iraq's disarmament and back this with force. I deeply believe that it is vital for the U.N. Security Council to approve a new, robust resolution requiring full and unconditional access to search for and destroy all weapons of mass destruction. Unfortunately, the Security Council has not yet taken this action. Nor do we, at this time, know if they will.

If one believes Iraq is a real threat, and I do, and if the United Nations fails to act, then the only alternative is military action led by the United States. Ironically, this authorization of use of force may well prompt the Security Council to act. Because if they do not, the United Nations becomes a paper tiger unable to enforce its mandates and unwilling to meet the challenge of this new day of danger.

For the past 11 years, Saddam Hussein has prevaricated, manipulated, deceived and violated every agreement he has made to disarm. If the past is prologue, this record means that arms inspections, alone, will not force disarmament. The great danger is a nuclear one. If Saddam Hussein achieves nuclear capability, the risk increases exponentially and the balance of power shifts radically in a deeply menacing way. As I said on this floor in earlier remarks, I believe that Saddam Hussein rules by terror and has squirreled away stores of biological and chemical weapons. He has used them on Kurdish villages and in his invasion of Iran.

Evidence indicates that he is engaged in developing nuclear weapons. However, today the best authorities I could find indicate he does not yet have nuclear capability. But this is only a question of time. And we cannot let Saddam Hussein become a nuclear power.

And, so, it is my intention to vote yes on the resolution before us. I do so with the hope that the United Nations will rise to the challenge and with the trust that the administration forge a coalition rather than go it alone. And I do so with the fervent prayer that it will not be necessary to place America's fighting forces or innocent civilians anywhere in harm's way.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, as Members of this body, there is no issue we face as grave and important as determining whether we should authorize force against Iraq that might place our men and women in uniform in mortal danger in order to protect the freedoms we cherish, and extend these freedoms to the people of Iraq, through the disarmament of a tyrant committed to harming his own people and the rest of the world. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, and as a citizen, I have given great consideration and thought to this course of action. Can I in good conscience authorize the use of force that could place someone's child, or my child, or someone's husband, wife, mother, or father in harm's way? Should the President commit troops to Iraq, American blood will certainly be shed. But, the authorization of force is recourse we must take.

For 11 years, Saddam Hussein has openly violated 16 U.N. resolutions calling on him to disarm; cease his production of weapons of mass destruction; and stop the ethnic cleansing of his own people. For 11 years, the people of Iraq have suffered. Furthermore, Saddam Hussein has made the world a much more dangerous place. His relish to produce chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons has only increased since the end of the Gulf War. Now, we have learned that he is harboring al-Qaida terrorists; strengthening his ties to al-Qaida; and financing terrorist organizations that promote suicide bomb attacks in Israel.

I am confident that the enactment of this resolution will give our President the tools he needs to bring the world community together to disarm this brutal tyrant through diplomacy. But, this resolution also gives the President authority to follow diplomacy with force, if necessary, to ensure that the threats Saddam Hussein brings to the world are neutralized.

The threat from Saddam Hussein's WMD programs is real and growing every day we fail to take action to disarm him. He has used WMD against his own people and his neighbors. We should not wonder whether he has any interest in using them against the U.S. or our allies.

As chair of the Emerging Threats and Capabilities Subcommittee, along with Senator ROBERTS, the Subcommittee held a hearing in February to investigate the status of his WMD programs since inspectors left and the threat those weapons could pose to the U.S. At that hearing, the Subcommittee was faced with the blunt findings that Saddam successfully hid weapons while U.N. inspectors were in Iraq. Moreover, there are no mechanisms in place to prohibit Iraq from ramping up its production of biological and chemical weapons, and its quest for nuclear weapons.

At the hearing, Anthony Cordesman, from the Center for Strategic and International Studies, stated Iraq admitted in 1995, "that it had produced 30,000 liters of bulk biological agents. Iraq admitted it produced anthrax, botulinum toxins, and aflatoxins." We must remember it took only a few grams of Anthrax to throw the Senate and the East Coast of the U.S. into disarray. Worse yet, Iraq admitted it had affixed these biological agents to missile warheads and bombs.

Dr. Cordesman went on to say that UNSCOM believed Iraq had produced as much as 120,000 liters of biological weapons, not the 30,000 it admitted—enough to kill millions. Furthermore, UNSCOM has been out of Iraq for 4 years, yet UNSCOM stated that Iraq could reconstitute its biological weapons program within a matter of weeks after UNSCOM's departure. Imagine the destruction that could be caused by Saddam Hussein with his unchecked inventory of hundreds of thousands of liters of biological weapons. Again, he has the capability to injure or kill millions.

The Subcommittee also received testimony that Iraq has actively rebuilt its chemical weapons programs since UNSCOM was thrown out of Iraq. UNSCOM reported to the Security Council that Iraq withheld information related to Iraq's chemical weapons program. UNSCOM uncovered only a small portion of Iraq's chemical weapons. In fact, Iraq confiscated information gathered by UNSCOM regarding Iraq's chemical weapons, so the information could not be transmitted to the Security Council. Iraq also told UNSCOM Iraq had not armed missiles with VX gas—one of the deadliest of nerve agents. Yet, in 1998, UNSCOM discovered missiles tipped with VX. Soon after, UNSCOM was told to leave Iraq and Iraq has resumed chemical weapons production. It takes only 10 milligrams of VX to kill a person. A wine bottle full of VX could kill at least 75 people. We must find out how much VX Saddam has, and destroy it.

Moreover, Saddam Hussein is devoting much of his defense budget to becoming a nuclear power. After the Gulf War, we learned from the U.N. weapons inspectors that Iraq was within 1 year of developing nuclear weapons. Prior to the war, we thought Iraq was 5 to 7 years away. Since 1998, we cannot say with any certainty that we know the status of Iraq's nuclear program. Once again, Saddam could be less than a year away from a nuclear bomb. The world must know how close he is, and he must stop his nuclear development. Once he develops a nuclear program, we will never be able to shut it down.

For these reasons, we cannot take our time in passing this resolution. We must act now. Saddam Hussein has shown, on numerous occasions, his willingness to use WMD to attack his countrymen and his neighbors. He has killed 20,000 Iraqis in 40 villages with WMD. As President Bush said two nights ago, "Saddam Hussein is a homicidal dictator who is addicted to weapons of mass destruction."

I want to read from Charles Duelfer's testimony before the Emerging Threats and Capabilities Subcommittee's hearing on Iraq's WMD programs on February 27, 2002. Mr. Duelfer was the Deputy Executive Chairman of UNSCOM. He said that it is inconceivable that Iraq did not resume its WMD programs after UNSCOM left. Mr. Duelfer said it is difficult "to imagine circumstances under which this regime would end these programs" of WMD because . . . "the regime in Baghdad will devote full resources to its weapons programs . . . This has not changed even under sanctions . . . The regime seeks to dominate the region . . . The use of force comes naturally" to Saddam Hussein.

WMD are his tools to dominate the region. If we wait to pass this resolution, Saddam will only continue to enlarge his WMD program; threaten the Middle East; and then threaten the U.S. He will never end his programs unless the world reins down on him to eliminate his tremendous capacity for killing.

This resolution is the proper tool to give the Administration a firm hand in negotiating with the world to disarm Saddam Hussein and eliminate his capacity to kill. We should pass the Lieberman-McCain Resolution immediately and overwhelmingly to show the world we are united. We must not tie the President's hands and the hands of Secretary Powell to negotiate a new Security Council Resolution that calls for the disarmament of Iraq—and the threat of force against Iraq if Saddam does not abide by the resolution. We can bring the Security Council on board if we can show them the United States stands together to disarm Saddam Hussein. If this body is divided, the U.N., and especially Saddam Hussein, will pay us no mind.

The best outcome is a new Security Council resolution that calls for unfettered inspections throughout Iraq, including Saddam's presidential palaces; the disarmament of all WMD; and the threat of force should Saddam Hussein not comply. That outcome has a better chance of becoming a reality if we pass this resolution.

The new U.N. resolution the President and Secretary Powell seek is our best chance to avoid a war. But the threat of force must be present to enforce a new resolution because Saddam only understands force. Again, Charles Duelfer testified before the Iraqis were perfectly willing to thumb their nose at UNSCOM because the U.N. had not authorized force to make Iraq comply.

Iraq's Deputy Foreign Minister, Tariq Aziz, regularly told Mr. Duelfer, "You are not General MacArthur (referring to MacArthur's occupation/disarmament of the Japanese) . . . Therefore, there are limits to what you can do." What Aziz meant was you have no authorized force; you have no army with you to make us show you what we have and where it is. A new resolution will only work if the threat of force lurks behind any Iraqi failure to obey.

This resolution is also a narrowly tailored authorization of force. It seeks peace before war to enforce past and future U.N. resolutions against Iraq. This resolution does not give the President carte blanche to use force throughout the Middle East for any reason. Force is only authorized to bring Iraq into compliance with U.N. resolutions—so that Iraq disarms its WMD; ceases production of WMD; does not threaten its neighbors, and does not repress and commit atrocities against its citizens with WMD.

This resolution correctly authorizes force for the violation of all 16 U.N.

resolutions, because Saddam's crimes against humanity should concern America as much as his WMD capabilities.

America has been a tremendous defender of human rights. But, at times, we have not always defended the victims of ruthless dictators.

In Rwanda, 800,000 Rwandans were slaughtered in 12 months, yet America did nothing to stop the ethnic cleansing. America's failure to act in Rwanda could be the lowest point in American history. We should not make the same mistake by turning a blind eye to the Kurds and Shiites Saddam has tortured for years. Any resolution to dismantle his WMD must also call for him to end ethnic cleansing in Iraq.

In 1944, two Jews who escaped Auschwitz—and revealed the horrors of concentration camps to the world—asked the U.S. War Department and the War Refugee Board to bomb train tracks leading to Auschwitz so no more Jews could be brought there. U.S. bombers were already bombing fuel dumps near Auschwitz. Yet the War Refugee Board refused this simple request. John McCloy, the head of the Refugee Board, denied the request. He stated the operation did "not warrant the use of our resources." How could saving lives not warrant the use of American resources? As a result, between 500,000 and 800,000 Jews died at Auschwitz in the final year of WWII. These lives could have been saved, but we did not make it a priority.

We shouldn't now say that human rights are not worthy of U.S. and international diplomacy. We should not say that we are unwilling to disarm a dictator who brutalizes his people. If we do, we will have failed the world, again.

Fortunately, I think this body and the American people do care about human rights. We stood up for human rights in Kosovo. We used force against a sovereign leader, Milosevic, who was committed to the genocide of ethnic Albanians. Through American force, Milosevic was removed from power and indicted for numerous war crimes. We did the right thing for an oppressed people. And, I must remind you President Clinton did not seek Congressional authorization to use force in Kosovo. Today, unlike in Kosovo, the President does seek Congressional approval for force in an effort to seek a unified American front to disarm another leader threatening his people and the world.

But, I must say, again, that force is a last option under this resolution. The resolution requires the president not to use force until he presents his determination to Congress that diplomacy is no longer an option. This resolution is not a call to arms. The President will not roll tanks into Iraq as soon as we pass the Lieberman-McCain resolution. As the President said on Monday, "War is neither desirable nor inevitable." War can be avoided.

The President will seek Security Council support and support from other allies to bring about a diplomatic answer to disarm Saddam Hussein. I have no doubt that the President's first hope is to neutralize the Iraqi threat without invading Iraq.

But, if a Security Council resolution cannot be achieved and Saddam continues to jeopardize the livelihood of Americans—or if Saddam violates any future resolution—the President should have the authority to use force. Because his most important job as Commander in Chief is to keep the American people safe from a tyrant.

In conclusion, I want to, once again, reiterate my support for the Lieberman-McCain resolution. As a cosponsor, this resolution is America's best effort to stand united to show the world, and especially Saddam Hussein, that we are committed to disarm Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, which are a clear and present danger to America and the world. Hopefully, this can be accomplished diplomatically with the world-wide support. But, this resolution also sends a clear signal that we are willing to use force to change Iraq's ways if Iraq continues to threaten the U.S.; if Iraq disobeys a new Security Council resolution; or if the President determines all diplomatic efforts have been exhausted. At that time, force may be necessary for America to defend herself. This resolution is the proper mix of diplomacy and force. As President Kennedy said, "Either alone, will fail." I hope the Senate will pass this resolution overwhelmingly to show solidarity and resolve to our friends and our enemies.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise tonight to address the important resolution pending before the Senate concerning the authority to use military force against the Republic of Iraq. I firmly believe that this resolution we are debating will strengthen the hand of President Bush and the international community in forcing Saddam Hussein to disarm and to ensure his compliance with all relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions.

I believe President Bush will do everything possible before deciding to commit U.S. military forces against Saddam Hussein's regime. The President has not decided to employ military force, nor does this resolution demand that he do so. Rather, the resolution signals to the President that Congress stands behind his decision to employ military force if Saddam Hussein fails to disarm or abide by all relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions.

When he addressed the United Nations on September 12, 2002, President Bush convincingly and accurately presented the case against Saddam Hussein and his flouting of international norms and agreements. President Bush rightly called attention to Saddam Hussein's abysmal track record on complying with the terms of disarmament he accepted at the conclusion of the Persian Gulf war. In so doing, President Bush bucked current international attitudes that would prefer that we not call attention to his regime's activities.

Ever since the conclusion of the Persian Gulf war, we have seen Saddam behave with contempt towards those countries that see value in the United Nations resolutions and that ultimately seek a peaceful and stable Middle East. For more than 10 years, the world looked the other way and ignored the problem with the hope that Saddam Hussein and his regime would go away. Regretfully, Saddam Hussein has displayed remarkable staying power and a powerful appetite for acquiring weapons of mass destruction.

I commend President Bush for seeking congressional authorization for possible military action against Iraq and for consulting with Congress on the drafting of a truly bipartisan resolution. In response to those who condemn the United States for displaying "unilateralism," President Bush took his case to the United Nations and forced the world to acknowledge the realities of the Iraqi transgressions. The President is also right to seek a United Nations Security Council resolution authorizing a return of weapons inspectors to Iraq. These inspectors must have unfettered access to suspected weapons sites in Iraq. There can be no conditions or dickerings over Iraq's national sovereignty. Saddam Hussein lost a war he initiated, he sued for peace, and he needs to accept the terms and conditions he pledged to honor. To expect anything less would be to condone his transgressions.

The President is being practical by raising the "what if" element to the debate. History has shown Saddam will go to elaborate measures to conceal and elude efforts to uncover his weapons of mass destruction capabilities and development efforts. It is only prudent that the U.S. Congress and all members of the U.N. Security Council consider authorizing measures to force Iraq's compliance with efforts to ensure disarmament. Earlier today, the House of Representatives passed this same resolution on a vote of 296 to 133, and I firmly believe that overwhelming bicameral approval of this resolution will strengthen the hand of the President in securing the strongest possible United Nations Security Council resolution.

In plain terms, the threat posed by Saddam Hussein is analogous to the threat posed by a drunk driver. The drunk driver is a threat to all on and in close proximity to the road. Behind the wheel of a rolling weapon, it is only a matter of time before the drunk driver crashes into another car, kills an innocent bystander or causes immense damage to someone's personal property. Saddam is this drunk driver careening along the road, a threat to all those innocents who have the misfortune to cross his path. It is time to get Saddam off the road before he can kill or injure innocents who cross his path.

For those who are critical of discussion or references to "regime change," I call to your attention section 3 of the Iraq Liberation Act of 1998, P.L. 105-338. Section 3 of the act states: "It should be the policy of the United States to support efforts to remove the regime headed by Saddam Hussein from power in Iraq and to promote the emergence of a democratic government to replace that regime." Through this provision, Congress has already expressed its views on this subject. I applaud the efforts of the Bush administration to engage Iraqi opponents of Saddam Hussein and to work with these groups to provide a democratic alternative to this tyrant.

The United States has a strong record of restoring order and cultivating democracy in post-conflict regions of the globe. Examples such as post-World War II Germany and Japan are stellar illustrations of how the U.S. has worked to better defeated nations that strayed from the norms and rules of acceptable international behavior. In addition, unlike Afghanistan, Iraq is a wealthy nation with natural resources, an educated populace and a middle class—all elements that will bolster the chances of democracy thriving in this country. There is no reason to expect that with a concerted effort by the U.S. and other democratic nations that Iraq cannot join Israel as the only other Middle Eastern democracy.

But perhaps most important, benign neglect is not morally acceptable. Looking the other way will not and cannot improve the situation in Iraq and the threat Saddam Hussein poses to the world. There is a parallel between today's situation and the situation that confronted the civilized Western World of the 1930s. In that era, democratic leaders sought to appease the ambitions of Adolph Hitler and the Third Reich. World War II, the Holocaust and millions of military and civilian casualties are the outcome of that deferral of action.

President Bush's effort to compel compliance with applicable U.N. Security Council resolutions is our best chance for peaceful disarmament. Not one speaker here in the Senate has indicated that the status quo is acceptable or reasonable. It is painfully clear that one way or another we—preferably the U.S. in concert with our allies and the support of the United Nations—must deal with Saddam and his threat to our interests, our allies' interests, the stability of the Middle East and the interests of the civilized world.

In conclusion, given the events of September 11th, given the past transgressions of Saddam Hussein, and given the threat posed to the world by his weapons of mass destruction programs, it is imperative that we provide President Bush with the strongest hand possible to seek compliance with all applicable U.N. Security Council resolutions. The attacks of September 11th and the fateful decisions not taken in the 1930s illustrate that there is a cost to not taking corrective action in a prompt and decisive fashion.

It is my sincere hope that this resolution will rally the United Nations Security Council to draft a strong resolution forcing the disarmament of Saddam Hussein and his regime of terror. If the U.N. fails to act, the U.S. must do what is in the best interest of our national security interests and disarm Saddam Hussein. Today represents our best opportunity for peaceful disarmament on our terms and according to standards established by the U.N. and other civilized nations. To do or expect anything less is to shirk our moral obligation to meet the national security obligations of our country.

It is for this reason that I will vote in favor of the bipartisan resolution which is before us now.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, we have a dilemma where we recognize that one individual, who has repeatedly defied the will of the international community, almost certainly has control over a concentration of weapons of mass destruction.

We have already seen this individual's willingness to use these weapons against his own people and against Iranian forces during the Iran-Iraq war.

So the question is, is it inevitable that sooner or later Saddam Hussein will again use weapons of mass destruction, and if so, against whom?

There is concern that if the United States and her allies use force against Iraq, Saddam will attempt to use his weapons of mass destruction in order to remain in power. It is a legitimate concern and one that must not be taken lightly.

But I ask my colleagues, if we are hesitant now, how hesitant will we be when Saddam Hussein possesses a nuclear capability? And what will Saddam do when he knows we are unwilling to take action?

We have seen Saddam's willingness to invade his neighbors—Iran and Kuwait. How much farther would Saddam have gone had he not been stopped by U.S.-led coalition forces?

In 1981, Israeli aircraft destroyed an Iraqi military reactor capable of producing nuclear weapons in a surprise, preemptive strike. Israel faced tremendous criticism from the world, but a decade later, during the gulf war, allied forces did not face a nuclear weapon capability from Iraq.

Last month, Secretary Rumsfeld testified before the Senate Armed Forces

Committee that prior to Operation Desert Storm, the best intelligence estimates were that Iraq was at least 5 to 7 years away from having nuclear weapons. Yet, when coalition forces entered Iraq, we found that Iraq was 6 months to one year away, not 5 to 7 years.

How close is Saddam today from acquiring nuclear weapons capability? We don't know. We have not been able to place weapons inspectors in Iraq since 1998. Recent reports indicate one to five years, but just like 1991, we don't know for sure.

We do know that Saddam Hussein has developed weapons of mass destruction—weapons such as anthrax, VX, sarin and mustard gas. Are these weapons a country would use to defend itself? Or are these the weapons of an aggressor that would go to whatever means necessary to prevail?

And let's not forget about the threat of proliferation—the threat of Saddam sharing these weapons with like minded terrorist organizations who would not hesitate to use them against the United States and our allies.

Had we known in advance the tragic events of September 11, 2001, there is no doubt that the United States would have taken preemptive action against the al-Qaida terrorist network.

Every month, every year that Saddam Hussein remains in defiance of U.N. Security Council resolutions, we face an even larger, more deadly threat to the security of this great nation. As the President has said, to ignore these threats is to encourage them.

I am hopeful that the use of military action will not be necessary. That Saddam Hussein will fulfill the requirements of the United Nations Security Council. That he will allow full and unobstructed access to U.N. weapons inspectors to destroy all of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. But past history does not give much cause for hope.

In the 11 years since the Persian Gulf War, Saddam Hussein has blatantly ignored 16 U.N. Security Council Resolutions calling for the total destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. Eleven years; 16 Resolutions.

This is not a game. We are currently in a limited war with Iraq. So far in 2002, Iraq has fired on Allied fighter planes 409 times, 14 times this past weekend alone. Iraqi forces have fired anti-aircraft artillery 1,000 times, launched 600 rockets and fired nearly 60 surface-to-air missiles. Since Iraq set a letter accepting the return of weapons inspectors on September 16, they have fired on Allied forces 70 times.

The time for appeasement is over. We have seen the policy of appeasement prove ineffectual in the past. The League of Nations was unable to stop Germany from rearming itself and threatening her neighbors. Its policy of appeasement only served to advance Hitler's ambitions.

The United Nations now finds itself in a similar situation. It can choose to either enforce its own resolutions passed by the Security Council, or find itself irrelevant in the view of the world.

The U.N. Security Council is expected to soon take up its 17th resolution regarding Iraq. They deserve to hear, not just from the President of the United States, but the Congress of the United States as well.

We can wait. We can react after the fact. But at what point do we act? When do we recognize that Saddam is a threat, that he does train al-Qaida, that he does fund the terrorists? At a certain point in time, we have to face reality.

What if we left this session of the Congress without authorizing the President to take the appropriate action needed to defend the national security of the United States against the threat posed by Iraq?

How would we feel if—God forbid—Saddam was to take action and take American lives? We would feel we had been derelict in our obligation.

We have an obligation to provide for the security of the people of the United States. Do we follow a policy of appeasement?

Allowing Saddam Hussein to continue to build his weapons of mass destruction?

To continue to play a cat and mouse game of allowing weapons inspectors in, only to place conditions on their actions?

To continue to defy the international community, without fear of reprisal?

To take the chance that those terrorist networks that Saddam supports will not take action against the United States—with Saddam's weapons of mass destruction?

It is oil that built Iraq and it is oil dollars that keep Saddam in power.

Oil dollars fund the weapons, the research, and the training camps for terrorists that give Saddam a global reach.

Do we continue to import hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil from Iraq each day? In September 2002, it is estimated the U.S. imported 550,000 barrels a day. In September of 2001, we imported 1.2 million barrels a day—and broke an 11 year record.

The GAO reports Saddam received $6.6 billion in illegal revenue through smuggled oil since 1997, $1.5 billion in 2001 alone.

The number of vessels smuggling oil has dramatically risen in the past few months. In June through August, the Multi-national Interception Force boarded 297 vessels—nearly 100 per month—with 225,000 barrels of oil. Prior to that, the boarded an average of 12 vessels per month.

This is the Iraqi oil that powers our economy, fuels our school buses, and provides jet fuel for our fighters.

No longer should Iraq count on the United States to fund its regime.

We must pass an energy bill that helps reduce our dangerous dependence on Iraq. America must not be held victim to the whims of Saudi kings and Middle Eastern dictators.

We have an obligation to the American people. We have an obligation to send a strong, unified voice to the United Nations—Congress and the President, hand in hand—that it is time to stop appeasing Saddam.

It is time to enforce the multitude of resolutions already passed and it is time to remove the deadly threat posed by Saddam Hussein.

And if the United Nations is not willing to enforce its own resolutions, if the United Nations is not willing to make itself relevant, then the United States must not be afraid to stand up, to ensure that the national security of the United States is not endangered by the actions of Saddam Hussein.

I support this resolution. It is time to send a clear message to Saddam that we will no longer stand by while he develops these weapons that threaten the stability of the region, while he continues to defy the will of the international community, and while he poses a threat to the national security of the United States.

We cannot afford the risks of inaction. Not after the lessons we have learned from September 11.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise today as the Mother of two sons as well as a proud member of this body.

I have come to my decision on this grave matter after going to every length to gather as much information as I could, then weighing it carefully with the general sentiment in my state that we should be very thoughtful. My constituents want us to consider the consequences of war.

I have asked the same questions of the President and his national security team that my constituents asked me. I understand that there are no easy choices when confronting a menace like Saddam Hussein. I have decided to support the Lieberman-Bayh resolution because I believe it gives the President the authority to act with military force if necessary while holding him accountable for a preferred, peaceful solution.

I look at my sons every day and wonder what kind of a world we are creating for them. I am sad that September 11, 2001 has forever changed our perspective on their future and ours. I regret that I cannot be sure that my boys will always be safe from terrorism. But, I am ever more resolved that we have a responsibility to eliminate the Saddam Husseins and Osama bin Ladens of the world. These are people who bear an irrational hatred toward America and the liberty and justice that we stand for. They have converted that hatred into weapons stockpiles and terrorist networks that threaten our way of life. We cannot stand idly by while they gain strength and underestimate our resolve.

Today, I make a difficult choice. I choose to give our President the authority to take military action against Iraq if necessary because I believe him when he says he does not want to go to war. I take our President at his word that disarming Saddam Hussein peacefully is his first choice. I support the notion that a unified Congress sends a strong message to our allies and gives our Secretary of State more leverage as he negotiates a new and tougher U.N. resolution that mandates weapons inspections in Iraq with military consequences if Saddam resists.

Saddam Hussein is a ruthless dictator. He has set himself apart from dictators of the past by using biological weapons against his own people. He has used them before and I don't want to be left with regret if he were to use them against our military or diplomatic personnel overseas, or even our allies. Our objective must be to disarm him before he can unleash his arsenal of chemical and biological weapons or before he can complete work on a nuclear weapon.

The time has come to no longer abide the threat that Saddam Hussein brings to everything that is good in this world. The time has come to eliminate his tools of destruction. Whether we do it alone or with the support of our allies, there can be no question that disarmament of Iraq cannot happen without the significant involvement, in fact the leadership, of the United States.

So I have concluded that Saddam Hussein understands only one kind of communication. A strongly worded U.N. resolution with the solid military backing of the Security Council may change his mind about cooperating. If it doesn't, he must know that his evil and treachery will have consequences.

Today I believe that the risk of doing nothing outweighs the risk of taking action. President Bush has pledged to me and the nation that he will exhaust a peaceful solution before resorting to a military solution. And I intend to hold him to his word.

I vote for this resolution with a heavy heart but also with the knowledge that we can't have it both ways. We cannot wish terrorism away without taking the necessary steps to ensure that our country, and certainly our children, are safe and free.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we face no more serious decision in our democracy than whether to go to war. America's values and interests are served best if war is a last resort. I do not believe America should go to war against Iraq unless and until other reasonable alternatives are exhausted, and I will vote against this resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq.

Too often in this debate, we have failed to address the real effects of unilateral war with Iraq. The more we debate the war, the more we learn of the danger of going to war alone, the danger that it will cause to our urgent war against al-Qaida and terrorism, the danger that Saddam may be provoked into using his weapons of mass destruction against us or against Israel, the danger that allies we need will refuse to support us on other major challenges in the years ahead, and the dangerous new instability that could be caused in that volatile region if we go to war alone.

Because the threat of Saddam is real, I commend President Bush for taking America's case to the United Nations. We have a better prospect of disarming Iraq with the world behind us, than with our allies on the sidelines, or even at odds with our mission.

As we approach a vote on this important question, I offer the strongest possible affirmation that good and decent people on all sides of this debate who may in the end stand on opposing sides of this decision, are equally committed to our national security.

The life and death issue of war and peace is too important to be left to politics. And I disagree with those who suggest that this fateful issue cannot or should not be contested vigorously, publicly, and all across America. When it is the people's sons and daughters who will risk and even lose their lives, then the people should hear and be heard, speak and be listened to.

But there is a difference between honest public dialogue and partisan appeals. There is a difference between questioning policy and questioning motives. There are Republicans and Democrats who support the immediate use of force, and Republicans and Democrats who have raised doubts and dissented.

In this serious time for America and many American families, no one should poison the public square by attacking the patriotism of opponents, or by assailing proponents as more interested in the cause of politics than in the merits of their cause. I reject this, as should we all.

Let me say it plainly: I not only concede, but I am convinced that President Bush believes genuinely in the course he urges upon us. And let me say with the same plainness: Those who agree with that course have an equal obligation—to resist any temptation to convert patriotism into politics. It is possible to love America while concluding that it is not now wise to go to war. The standard that should guide us is especially clear when lives are on the line: We must ask what is right for country and not party.

That is the true spirit of September 11, not unthinking unanimity, but a clear-minded unity in or determination to defeat terrorism, to defend our values and the value of life itself.

Just a year ago, the American people and the Congress rallied behind the President and our Armed Forces as we went to war in Afghanistan. al-Qaida and the Taliban protectors who gave them sanctuary in Afghanistan posed a clear, present and continuing danger. The need to destroy al-Qaida was urgent and undeniable.

In the months that followed September 11, the Bush administration marshaled an international coalition. Today, 90 countries are enlisted in the effort, from providing troops to providing law enforcement, intelligence, and other critical support.

But I am concerned that using force against Iraq before other means are tried will sorely test both the integrity and effectiveness of the coalition. Just one year into the campaign against al-Qaida, the administration is shifting focus, resources and energy to Iraq. The change in priority is coming before we have fully eliminated the threat from al-Qaida, before we know whether Osama bin Laden is dead or alive, and before we can be assured that the fragile post-Taiban government in Afghanistan will consolidate its authority.

No one disputes that America has lasting and important interests in the Persian Gulf, or that Iraq poses a significant challenge to U.S. interests. There is no doubt that Saddam Hussein's regime is a serious danger, that he is a tyrant, and that his pursuit of lethal weapons of mass destruction cannot be tolerated. The question is not whether he should be disarmed, but how.

How can we best achieve this objective in a way that minimizes the risks to our country? How can we ignore the danger to our young men and women in uniform, to our ally Israel, to regional stability, the international community, and victory against terrorism?

There is clearly a threat from Iraq, and there is clearly a danger, but the administration has not made a convincing case that we face such an imminent threat to our national security that a unilateral American strike and an immediate war are necessary.

Nor has the administration laid out the cost in blood and treasure of this operation.

With all the talk of war, the administration has not explicitly acknowledged, let alone explained to the American people, the immense post-war commitment that will be required to create a stable Iraq.

The President's challenge to the United Nations requires a renewed effort to enforce the will of the international community to disarm Saddam. Resorting to war is not America's only or best course at this juncture. There are realistic alternatives between doing nothing and declaring unilateral or immediate war. War should be a last resort. Let us follow that course, and the world will be with us—even if, in the end, we have to move to the ultimate sanction of armed conflict.

The Bush administration says America can fight a war in Iraq without undermining our most pressing national security priority, the war against al-Qaida. But I believe it is inevitable that a war in Iraq without serious international support will weaken our effort to ensure that al-Qaida terrorists can never, never, never threaten American lives again.

Unfortunately, the threat from al-Qaida is still imminent. The Nation's armed forces and law enforcement are on constant high alert. America may have broken up the al-Qaida network in Afghanistan and scattered its operatives across many lands. But we have not broken its will to kill Americans.

As I said earlier, we still don't know the fate, the location, or the operational capacity of Osama bin Laden himself. But we do know that al-Qaida is still there, and still here in America, and will do all it can to strike at America's heart and heartland again. But we don't know when, where, or how this may happen.

On March 12, CIA Director Tenet testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee that al-Qaida remains "the most immediate and serious threat" to our country, "despite the progress we have made in Afghanistan and in disrupting the network elsewhere."

Even with the Taliban out of power, Afghanistan remains fragile. Security remains tenuous. Warlords still dominate many regions. Our reconstruction effort, which is vital to long-term stability and security, is halting and inadequate. Some al-Qaida operatives, no one knows how many, have faded into the general population. Terrorist attacks are on the rise. President Karzai, who has already survived one assassination attempt, is still struggling to solidify his hold on power. And although neighboring Pakistan has been our ally, its stability is far from certain.

We know all this, and we also know that it is an open secret in Washington that the Nation's uniformed military leadership is skeptical about the wisdom of war with Iraq. They share the concern that it may adversely affect the ongoing war against al-Qaida and the continuing effort in Afghanistan by draining resources and armed forces already stretched so thin that many Reservists have been called for a second year of duty, and record numbers of service members have been kept on active duty beyond their obligated service.

They said that spy satellites, reconnaissance aircraft and other intelligence analysts with regional or linguistic expertise would have to be reassigned.

To succeed in our global war against al-Qaida and terrorism, the United States depends on military, law enforcement, and intelligence support from many other nations. We depend on Russia and countries in the former Soviet Union that border Afghanistan for military cooperation. We depend on countries from Portugal to Pakistan to the Philippines for information about al-Qaida's plans and intentions. Because of these relationships, terrorist plots are being foiled and al-Qaida operatives are being arrested.

Support from our allies has been indispensable in the war on terrorism, and has had real results: In December 2001, Singapore officials arrested 13 members of a group with ties to al-Qaida that had planned to bomb the U.S. embassy and U.S. commercial and military targets in Singapore. Malaysia has arrested nearly 50 suspected al-Qaida terrorists since September 11th. In March 2002, a joint U.S.-Pakistani police operation arrested 29 al-Qaida suspects, believed to include Abu Zubayday, a key bin Laden deputy. In May 2002, Morocco arrested three alleged al-Qaida members in connection with a plot to attack American and British naval ships in the Straits of Gibraltar. In June, Moroccan authorities also detained Abu Zubair, nicknamed "the bear"—a top associate of Abu Zubaydah. In June 2002, Saudi Arabia arrested seven al-Qaida members on suspicion of planning terrorist attacks. One of them, a Sudanese, had allegedly been involved in a missile attack near a Saudi airbase used by U.S. forces. The United States has worked closely with Yemen to combat terrorism, and the Yemeni government recently reported that it is holding 85 suspects accused of links to al-Qaida and other militant groups.

These arrests may seem small in number. But we know only too well that only 19 al-Qaida terrorists were responsible for the murder of nearly 3000 Americans on September 11.

It is far from clear that these essential relationships, which are yielding tangible law enforcement results, will survive the strain of unilateral war with Iraq that comes before the alternatives are tried, or without the support of an international coalition.

A largely unilateral American war that is widely perceived in the Muslim world as untimely or unjust could worsen not lessen the threat of terrorism. War with Iraq before a genuine attempt at inspection and disarmament, or without genuine international support, could swell the ranks of al-Qaida sympathizers and trigger an escalation in terrorist acts. As General Clark told the Senate Armed Services Committee, it would "super-charge recruiting for al-Qaida."

General Hoar advised the Committee on September 23 that America's first and primary effort should be to defeat al-Qaida. In a September 10th article, General Clark wrote: "Unilateral U.S. action today would disrupt the war against al-Qaida." We ignore such wisdom and advice from many of the best of our military at our own peril.

We have known for many years that Saddam Hussein is seeking and developing weapons of mass destruction. Our intelligence community is deeply concerned about the acquisition of such weapons by Iran, North Korea, Libya, Syria and other nations. But information from the intelligence community over the past six months does not point to Iraq as an imminent threat to the United States or a major proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

In public hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee in March, CIA Director George Tenet described Iraq as a threat but not as a proliferator, saying that Saddam Hussein, and I quote, "is determined to thwart U.N. sanctions, press ahead with weapons of mass destruction, and resurrect the military force he had before the Gulf War." That is unacceptable, but it is also possible that it could be stopped short of war.

In recent weeks, in briefings and in hearings in the Senate Armed Services Committee, I have seen no persuasive evidence that Saddam is not today deterred from attacking U.S. interests by America's overwhelming military superiority.

I have heard no persuasive evidence that Saddam is on the threshold of acquiring the nuclear weapons he has sought for more than 20 years.

And the Administration has offered no persuasive evidence that Saddam would transfer chemical or biological weapons of mass destruction to al-Qaida or any other terrorist organization. As General Joseph Hoar, the former Commander of Central Command told the members of the Armed Services Committee, a case has not been made to connect al-Qaida and Iraq.

To the contrary, there is no clear and convincing pattern of Iraqi relations with either al-Qaida or the Taliban.

Moreover, in August, former National Security Advisor Brent Scowcroft wrote that there is "scant evidence" linking Saddam Hussein to terrorist organizations, and "even less to the September 11 attacks." He concluded that Saddam would not regard it as in his interest to risk his country or his investment in weapons of mass destruction by transferring them to terrorists who would use them and "leave Baghdad as the return address."

Some who advocate military action against Iraq assert that air strikes will do the job quickly and decisively, and that the operation will be complete in 72 hours. But there is again no persuasive evidence that air strikes alone over the course of several days will incapacitate Saddam and destroy his weapons of mass destruction. Experts have informed us that we do not have sufficient intelligence about military targets in Iraq. Saddam may well hide his most lethal weapons in mosques, schools and hospitals. If our forces attempt to strike such targets, untold numbers of Iraqi civilians could be killed.

In the gulf war, many of Saddam's soldiers quickly retreated because they did not believe the invasion of Kuwait was justified. But when Iraq's survival is at stake, it is more likely that they will fight to the end. Saddam and his military may well abandon the desert, retreat to Baghdad, and engage in urban, guerrilla warfare.

Many believe that our armed forces may need to occupy Baghdad, which has over 5 million residents. In our September 23 hearing, General Clark told the committee that we would need a large military force and a plan for urban warfare. General Hoar said that our military would have to be prepared to fight block by block in Baghdad, and that we could lose a battalion of soldiers a day in casualties. Urban fighting would, he said, look like the last brutal 15 minutes of the movie "Saving Private Ryan."

We know that the senior military leadership is concerned about the long-term consequences of an occupation. Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld testified in September that if force were used in Iraq, disarmament would take some period of time. As he said, "one would think there would have to be a military presence, undoubtedly a coalition presence or a U.N. presence, for a period of time."

In fact, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that the cost of an occupation force would be $1 billion to $4 billion a month, depending on the size of the force, and military experts have suggested that up to 200,000 peace keepers might be needed for the occupation. However, and let me emphasize this, the Congressional Budget Office concluded that current U.S. Army forces would be unable to support the needed troop rotations for a prolonged 200,000-person occupation.

I do not accept the idea that trying other alternatives is either futile or perilous—that the risks of waiting are greater than the risks of war. Indeed, in launching a war against Iraq now, the United States may precipitate the very threat that we are intent on preventing—weapons of mass destruction in the hands of terrorists. If Saddam's regime and his very survival are threatened, then his view of his interests may be profoundly altered: He may decide he has nothing to lose by using weapons of mass destruction himself or by sharing them with terrorists.

Indeed, in an October 7 letter to Senator GRAHAM, Chairman of the Senate Intelligence committee, CIA Director George Tenet stated this risk. He said, "Baghdad for now appears to be drawing a line short of conducting terrorist attacks with conventional or C.B.W. against the United States."

In discussing the scenario of a military attack, the CIA Director said, "Should Saddam conclude that a U.S.-led attack could no longer be deterred, he probably would become much less constrained in adopting terrorist actions . . . Saddam might decide that the extreme step of assisting Islamist terrorists in conducting a W.M.D. attack against the United States would be his last chance to exact vengeance by taking a large number of victims with him."

In the same letter, the CIA declassified an exchange between Senator LEVIN and a senior intelligence witness. When asked about the likelihood of Saddam using weapons of mass destruction without provocation, the intelligence witness said, "My judgment would be that the probability of him initiating an attack . . . in the foreseeable future, given the conditions we understand now, the likelihood I think would be low." When asked about the likelihood that Saddam would use weapons of mass destruction if he thought his regime was in danger, the witness said, "Pretty high, in my view."

Before the Gulf War in 1991, Secretary of State James Baker met with the Iraqis and threatened Hussein with "catastrophe" if he employed weapons of mass destruction. In that war, although Saddam launched 39 Scud missiles at Israel, he did not use the chemical or biological weapons he had.

If Saddam's regime and survival are threatened, he will have nothing to lose, and may use everything at his disposal. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has announced that instead of its forbearance in the 1991 gulf war, this time Israel will respond if attacked. If weapons of mass destruction land on Israeli soil, killing innocent civilians, the experts I have consulted believe Israel will retaliate, and possibly with nuclear weapons.

This escalation, spiraling out of control, could draw the Arab world into a regional war in which our Arab allies side with Iraq, against the United States and against Israel. And that would represent a fundamental threat to Israel, to the region, to the world economy and international order.

Nor can we rule out the possibility that Saddam would assault American force with chemical or biological weapons. Despite advances in protecting our troops, we may not yet have the capability to safeguard all of them. The Congressional General Accounting Office published a report on October 1 which clearly suggests that our forces are not adequately prepared for a chemical or biological attack, even though the Defense Department has been taking significant actions to provide such protection.

The GAO emphasizes the importance of chemical and biological defense training, the medical readiness of units to conduct operations in a contaminated environment, and the critical need for an adequate supply of required protective gear.

Our forces are already stretched thin in other ways. Our soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines are serving their country with great distinction. Just under 70,000 Reservists and National Guardsmen have been mobilized for the war against terrorism. Many reservists who were initially recalled for the war in Afghanistan have been either demobilized or extended for a second year. They are concerned about the impact a war against Iraq will have on their families and on their jobs. Many employers who are struggling in the current sagging economy are also deeply concerned about the stability of their workforce. These patriotic Americans are willing to sacrifice, but they deserve to know that all reasonable alternatives to war have been exhausted.

If we embark upon a premature or unilateral military campaign against Iraq, or a campaign only with Britain, our forces will have to serve in even greater numbers, for longer periods, and with graver risks. Our force strength will be stretched even thinner. If in the end we must go to war, the burden should be shared with allies, and an alliance is less likely if war becomes an immediate response.

Even with the major technological gains demonstrated in Afghanistan, the logistics and manpower required in a war with Iraq would be extraordinarily challenging if we could not marshal a real coalition of regional and international allies. The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Richard Myers, told the Senate Armed Services Committee two weeks ago that because of the high demand placed on some of our forces, coalition partners would be necessary to mitigate the risk of war in Iraq.

President Bush made the right decision on September 12 when he expressed America's willingness to work with the United Nations to prevent Iraq from using chemical, biological or nuclear weapons. The President's address to the General Assembly challenging the United Nations to enforce its long list of Security Council Resolutions on Iraq was powerful, and for me, it was persuasive.

The President reports important progress has been made in urging many nations to join us in insisting that Saddam Hussein's regime be held accountable. The meetings already held between the U.N. and the Iraqi government on resuming inspections reflects the new international resolve to ensure that Iraq's weapons of mass destruction are identified and destroyed. Yet, the resolution before us would allow the President to go it alone against Iraq without seeing our U.N. initiative through, and without exhausting the alternatives.

To maintain the credibility he built when he went to the U.N., the President must follow the logic of his own argument. Before we go to war, we should give the international community a chance to meet the President's challenge, to renew its resolve to disarm Saddam Hussein completely and effectively.

Some have argued that inspections have already been tried, and that they have failed. They argue that the international community has exhausted the option of inspections, and that immediate war is now justified. I disagree.

I have spoken to former inspectors and non-proliferation experts who are convinced that 7 years of inspections significantly impeded Saddam's efforts to acquire weapons of mass destruction. Indeed, they are convinced that inspections can work effectively again.

According to Rolf Ekeus, who served as the executive chairman of the U.N. Special Commission on Iraq from 1991 to 1997, inspectors ensured that not much was left of Iraq's once massive weapons programs at the time they departed.

In fact, the seven years of inspections that took place until 1998 succeeded in virtually eliminating Saddam's ability to develop a nuclear weapon in Iraq during that period. Even with Iraq's obstructions, those inspections resulted in the demolition of large quantities of chemical and biological weapons. The inspection program, before its forced termination in 1998, had accomplished far more disarmament than the gulf war itself.

President Bush acknowledged the successes of the International Atomic Energy Agency, or I.A.E.A., in thwarting Saddam's nuclear ambitions in his October 7 address to the Nation. He said, "Before being barred from Iraq in 1998, the International Atomic Energy Agency dismantled extensive nuclear weapons-related facilities, including three uranium-enrichment sites."

A CIA assessment, released to the public in October 2002, says: "Before its departure from Iraq, the IAEA made significant strides toward dismantling Iraq's nuclear weapons program and unearthing the nature and scope of Iraq's past nuclear activities."

Even the assessment of Iraq's WMD program published by the British Government to demand action in the United Nations against Iraq acknowledges the success of inspections. It says: "Despite the conduct of the Iraqi authorities towards them, both, the UN, and the IAEA Action Team have valuable records of achievement in discovering and exposing Iraq's biological weapons program and destroying very large quantities of chemical weapons stocks and missiles as well as the infrastructure for Iraq's nuclear weapons programme."

Among the U.N.'s significant achievements cited in the assessment are: The destruction of 40,000 munitions for chemical weapons, 2,610 tons of chemical precursors, and 411 tons of chemical warfare agent. The dismantling of Iraq's prime chemical weapons development production complex. The destruction of 48 Scud-type missiles, 11 mobile launchers and 56 sites, 30 warheads filled with chemical agents, and 20 conventional warheads. The destruction of the al-Hakam biological weapons facility and a range of production equipment. The removal and destruction of the infrastructure of the nuclear weapons program, including a weaponization and testing facility.

Experts on inspections advise that it would be extremely hard for Iraq to carry on an active and even secret WMD program while inspections are being conducted, especially with the inspection technology that has been developed over the last ten years. One former nuclear inspector told me that he found it hard to keep Iraqi scientists quiet about Iraq's nuclear program, once they started to talk.

Given these assessments, there is every reason to believe that unrestricted and unconditional inspections can again be effective in ensuring the destruction of weapons of mass destruction. It is an option that must be given a clear chance before going to war again.

So this should be the first aim of our policy, to get U.N. inspectors back into Iraq without conditions. I hope the Security Council will approve a new resolution requiring the Government of Iraq to accept unlimited and unconditional inspections and the destruction of any weapons of mass destruction.

The resolution should set a short timetable for the resumption of inspections. I would hope that inspections could resume, at the latest, by the end of October.

The resolution should also require the head of the U.N. inspection team to report to the Security Council every two weeks. No delaying tactics should be tolerated, and if they occur, Saddam should know that he will lose his last chance to avoid war.

The Security Council Resolution should authorize the use of force, if the inspection process is unsatisfactory. And there should be no doubt in Baghdad that the United States Congress would then be prepared to authorize force as well.

The return of inspectors with unfettered access and the ability to destroy what they find not only could remove any weapons of mass destruction from Saddam's arsenal. They could also be more effective than an immediate or unilateral war in ensuring that these deadly weapons would not fall into terrorist hands.

Before going to war again, we should seek to resume the inspections now—and set a non-negotiable demand of no obstruction, no delay, no more weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

We know that our actions against Iraq do not occur in a vacuum. The world is watching. The Administration's decisions to abandon the Kyoto Protocol on global warming, to unilaterally withdraw from the ABM Treaty, and to reject ratification of the Treaty on the International Criminal Court have left the unmistakable impression across the globe that the United States wants to write its own international rules.

In February, Secretary of State Powell testified that there was significant concern among the Europeans earlier last year about "unbridled U.S. unilateralism," because "the U.S. was going off on its own without a care for the rest of the world." Further unilateral action on our part, especially on the all-important issue of war, could trigger a new global anti-Americanism that causes peoples and governments to question our motives and actions on a wide range of issues.

We should not embark on a unilateral war, without fully considering the potentially destabilizing impact on our allies in the region.

If we insist on attacking Iraq alone without the clear support of the international community, we could inflame anti-Americanism in the predominantly Muslim countries throughout the Middle East and South Asia. In an article this month in the New York Times, an expert at the Brookings Institution wrote that regardless of our real objectives, most Arabs and Muslims will see "American imperialism" in a war with Iraq.

This expert says that a war with Iraq would "render the Middle East more . . . unstable than it is today." Middle Eastern leaders could be faced with mass street protests over a highly unpopular American strike.

Jordan's King Abdullah, who is a trusted friend of America, is deeply concerned that war will inflame the large Palestinian population and inflame Islamic views. Iraq is one of Jordan's largest trading partners, and King Abdullah is understandably concerned about a potentially devastating impact on the Jordanian economy. Some experts have suggested that King Abdullah may lose power if war breaks out. Already the Jordanian Government is working actively to discourage popular outbursts against war with Iraq.

In Egypt, President Mubarak is concerned that war with Iraq will further ignite strong Islamist sentiment.

We also need to consider the possibility that Iran would try to increase its strength and influence in Southern Iraq in a post-Saddam era. More than 50 percent of the Iraqi population is Shiite, just as in Iran, and if the Iranian Government senses a vacuum, it very well might try to increase its influence in Iraq.

The United States must clearly act to defend our national security against an imminent threat. In doing so, the President will have the full support of Congress and the American people. But when an imminent threat does not exist, and when reasonable alternatives are available, as they are now, we must use them before resorting to war.

What can be gained here is success and in the event of failure, greater credibility for an armed response, greater international support, and the prospect of victory with less loss of American life.

So what is to be lost by pursuing this policy before Congress authorizes sending young Americans into another and in this case perhaps unnecessary war?

Even the case against Saddam is, in important respects, a case against immediate or unilateral war. If Prime Minister Blair is correct in saying that Iraq can launch chemical or biological warheads in 45 minutes, what kind of sense does it make to put our soldiers in the path of that danger without exhausting every reasonable means to disarm Iraq through the United Nations?

Clearly we must halt Saddam Hussein's quest for weapons of mass destruction. Yes, we may reach the point where our only choice is conflict with like-minded allies at our side, if not in a multilateral action authorized by the Security Council. But we are not there yet.

The evidence does not take us there; events do not compel us there and both the war against terrorism and our wider interests in the region and the world summon us to a course that is sensible, graduated, and genuinely strong—not because it moves swiftly to battle, but because it moves resolutely to the objective of disarming Iraq peacefully if possible, and militarily if necessary.

In his October 7 address to the nation, President Bush said Congressional approval of a resolution authorizing the use of force does not mean that war with Iraq is "imminent or unavoidable." The President himself has not decided that our nation should go to war. Yet, Congress is being asked to authorize war now. He may decide not to use that authority. But this resolution leaves it to the President to make the decision on his own, without further recourse to Congress or to the American people.

The power to declare war is the most solemn responsibility given to Congress by the Constitution. We must not delegate that responsibility to the President in advance.

Let me close by recalling the events of an autumn of danger four decades ago. When missiles were discovered in Cuba—missiles more threatening to us than anything Saddam has today, some in the highest councils of government urged an immediate and unilateral strike. Instead the United States took its case to the United Nations, won the endorsement of the Organization of American States, and brought along even our most skeptical allies. We imposed a blockade, demanded inspection, and insisted on the removal of the missiles.

When an earlier President outlined that choice to the American people and the world, he spoke of it in realistic terms not with a sense that the first step would necessarily be the final step, but with a resolve that it must be tried.

As he said then, "Action is required . . . and these actions [now] may only be the beginning. We will not prematurely or unnecessarily risk the costs of . . . war—but neither will we shrink from that risk at any time it must be faced."

In 2002, we too can and must be both resolute and measured. In that way, the United States prevailed without war in the greatest confrontation of the Cold War. Now, on Iraq, let us build international support, try the United Nations, and pursue disarmament before we turn to armed conflict.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support for the pending resolution. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the Lieberman-Warner-McCain resolution because I believe it is in our national security interests to deal with the threat posed by Iraq. The world would be a far safer place without Saddam Hussein, and as long as he remains in power, he will continue to be a threat to the region, to the United States, and to his own people.

Saddam Hussein is a destabilizing force in the Middle East. A quick review of history reveals he has invaded two of his neighbors—Iran and Kuwait—causing massive destruction, killing hundreds of thousands of people, and bankrupting his country. During the gulf war, he launched ballistic missiles at civilian populations in Israel. He opposes the Middle East peace process and has provided financial rewards to the families of suicide bombers. He supports organizations engaged in terrorism and committed to the overthrow of governments within the region. It is clear that Saddam Hussein is an opponent of stability in the Middle East, and our efforts to build a lasting peace in the region is in jeopardy as long as he remains in power.

In addition to being a threat to his neighbors, Saddam Hussein is a threat to the United States and to our vital national security interests. There can be no doubt that Iraq has continued its drive to develop weapons of mass destruction and the means to deliver them. After the gulf war, Saddam Hussein agreed to open up his country to international inspectors, to destroy his weapons stockpiles, and to halt all weapons of mass destruction development programs. Despite near continual obstruction by Iraq, international weapons inspectors were able to uncover a portion of his extensive chemical and biological weapons, and gain vital information about his effort to develop nuclear weapons.

However, the weapons inspectors' progress was thwarted when Saddam Hussein forced them to leave the country in 1998. For 4 years, he has been able to pursue chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons capabilities outside the watchful eye of the international community. While Iraq has agreed to allow the weapons inspectors to return, I am skeptical that Saddam Hussein will keep his word and allow unfettered access to suspect sites. Already there are indications that the agreement under which the inspectors will return allows Iraq to forbid entrance into certain key locations. Without full and guaranteed access to all sites, this inspection regime is likely to fail and prove to be just another delaying tactic.

Saddam Hussein's possession of weapons of mass destruction is in itself a threat to the United States, but equally concerning is his ties to international terrorism. It is clear that Iraq is in violation of its obligation to renounce terrorism and to halt its support for terrorist organizations. Recently, the Bush administration announced that it has evidence linking Saddam Hussein with international terrorists. A link between Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction and al-Qaida terrorists would be the gravest threat facing our Nation and would require immediate action by the United States.

Given this threat, and the fact that Iraq is in violation of 16 separate United Nations Security Council resolutions, the United States is well within its rights to act militarily to protect the safety of the American people. I disagree with those who argue our actions must be tied to prior approval by the United Nations. The defense of our Nation should not be dictated by other countries or international organizations. If necessary, the United States should be prepared to act alone.

However, I strongly support efforts to build international support prior to military action against Iraq. The support of our allies, and the international community as a whole, will increase the chances of success for our policy in Iraq and in the ongoing fight against global terrorism. One reason why I support the pending resolution is that I believe a strong vote by Congress will signal our national unity and make it more likely that the President will succeed in creating a strong international coalition.

While much of our focus has been on preparing for possible military action against Iraq, and working with the international community to resume inspections of Iraq's suspected weapons of mass destruction sites, I believe we must also begin the process of planning for a post-Saddam Hussein Iraq. As a part of this, we must begin to talk to the Iraqi people and enlist their support in the fight against Saddam Hussein. There can be no doubt that no one has suffered more from Saddam Hussein's regime than the people of Iraq.

The list of crimes Saddam Hussein has perpetrated against his own citizens is shocking. Since 1997, he has killed over 2,500 prisoners—many of whom were jailed simply for their opposition to his regime. He has repressed both the Kurds in the north and the Shiites in the south by causing environmental devastation, demolishing homes, destroying villages, and creating hundreds of thousands of internally displaced people throughout the country. In 1988 in the village of Halabja, he used chemical weapons to kill more than 5,000 innocent Iraqi civilians. And while thousands of his people starve, Saddam Hussein diverts much needed food and medicine from the U.N.'s Oil for Food Program for his own enrichment.

Given his history, the Iraqi people should no doubt welcome the end of Saddam Hussein's brutal regime. We should ask for their support in ousting Saddam by assuring them that our goal is nothing short of helping them establish a functioning, democratic society. Iraq enjoys a wealth of natural resources and a well-educated, innovative population. The Iraqi people may well thrive once they are allowed to harness the power of democracy and free markets.

I believe we can succeed in helping the Iraqi people create a better country. It will be difficult and will take a long-term commitment from the United States. But ultimately, the success of our efforts in Iraq will be judged by our ability to make sure that Saddam Hussein is not simply replaced by another dictator who will pursue weapons of mass destruction, invade his neighbors, and support global terrorism.

This vote has particular significance to me. My son, Brooks, is currently serving in the 101st Airborne. The 101st is one of the Army divisions that has been identified by military leaders as likely to prosecute the war against Iraq. I know that a vote in favor of this resolution may be a vote to send my own son to war. Given this, I do not take this vote lightly. I am very proud of my son, and of the thousands of South Dakotans serving in our Armed Forces, and I know they are prepared to do what is necessary to protect the United States.

I will vote for this resolution because I know putting a stop to Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and ending Saddam Hussein's brutal dictatorship is in our national security interests and vital to protecting the American people. While this approach is not without danger, the greatest danger of all would be in a failure of the U.S. and the world community to act in a decisive and urgent manner.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, what weapons, exactly, does Saddam Hussein have, and what could he do with them? When we are talking about this dangerous dictator, that is not a hypothetical question. We can see what he has done already with the chemicals he has developed. We don't have to imagine; we need only extrapolate.

Saddam Hussein not only has large and growing stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons. He alone among the dictators of the world has shown a willingness to use them.

In the 1980s Iran-Iraq War, Iraqi troops repeatedly used poison gas, including mustard gas and the nerve agent sarin, against Iranian soldiers. And Saddam has repeatedly attacked Kurds in the north with chemical weapons, namely nerve agents and mustard gas, the most horrifying single attack coming in Halabja in 1988.

It is one thing to see nations accumulate dangerous weapons for purely deterrent and defensive purposes. It is another entirely to see a dictator develop such weapons and deploy them to murder opponents of his regime and wage offensive war against a neighbor.

That is why we must look with special scrutiny on Saddam's stockpiles.

When the U.N. inspectors were forced out of Iraq in 1998, here is what was unaccounted for: up to 360 tons of bulk chemical warfare agents, including one and a half tons of VX nerve agent; up to 3,000 tons of precursor chemicals; growth media sufficient to produce 26,000 liters of anthrax spores; and over 30,000 special munitions for delivery of chemical and biological agents.

Those are just the leftovers that we know about. Then add to that all the deadly weapons that Saddam has been cooking up over the last 11 years. We know Iraq continues to produce chemical agents for chemical weapons. We know Saddam has rebuilt previously destroyed production plants across Iraq. We know he has retained the key personnel formerly engaged in the chemical weapons program. He has mustard gas, VX nerve agent, and a range of other chemical weapons.

The record repeats itself with biological weapons. Intelligence shows us that production has continued. Facilities formerly used for biological weapons have been rebuilt. Equipment has been purchased. And Saddam has retained the personnel who worked on it before the gulf war. Indeed, UNSCOM found that Iraq was working to build mobile biological weapons facilities which are easier to conceal. It appears that they now have such facilities. The biological agents we believe Iraq can produce include anthrax, botulinum, toxin, aflatoxin and ricin.

Perhaps we recite the litany, "chemical, biological, working on nuclear," so often that it loses some of its meaning. British Prime Minister Tony Blair has warned against us developing a kind of "word fatigue" when it comes to these weapons, and I take that warning to heart.

"New Yorker" writer Jeffrey Goldberg has traveled to the region and done significant reporting on Saddam's capabilities and his intentions—on his deadly weapons and his brutal will. Let me read a piece Mr. Goldberg wrote in the online magazine Slate that puts Saddam's possession of at least one of these toxins in sharp relief. I quote:

In 1995, the government of Saddam Hussein admitted to United Nations weapons inspectors that its scientists had weaponized a biological agent called aflatoxin. Charles Duelfer, the former deputy executive chairman of the now-defunct UNSCOM, told me earlier this year that the Iraqi admission was startling because aflatoxin has no possible battlefield use. Aflatoxin, which is made from fungi that occur in moldy grains, does only one thing well: It causes liver cancer. In fact, it induces it particularly well in children. Its effects are far from immediate. The joke among weapons inspectors is that aflatoxin would stop a lieutenant from making colonel, but it would not stop soldiers from advancing across a battlefield.

I quoted Duelfer, in an article that appeared in the New Yorker, saying that "we kept pressing the Iraqis to discuss the concept of use of aflatoxin." They never came up with an adequate explanation, he said. They did admit, however, that they had loaded aflatoxin into two warheads capable of being fitted onto Scud missiles.

Richard Spertzel, who was the chief biological weapons inspector for UNSCOM, told me that aflatoxin is "a devilish weapon. From a moral standpoint, aflatoxin is the cruelest weapons, it means watching children die slowly of liver cancer."

Spertzel went on to say that, to his knowledge, Iraq is the only country ever to weaponize aflatoxin.

In an advertisement that appeared in the New York Times on Tuesday, a group of worthies called upon the American people to summon the courage to question the war plans of President Bush. The advertisement, which was sponsored by Common Cause, asks, in reference to the Saddam regime, "Of all the repugnant dictatorships, why this one?"

... There are, of course, many repugnant dictators in the world; a dozen or so in the Middle East alone. But Saddam Hussein is a figure of singular repugnance, and singular danger. To review: There is no dictator in power anywhere in the world who has, so far in his career, invaded two neighboring countries; fired ballistic missiles at the civilians of two other neighboring countries; tried to have assassinated an ex-president of the United States; harbored al-Qaida fugitives; attacked civilians with chemical weapons; attacked the soldiers of an enemy country with chemical weapons; conducted biological weapons experiments on human subjects; committed genocide; and then there is, of course, the matter of the weaponized aflatoxin, a tool of mass murder and nothing else.

I do not know how any thinking person could believe that Saddam Hussein is a run-of-the-mill dictator. No one else comes close . . . to matching his extraordinary and variegated record of malevolence.

Earlier this year, while traveling across northern Iraq, I interviewed more than 100 survivors of Saddam's campaign of chemical genocide. I will not recite the statistics, or recount the horror stories here, except to say that I met enough barren and cancer-ridden women in Iraqi Kurdistan to last me several lifetimes.

So: Saddam Hussein is uniquely evil, the only ruler in power today—and the first one since Hitler—to commit chemical genocide. Is that enough of a reason to remove him from power? I would say yes, if "never again" is in fact actually to mean "never again."

That is why every day this man remains in power is a day of danger for the American people, the Iraqi people, and, indeed, the people of the world.

Let me give you one more example that is as disturbing as aflatoxin. It is botulinum toxin, the cause of botulism, which comes from bacteria found in the soil. After the Gulf War, United Nations weapons inspectors found that Iraq had produced tons of botulinum toxin, some of it loaded into missiles and bombs. Let me repeat. Years ago, inspectors found tons, some of it weaponized. So we know Saddam has experience with this weapon.

For smallpox, there is a vaccine. Anthrax and other bacterial agents can be treated with antibiotics. But botulism is a toxin, a poisonous chemical made by bacteria. Less than a handful of pure botulinum toxin, evenly dispersed in an aerosol, would be enough to kill more than a million people. The only treatment for botulism poisoning is an anti-toxin made from horse serum, and it only works about half the time.

There is a horror story for every biological or chemical agent in this man's arsenal. I don't need to go through them all. We only need to understand that these horror stories could come true if we do not confront Saddam's devious designs.

Some insist, and I don't understand this claim, that chemical and biological weapons aren't all that troubling. They say we need only really worry about nuclear weapons.

Given what I have just explained, I think that is a dangerous assumption. But assume for a moment that Saddam has no chemical weapons and no biological weapons. Would there be cause for forceful United Nations action, and, failing that, American military action? I say, yes, without a doubt.

There is now a consensus belief that Saddam could have an atomic weapon within months of acquiring fissile material. Based on the best estimates, his regime could manufacture the fuel itself within as little as 3 years. There is no way to measure now long it might take Saddam to acquire the fuel from an outside source. He could be attempting to do so as we speak. Indeed, it would be naïve to assume otherwise.

This leads to a critical question, and perhaps the threshold question in the debate. How long do my fellow Senators suggest we wait? Until we know, beyond dispute, if there is ever such evidence beyond dispute, that Saddam is 1 month away from obtaining a nuclear weapon and the means to deliver it? Until we know beyond dispute that he is a week away? Or perhaps we should wait until he has it?

In 1996, the International Atomic Energy Agency, IAEA, reported that Iraq had all the materials for a bomb except for the fissile material itself—either plutonium or highly enriched uranium. It is now 6 years later.

The debate about whether Saddam is an "imminent" threat is an interesting one. What better defines imminence than the facts that I have just outlined?

In fact, we must admit that the only conclusive proof of imminence could come in the hindsight, when innocents are sorting through the rubble and counting the injured or the dead. As National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice said, the smoking gun could be a mushroom cloud. Or add to that a yellow cloud of mustard gas, an invisible cloud of sarin gas, or the slow and silent spread of smallpox.

I know, despite all this evidence, much of which is beyond dispute, some say, "There is no new evidence."

I have two answers to that. One, we don't need new evidence. The existing evidence of his capabilities and intent is more than enough to paint a poisonous picture.

Two, there is, in fact, new evidence. For instance, the fact that, once acquiring fissile material, Saddam will be just months of developing a nuclear weapon, is new. And it underlines the urgency of defanging this dictator immediately.

In fact, here is a brief review what we know about what Saddam has done since the departure of the U.N. weapons inspections in 1998. British Prime Minister Tony Blair laid this out to the Parliament last month.

Since 1998, we know that Saddam has sought or attempted to buy: specialized vacuum pumps, the type needed for the gas centrifuge to enrich uranium; an entire magnet production line of the type for use in the motors and top bearings of gas centrifuges; dual use products such as Anhydrous Hydrogen Fluoride and fluoride gas; a filament winding machine, which can be used to manufacture carbon fiber gas centrifuge rotors; 60,000 or more specialized aluminum tubes, which are subject to strict controls due to their potential use in the construction of gas centrifuges.

And Saddam has been trying to buy significant quantities of uranium, though we do not know whether he has been successful. Key personnel from his old nuclear weapons program are at work again. Iraq claims that this is for a civil nuclear power program but it has no nuclear powerplants.

We can search for the most innocuous possible explanation, of each and every disturbing piece of evidence, or we can look realistically at the totality of the evidence.

And what about delivery systems?

Iraq is supposed to only have limited missile capability for conventional weaponry. But we know that a significant number of longer-range missiles were concealed from the previous inspectors, including up to 20 extended range Scud missiles. We know that 2001, Iraq's plans entered a new stage and that now, the regime's development of weapons with a range over 600 miles. Hundreds of key personnel are working on the delivery systems.

The danger will not abate unless we make it abate. It will only grow. And we will be forced to simply wait and see how, when, and against whom Saddam will use these weapons.

What more do we need to know?

Some say that removing Saddam Hussein from power would compromise the wider war against terrorism. But to me, the two are inextricably linked.

First, remember that Iraq under Saddam is one of only seven nations in the world to be designated by our State Department as a state sponsor of terrorism. He provides aid, funding, and training to terrorists who have killed Americans and others. He hosted the Abu Nidal Organization, whose leader was found dead in Baghdad in August. He gives money to the families of Palestinian suicide bombers.

Second, Saddam himself meets the definition of a terrorist, someone who attacks civilians to achieve a political purpose. He has done so repeatedly against the Kurds in the north of Iraq, as well as against the Shi'a in the south. If he is willing to kill thousands of Iraqis, how many Americans or Europeans do we think he considers expendable?

Third, though the relationship between al-Qaida and Saddam's regime is a subject of intense debate within the intelligence community, we do have evidence of meetings between Iraqi officials and leaders of al-Qaida, and some testimony that Iraqi agents helped train al-Qaida operatives to use chemical and biological weapons. We also know that senior leaders of al-Qaida have been and are now harbored in Iraq.

It is not speculation to suggest that Iraq might pass chemical, biological, or nuclear weapons to terrorists. It is realism.

There are other state sponsors of terrorism, all of which pose serious dangers to the security of America and the world.

But Saddam's is the only regime that combines a record of supporting terrorists with a history of killing and torturing dissidents, ambitions to dominate his region, growing stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons and a willingness to use them. That is why the danger he poses rises above the rest on the topography of terror.

In my view, if we remove his pernicious influence from the Middle East and free the Iraqi people to determine their own destiny, we will transform the politics of the region, and advance the war against terrorism, not set it back as some have suggested.

In April 1917, in requesting a congressional declaration to enter what was then known as the Great War, Woodrow Wilson said, "We act without animus, not in enmity toward a people or with the desire to bring any injury or disadvantage upon them, but only in armed opposition to an irresponsible government which has thrown aside all considerations of humanity and of right and is running amuck."

The same can be said if and when we must confront Saddam's brutal regime. We will not be fighting the Iraqi people. Our goal, to the contrary, will be to liberate the Iraqi people from tyranny even as we remove the threat from this rabid regime.

But we must prove that good and decent intent not only on the day we commit arms, if we must, on the day we win. We must prove our commitment to building a better nation for the Iraqi people on the day after the day after, and the day after that, when we will face, and help the Iraqi people to face, the broad range of humanitarian, economic, diplomatic, and political problems that will no doubt present themselves.

The wars we wage are measured by the quality of the peace that follows.

I know that some fear the future of Iraq post-Saddam. They fear the risks, the responsibilities, and the costs, so much that those fears of tomorrow lead them to justify inaction today. To me, post-Saddam Iraq is not a burden to be shunned but an opportunity to be seized. It must become a signal to the world, particularly the Islamic world, of our Nation's best intentions.

Indeed, post-Saddam Iraq will be a test of America and our values. We have barely earned a passing grade on our first test, in post-Taliban Afghanistan. We cannot afford to scrape and slip by again, because this time the stakes are higher, the stage larger, and the consequences of failure even more dire.

How do we lay the foundation for a civil and open society after the fighting stops and the likely celebrations in the streets subside?

First, we must invest in Iraq's security. Some will be tempted to short-change our post-Saddam commitment by whittling down a security presence to the smallest possible size we think we can get away with, or by pulling our forces out the first open window.

But we must learn from Afghanistan, where, despite a brilliant military victory and early movements toward a stable and civil society, some big mistakes have been made.

Perhaps due to the Bush administration's stated aversion to nation building, we failed to establish a peacekeeping presence strong enough or geographically wide enough to tame the factionalism and ethnic conflict that have plagued Afghanistan for years. We failed to get ready to deal with the decrepit state of the nation's infrastructure caused by the long civil war that preceded our involvement. And, though our nations assisted us in our military victory, we did not leverage their investment to give them sufficient stake in a responsibility in a long-term peace.

As a result, the situation on the ground in Afghanistan is tenuous today. Warlords control the countryside. Hamid Karzai's rule in Kabul is uncertain. His ministers have been assassinated. Karzai himself came within a hair's breath of assassination. Have we lost the peace? No. But the current instability can, if left to fester, give rise to terrorism, oppression, and civil war.

It is not too late to correct our course. That is why Senator Hagel and I have sponsored the Afghanistan Freedom Support Act of 2002, currently before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The bill would commit to the country's stability, security, and democratic development by investing $2.5 billion over 4 years in economic, political, and humanitarian assistance, including a half billion dollars toward an enterprise fund for business development and job creation and $300 million in military and security assistance for police training and crime control. It would also urge President Bush to expand the international security force beyond Kabul, and, if that decision were made, would authorize $1 billion over the next two years to make that possible. This is extremely important legislation that deserves broad legislative and public support.

Now we must hear from the administration that they are ready with specific plans for Iraq that will not repeat the mistakes of Afghanistan.

In fact, we have to face the fact that the best-case military scenario—the rapid collapse of the Iraqi military and the swift capture or elimination of Saddam—would also present the most challenging security scenario.

The three most immediate security objectives will be securing all chemical, biological and nuclear weapons sites and relevant personnel, tracking down Saddam's remaining secret police, and preventing potential Iranian military interference.

Simultaneously, among the Iraqi people at large, U.S. forces must be ready immediately to shift gears to post-conflict operations, helping to restore order and handling humanitarian emergencies. Despite its tremendous training and talent, our military needs more specialized teams to take on this crucial job.

The administration should also work with non-governmental organizations to recruit Iraqi-American and other Arab-American volunteers who can help peacekeepers and humanitarian organizations communicate with the Iraqi people, distribute supplies, assist in healthcare delivery, and do other critical jobs. A similar volunteer program worked in the Balkans and can work again in Iraq.

Like the military campaign itself, stabilizing post-Saddam Iraq and tending to the Iraqi people will be aided dramatically if the United States is part of an international coalition, especially one that includes Muslim and Arab nations. That will make clear to Iraqis and the world that our enemy is Saddam and not the Iraqi people, and just as Saddam is a threat to the world, securing and rebuilding Iraq is the duty of the world.

The bottom line is this: While Afghanistan's growing instability is deeply troubling, allowing post-Saddam Iraq, which abuts Syria and Iran, Saudi Arabia and Jordan, Kuwait and Turkey, to fall into civil war or into the hands of another dictator would be disastrous. If post-Saddam Iraq unravels, as Afghanistan is at risk of doing, so will the credibility and the effectiveness of our wider war against terrorism. And we will be that much closer to a global civilization war.

Once security and stability are established in post-Saddam Iraq, we must begin to establish the foundation for democratic governance and the rule of law. I am pleased that the Bush administration has begun bringing key opposition groups together to lay what a foundation for an honest, effective, and representative government. Iraq is a divided nation, with at least three key regions and three key religious, ethnic, and political factions. But let's be clear. Post-Saddam Iraqi governance will take more than a couple of conference calls to get right.

And we must be very careful here. Our goal is not replacing Baghdad with New York on the Tigris. We do not want an American client state, and we can't expect a democracy that overnight looks exactly like ours. We must be realistic. This process will require the sustained guidance, partnership, and investment of our nation and our allies, working with the Iraqi people.

The war against terrorism, including this effort to disarm Iraq, is like no other war we have waged.

If we are true to our principles, we can again make the world a safer and better place, not only for us Americans but for people in Iraq and throughout the Arab and Muslim worlds, who deserve the freedom and opportunity that we declared at the birth of our Nation 226 years ago: the endowment each human being receives at birth from our Creator.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Lieberman-Warner resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq. This resolution gives President Bush the flexibility he needs to address the threat posed by Saddam Hussein, including the authority to use military force as he deems appropriate, without ceding too much authority to the executive to wage war outside Iraq. I applaud Senators LIEBERMAN, WARNER, MCCAIN, and so many others who have worked with President Bush to reach an agreement on this critical issue.

I support the President's policy of regime change in Iraq to eliminate the threat Saddam poses to the U.S. and the world, and agree that time is of the essence. I was concerned that the administration's initial draft resolution was too broad, and called for tighter parameters on the Presidential mandate. The resolution now before us addresses my concerns by confining the scope of possible military action to Iraq, rather than the entire Middle East region.

Only last month we commemorated the one-year anniversary of the deadliest terrorist attack in our history. Today, we face a threat from a regime that would not hesitate to use weapons of mass destruction against our friends and allies, or against the United States itself, or transfer these weapons to terrorist groups that target Americans.

Saddam Hussein's track record is well-known to all. He ordered the use of chemical weapons—including sarin, VX, tabun, and mustard agents—against his own people, killing tens of thousands of innocent civilians. His regime invaded two neighbors and threatened others. In 1991, his troops were prepared to invade other countries, had they not been thwarted by the U.S.-led international coalition. His regime launched ballistic missiles at four of its neighbors—Israel, Saudi Arabia, Iran, and Bahrain. He ordered the assassination of opponents in Iraq and abroad, including a former president of the United States. His regime beat and tortured American POWs and used them as human shields during the 1991 Persian gulf war. His military continues to fire at U.S. and coalition aircraft patrolling the no-fly zones in northern and southern Iraq.

Based on the information presented to me in classified briefings, I share President Bush's assessment that Iraqi disarmament must be the objective. Weapon inspections alone will not achieve this goal, and a lengthy inspections regime could inadvertently give Saddam more time to stockpile and conceal weapons of mass destruction. After eleven years of lies and deception, we cannot expect that Saddam will reverse course and willingly disarm. Clearly, regime change in Iraq is the only way to end the threat Saddam Hussein poses to the United States and the world.

What has brought us to this point?

On March 3, 1991, Iraq, having been forced to abandon the territory it overran in Kuwait, agreed to the terms of a cease-fire offered by the allied forces. Since the cease-fire, Iraq has repeatedly violated a series of Security Council resolutions designed to ensure that Iraq submits to U.N. inspections, abides by the cease-fire agreement, dismantles its extensive weapons of mass destruction programs, and returns Kuwaiti and other nations' POWs, missing persons, and property seized during the gulf war. The United Nations has found Iraq in "material breach of cease-fire terms" on seven occasions, and Iraq remains in violation of the cease-fire to this very day.

For seven and one-half years, Saddam Hussein played a cat-and-mouse game with U.N. inspectors. The Iraqi regime misled, lied, intimidated, and physically obstructed the inspectors; and Iraqi scientists who provided information to the inspectors disappeared, most likely into Saddam's dungeons and execution chambers. The inspectors uncovered an enormous amount of biological and chemical weapons materials and production facilities, but by their own account they could not find everything. And any success they may have had was in large measure because Saddam feared a renewed military offensive by the United States. Finally, on November 11, 1998, following Iraq's announcement that it was prohibiting all U.N. inspections, weapons inspections in Iraq ceased. Under increasing international pressure, Iraq again agreed to allow inspectors full access, but then resumed obstructing their operations, and the United Nations withdrew the inspectors on December 15, 1998. Over the next 4 years, Iraq refused to admit weapons inspectors under the terms set forth by the Security Council.

Iraq has had 4 years to refine its techniques of deception. It defies common sense to suggest that a hundred or even a thousand U.N. inspectors could, with any assurance, succeed in finding small WMD stockpiles and facilities in a country the size of the state of California. Many former U.N. inspectors who experienced first-hand Iraq's lies and deceptions have come to the same conclusion.

We know that Saddam has chemical and biological weapons, and is developing nuclear weapons. These weapons would immediately threaten U.S. troops and our friends and allies in the region. A Saddam Hussein with nuclear weapons would radically alter the balance of power in the Middle East, requiring a profound shift in the deployment of American forces and undermine our ability to respond to other potential threats around the globe.

Saddam has worked with terrorist networks for many years. He harbored Abu Nidal, and is reportedly providing safe have to Abdul Rahman Yasin, a key participant in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing. Saddam has himself ordered acts of terror. He shares many objectives with groups like al-Qaida, and may decide to use terrorists to conceal his responsibility for an attack on the United States.

For 11 years, Saddam Hussein has thumbed his nose at the international community. Would it be prudent to continue what has failed for 11 long years? Would it be wise to give Saddam more time, which we know he will devote to realizing his greatest dream—to obtain the nuclear weapons that would allow him to dominate the Middle East with all of its oil and threaten to drive the United States out of a region that is vital to our security?

Never in our history have we been in a position where we could be blackmailed, under the threat of nuclear war, into withdrawing support for our closest allies or sacrificing our national security to prevent the death of millions. And yet this is the danger we face in as little as one year if we do not act to remove this looming threat. Time is not on our side; it is on the side of Saddam Hussein. We cannot wait for a smoking gun, because a gun smokes only after it is fired, and the smoke of a nuclear blast would mean that we are too late.

I applaud the President's decision to seek international support for regime change in Iraq, but U.S. action should not hinge on the endorsement of the United Nations. The United States is leading a coalition of international allies in the war on terror, not the other way around.

In the case of Iraq, U.S. national security interests should not be sacrificed if the U.N. cannot be persuaded of the urgency of this threat. It would be preferable to have U.N. support, but we have to be prepared to go it alone if necessary. We cannot give the United Nations veto power over our decisions to protect our national interests.

I remain concerned about our planning for the future of Iraq if we succeed in removing Saddam Hussein from power. Administration officials have presented a vision of a post-Saddam Iraq that is peaceful, democratic, and unified. Defeating the Iraqi military on the battlefield will not be easy, but ensuring a stable and friendly post-Saddam Iraq will pose even greater challenges, requiring careful planning by the administration in concert with our allies in the region. Iraq could rapidly slide into long-term political instability or even bloody war upon the collapse of the Baathist regime.

Iraq's population is made up of three main components: the Kurdish speaking people in the north, the Arab Sunnis in the center, and the Arab Shiites in the south who make up a majority—some 60 percent—of the entire population of the country. Many Shiites desire a theocratic government similar to that in neighboring Iran. The Kurdish leadership in the north may recognize that independence is an impossible dream, but their experience of ten years of self-government will make their reintegration into a unified Iraq problematic at best. Arab Sunnis, fearing retaliation from the long-oppressed Shiite majority, may use the Sunni-dominated Iraqi military to keep the Shiites from gaining power. And while the overthrow of Saddam Hussein would involve the likely end to the Iraqi Republican Guard, the regular Iraqi army may remain to play a critical role in a post-Saddam Iraq. Yet the Iraqi army may become a den of coup-plotters; after all, Iraq endured a succession of bloody coups from 1953 until Saddam Hussein's ascent to power in the late 1970s.

Our military planning should be guided by an awareness that how Saddam's regime falls will shape the Iraq that follows. At some point the American people will need to know the nature and extent of America's commitment to a post-Saddam Iraq. How long will our troops be on the ground in Iraq? What material and financial resources will we be asked to provide to Iraq? What responsibility will the United States have to maintain peace in the region? What help will we get from our allies in rebuilding Iraq?

President Bush has exercised great leadership at a critical time in our history. I am proud to be a part of the debate we are having today in this chamber, which is a powerful demonstration of our democratic institutions. Ours is a nation that is slow to anger. Americans abhor war. I vote in support of this resolution, but hope and pray that the President, united with Congress, will succeed in averting war.

There is no question in my mind that we must disarm Saddam, and that time is running out. Clearly, there are risks involved. But I believe the risks of doing nothing are far greater.

I yield that floor.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 3009

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 619, S. 3009, a bill to provide a 13-week extension for unemployment compensation, and that the bill be read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. LINCOLN). Is there objection?

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, reserving the right to object—and I shall object—this is not a 13-week extension, it is a 26-week extension, plus an additional 7 weeks for some States. It changes the threshold. It costs $17 billion. A clean extension would be $7 billion.

I will be happy to work with my colleagues to come up with something more reasonable and affordable. This bill before us, S. 3009, is not. Therefore, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period for morning business, with Senators allowed to speak for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ASSISTANCE TO AFGHANISTAN

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it is now just more than a year since our Armed Forces started Operation Enduring Freedom in Afghanistan. This is a fitting time to look back at what we have accomplished, and ahead at the challenges that remain.

I am reminded of a young Army private from Midland, SD, whom I met in Uzbekistan last February. He had gone to Uzbekistan just after completing a tour of duty in Bosnia, foregoing leave, because, he told me, that is where our country needed him.

I am certain that each member of this body knows someone from his or her State who has made a contribution to our successful effort in Afghanistan. On behalf of every member of the Congress and the American people, let me say how proud and grateful we are for those efforts.

Our military quickly and effectively accomplished its objective of removing the repressive Taliban regime. The challenge before us now is whether we can promote peace and economic and political stability as effectively as we waged and won the war. I am pleased to see the senior Senator from Vermont on the floor. I am wondering if he would engage in a brief colloquy with me on the subject of our humanitarian and reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan.

Mr. LEAHY. Yes, I would.

Mr. DASCHLE. As our colleagues know, Senator LEAHY is the Chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee. Two weeks ago, I listened with interest to the Senator's speech on Iraq, part of which he rightly dedicated to the situation in Afghanistan. Afghanistan is our first, and most visible effort in the war on terrorism. The eyes of the region and the world are watching whether we are willing to do what is needed to follow through in Afghanistan. I would like Senator LEAHY to, once again, share his views on the developments in Afghanistan.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the distinguished majority leader for his question. Much has been accomplished in Afghanistan over the course of the last year. The brutal Taliban regime has been vanquished to the ash heap of history. Thousands of Afghans have returned to their homes, and our humanitarian efforts have raised the standard of living of many Afghans.

We have spent billions to win the war. I fear, however, that unless we dramatically increase our efforts there we could lose the peace. The humanitarian situation in Afghanistan remains critical. Thousands of people are still homeless and as winter comes, so too will the very real threat of widespread hunger, even famine. Afghans whose homes were mistakenly bombed have not been helped. There are reports that some Afghans are starting to return to refugee camps in Pakistan. It is a very dire situation.

We have a moral duty to help the people of Afghanistan. Beyond that, there are critical U.S. interests at stake in ensuring that this country becomes peaceful and prosperous. That's why I was pleased when, earlier this year, President Bush called for a Marshall Plan for Afghanistan.

I commended him for that important announcement, but since that time we have not seen the resources put behind these statements. No one is asking the Administration to spend 13 percent of the entire federal budget, as we did with the original Marshall Plan. But the Administration did not even ask Congress for a single cent for Afghanistan in its budget for fiscal year 2003. The Foreign Operations Subcommittee was advised informally that the Administration planned to spend $98 million for relief and reconstruction activities in Afghanistan. The Subcommittee felt that this amount was still insufficient to adequately address the needs in Afghanistan, and provided $157 million, an additional $59 million.

I would also add that the Senate is not alone in its concern for the situation in Afghanistan. Just yesterday, I received a letter from the President of CARE, a non-partisan, relief organization with significant operations in Afghanistan, which stated:

President Bush has committed the United States Government to work "in the best traditions of George Marshall" and help the people of Afghanistan rebuild their country. For this goal to be achieved, CARE believes that the international community, led by the United States Government, must do two things. We must provide at least $10 billion in reconstruction funding over the next five years, and we must respond positively to the requests of the Afghan Government to expand the International Security Assistance Force beyond Kabul as part of a comprehensive plan to improve security for all Afghans

This letter goes on to say that a CARE report, "finds that the U.S. Government has actually exceeded its one-year Tokyo pledge of $297 million, primarily in the form of humanitarian assistance. Our concern, however, is that the Administration, to date, has not made any long-term commitment to Afghan reconstruction."

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the Senator from Vermont. There is clearly still much to be done in Afghanistan.

Mr. LEAHY. I agree with the majority leader. As I have said over and over, it is one thing to topple a regime, but it is equally important, and sometimes far more difficult, to rebuild a country to prevent it from becoming engulfed by factional fighting. If such nations cannot successfully rebuild, there is a real risk that they will once again become havens for terrorists.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would like to ask the Senator from Vermont if the Congress provided additional funding for Afghanistan in the Supplemental Appropriations bill that was passed earlier this year. Isn't it true that the Congress fully funded the Administration's request for a range of activities in Afghanistan during fiscal year 2002? And weren't you subsequently told by officials in the State Department and USAID that this request was not nearly enough to address some of the most acute problems in that country? And isn't it true that the Congress added $94 million for humanitarian, refugee, and reconstruction assistance to Afghanistan, only to be told later by the President that he would not provide this additional assistance to Afghanistan?

Mr. LEAHY. That is correct. Now, some relief organizations have already been told that they may have to shut down programs for lack of funds. This is happening in a country that desperately needs the most basic staples such as water, education and medical care.

I agree with those who point out that many other nations have yet to fulfill pledges of assistance to Afghanistan. But, if the President is serious about a Marshall Plan, and I believe he is right, then we need to do much more to help rebuild that country.

Mr. DASCHLE. I agree with the Senator. We need to find additional resources for humanitarian efforts in Afghanistan, but I know that the Senator, like me, is concerned about the deteriorating security situation. For months, in the form of letters to the Administration and amendments here on the Senate floor, we have been urging the President to expand the International Security Assistance Force beyond greater Kabul. Coalition forces provide much needed security throughout the country, but significant concerns remain, highlighted by the assassination attempt on President Karzai just last month. I know that the Senator agrees with me that expanding ISAF could play a central role in improving this worsening security situation.

Mr. LEAHY. I strongly agree with the Majority Leader and thank him for this colloquy.

REVISED ALLOCATION TO SUBCOMMITTEES FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Thursday June 27, the Committee on Appropriations, by a unanimous roll call vote of 29 to 0, approved the allocation to subcommittees for fiscal year 2003.

On Wednesday July 26, after Congress adopted the conference report to accompany H.R. 4775, the fiscal year 2002 supplemental appropriations bill, I submitted a revised allocation which was modified primarily to conform outlays to the outcome on the supplemental.

Today I submit a revised allocation which has been modified, primarily, to reduce outlays for each subcommittee to reflect the President's decision to release none of the contingent emergency appropriations in the supplemental. In addition, the allocation reflects final decisions on the conference report on defense and military construction appropriations bills.

These revised allocations were prepared in consultation with my dear colleague, Senator STEVENS, the distinguished ranking member of the Committee, who stands with me committed to presenting bills to the Senate consistent with the allocations.

Furthermore, we remain committed to oppose any amendments that would breach the allocations.

RETIREMENT OF SENATOR JESSE HELMS

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today in tribute to Senator JESSE HELMS, who as we know is retiring from the U.S. Senate at the end of this Congress.

Simply put, the name "JESSE HELMS" has become a household name because he has never been afraid to stand by his principles. Indeed, throughout his five terms in the Senate, Senator HELMS has been a passionate voice for those ideals by which he has lived his life.

And that is a critical distinction—Senator HELMS has not only propounded certain values and philosophies, he has also lived them. He has always enjoyed the kind of unique credibility that comes from integrity—a personal quality that Senator HELMS has carried with him from his very first days in Monroe, NC.

This is a man for whom service is a higher calling, a commitment not only reflected by his years in elective office, but also—and at least as importantly—by his service in the Navy from 1942 to 1945. One cannot help but feel that Senator HELMS later brought the reality of that experience significantly to bear in his legendary work on matters of international import.

When I first came to Congress in 1979, I of course knew of Senator HELMS. And as I worked in the House on State Department authorizations over the years as well as a variety of global issues as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and Ranking Member of the International Operations Subcommittee, I became even more familiar with his profound interest in, and impact on, international affairs.

When I came to the Senate, I became a freshman member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Chair of the International Operations Subcommittee. Throughout that time—and ever since Senator HELMS has been relentlessly gracious to me, as he had been whenever we had worked together on various conference committees back when I was in the House.

Here in the Senate, we worked hand-in-glove on the State Department reauthorization, and I appreciated the opportunity he gave me to chair a full committee hearing with then-Secretary Albright on the issue of intelligence sharing with the U.N. in the wake of our involvement in Somalia.

That was a serious concern that he and I shared—how would we protect U.S. intelligence information, particularly in light of the intelligence breach that had taken place in Somalia, where the U.N. had documents they should not have had which were also not properly secured. Issues brought to our attention during that hearing with Secretary Albright were eventually incorporated into the State Department bill.

During my tenure on the Foreign Relations Committee, I worked with Senator HELMS on the reorganization of the State Department, which was passed in 1998. As Chair of the International Operations Subcommittee I also introduced legislation in 1995 to create Terrorist Lookout committees in our embassies. With the help of Senator HELMS, this bill was incorporated in the State Department Authorization Act of 1996-1997, that was subsequently vetoed.

In the wake of 9/11, I re-introduced this legislation with Senator HELMS as a cosponsor and worked with him to seek its inclusion in the USA PATRIOT Act passed last year. With his support, this bill has finally become law as part of the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act.

Of course, it will come as no surprise that we didn't agree on all the issues. But it can truly be said he has left his mark on the global landscape. And that includes his introduction of legislation last year to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV infection—a goal I share by providing $700 million in international emergency AIDS spending.

It is also true that agreement is not the test of friendship or respect in this body—nor should it be. Indeed, this body was founded on the ideals of debate and deliberation among men and women of good conscience who feel strongly about the pressing matters of the day.

I appreciate his candor, his friendship, and his service to North Carolina, America and indeed the world. On the occasion of his retirement, I would like to extend my best wishes to him, as well as his wife Dorothy with whom he has such a special and loving relationship. Senator HELMS will truly be missed, but most assuredly never forgotten.

TRIBUTE TO SEN. STROM THURMOND

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to South Carolina Senator STROM THURMOND, an institution unto himself who has served with distinction in the U.S. Senate for almost a half-century. Senator THURMOND is the longest-serving member in the history of the Senate and the second Senator in history to cast 15,000 votes. During his tenure, Senator THURMOND has been an enduring witness to history, presiding over the chamber during a tremendous transformation of the American landscape. During this time, Senator THURMOND has steadfastly remained responsible to the voters of South Carolina, who have returned him to the chamber time and time again. Senator THURMOND's enduring legacy will continue on well beyond his retirement at the end of the 107th Congress.

Senator THURMOND was born in 1902, in Edgefield, SC. His early years were spent as an Army reservist, teacher, superintendent and lawyer. Senator THURMOND won election to the South Carolina State Senate in 1933, representing his home district of Edgefield for the next five years. Senator THURMOND then became a Circuit Judge of South Carolina, just as the clouds of war descended over Europe. Never one to shy away from his duty to his country, Senator THURMOND sought and received an exemption to return to military duty. On June 6, 1944, he landed in Normandy on D-Day with the 82nd Airborne Division at the age of 42. For his service in World War II, Senator THURMOND earned eighteen decorations, medals and awards, including the Purple Heart, Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster and Bronze Star for Valor. He returned to South Carolina a war hero, and was elected Governor of the Palmetto State in 1946. In 1954, Senator THURMOND was elected to the United States Senate, becoming the first, and so far, the only politician elected to the Senate as a write-in candidate.

Senator THURMOND has dedicated his life to preserving, defending and participating in our democracy. He attended the Democratic National Convention in 1932 and voted for Franklin D. Roosevelt. Sixty four years later, he attended the Republican Convention and voted for Bob Dole. In fact, Senator THURMOND was a Democrat for thirty two years and has been a Republican for the past thirty eight. Through it all, he has managed to remain relevant, active and a force on the national scene. Just two years ago, he played a critical role in helping to line up Republican support for George Bush in the South Carolina primary, helping to secure his nomination for President of the United States.

Senator THURMOND's countless achievements and awards are a testament to his distinguished career in public service. He holds thirty four honorary degrees, is in the South Carolina Hall of Fame, and is a recipient of the Presidential Citizens Award, Presidential Freedom Award, as well as other major awards from American Legion, VFW, DAV, AMVETS, the National Guard, Army and Navy associations, farm groups, business groups, education groups and several foreign countries.

It is with great admiration for Senator THURMOND's longevity and service that I commend him for his distinguished career in Congress. No one in the history of the Senate can say that they gave more of their life to this body, and while his presence may be gone after the 107th Congress, his spirit will forever remain a part of this chamber. I wish he and his family all the best in the future.

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE'S 100TH VOTE IN 15 MONTHS ON JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today marks the 15-month anniversary of the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee following the change in the Senate majority last summer. This week also became another milestone as the Judiciary Committee voted on the 100th judicial nominee of President George W. Bush. This historic demonstration of bipartisanship toward this President's judicial nominees has been overshadowed by partisan attacks in this very chamber and in the press.

I have worked diligently along with the other Democratic Senators on the Judiciary Committee to hold a record number of hearings for this President's district and circuit court nominees during the past 15 months and to bring as many as we could to a vote this year. Given all of the competing responsibilities of the committee and the Senate in these times of great challenges to our Nation, hearings for 103 judicial nominees, voting on 100, and favorably reporting 98 is a record of which the Judiciary Committee and the Senate can be proud. We have transcended the relative inaction of the prior 6½ years of Republican control by moving forward on judicial nominees twice as quickly as our predecessors did. Indeed, the Senate has already confirmed more judicial nominees in 15 months than the Republican-controlled Senate did during its last 30 months. More achieved, and in half the time.

The raw numbers, not percentages, reveal the true workload of the Senate on nominations and everyone knows that. Anyone who pays attention to the federal judiciary and who does not have a partisan agenda must know that. In addition, Democrats have moved more quickly in voting on judicial nominees of a President of a different party than in any time in recent history. Led by Majority Leader DASCHLE, the Democratic majority in the Senate has confirmed 80 judicial nominees, including 14 circuit court nominees, for a President of a different party, in just 15 months since the reorganization of the Judiciary Committee. In comparison, in the first two full years of President George H.W. Bush's administration, the Democratic-led Senate confirmed 71 judicial nominees. In fact, during the first 15 months of the first Bush Administration, only 23 judges were confirmed, with eight to the circuit courts. Our confirmation of 80 of President George W. Bush's judicial nominees in just 15 months is historic progress for a President and a Senate led by different parties.

Apparently, however, Republicans believe that there is partisan hay to be harvested in complaining that every single judicial nominee has not yet been confirmed. The fact is that we have proceeded with hearings for 103 of the 110 judicial nominees eligible for hearings 94 percent, for those focused on percentages. The other 17 judicial nominees who have not participated in a hearing either lack home-state consent or peer reviews or both. Thus, when partisans harp on the nominations of Terrence Boyle and Carolyn Kuhl and other nominees without home-State Senator support, they know they are being misleading. Senator HATCH never proceeded on a nomination without home-State Senator support and acknowledges that this is the Senate's tradition. At least six of the President's circuit court nominees fall into this category and, for many if not all of them, the White House knew about the lack of home-State Senator support before the nominations were made.

The committee has voted on 100 of the 103 judicial nominees eligible for votes—97 percent. Of those voted upon, 98—98 percent have been reported favorably to the Senate. In addition to the 80 judges already confirmed, another 18 approved by the Judiciary Committee await Senate action on the Senate Executive Calendar.

It is disappointing that the Republican leader and others are reported to have said that they will not be allowed Senate votes before we adjourn. Earlier this year the majority leader had to work through a problem caused by the administration's failure to work with Senators on executive branch appointments. The majority leader was required by Republican objection to invoke cloture in order to vote on President Bush's judicial nominations. Whether there is time left in this session to overcome Republican objections to action on the roster of President Bush's judicial nominations currently on the calendar is problematic.

To date, and unlike the recent past, every judicial nominee who participated in a hearing has been considered and voted upon by the Judiciary Committee but for the three controversial circuit court nominees we continue to consider.

I know that Senator THURMOND is very disappointed that we could not bring his choice for the Fourth Circuit to a vote this week. I regret that he is upset. The nomination of his former aide for a promotion to the Court of Appeals has grown more controversial. On our committee, as on all committees, controversy takes a toll in the time needed for action on a bill or on a nomination. Members of the committee need time to fully evaluate the merits of concerns about this nomination raised by hundreds if not thousands of citizens from throughout the Fourth Circuit and the Nation. In accordance with our responsibilities under the Constitution to evaluate these nominations for lifetime appointments, the members of the committee continue to work diligently on simultaneously evaluating three controversial circuit court nominations.

As much as I personally would have liked to resolve this nomination by now at the request of the distinguished Senior Senator from South Carolina, and as hard as I have worked to resolve the problems with it, we were not able to vote on it this week. I worked hard to try to move the nomination of his former aide forward to a vote up or down but, with war resolutions pending before the Senate and limited time for debate this Tuesday, I had to make a difficult decision. Seventeen relatively noncontroversial judicial nominations were ready for committee votes this week. I decided to try to bring some relief to 17 vacant seats in district courts across our country rather than begin what promised to be a lengthy and inconclusive debate about Judge Shedd's record as a Federal district court judge and whether he should be elevated. That was a tough decision for me, personally, but the rising tide of citizen distress over the Shedd nomination made bringing that vote to a conclusion an impossibility this week.

Republican efforts to gain some political advantage for this difficult situation are especially unfounded given the stark contrast between what we have achieved in the past 15 months compared with the most recent period of Republican control of the committee. In the 15 months before the reorganization of the Judiciary Committee after the shift in Senate majority, the Senate confirmed only 32 judicial nominees, including three to the circuits. Under Democratic leadership, we have already confirmed 80, including 14 to the circuit courts, in just 15 months. Even if we compare our record with a period of Republican control that is twice as long—the last 30 months of Republican control—our predecessors confirmed only 72 judges, while in half the time, we have confirmed 80. Alternatively, if we go back and compare the Republicans' first 15 months of Senate control in 1995 and 1996, we have accomplished far more: more hearings, 26 versus 14, for more judicial nominees, 103 versus 67, with more committee votes, 100 versus 61, for more confirmations, 80 versus 56. We have reached the century mark for committee votes in less than half the time, 15 months, while it took our predecessors 33 months to vote on 100 judicial nominees.

In another departure from the past, we have had hearings even for several controversial judicial nominees and brought them to votes this year. Most were voted out of committee despite their controversy. Given the number of vacancies that we inherited—110—concentrating on the most controversial, time-consuming nominations would have been to the detriment of the courts. The President has made a number of divisive choices—divisive to the American people and divisive to the Senate—for these lifetime seats on the courts, and they take more time to bring to hearings and votes. None of these nominees, however, have waited as long for hearings or votes as did some of President Clinton's judicial nominees, such as Judge Richard Paez, who waited 1,500 days to be confirmed and 1,237 days to get a final vote by the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee, or Judge Helene White, whose nomination languished for more than 1,500 days without ever getting a hearing or a committee vote.

As frustrated as Democrats were with the lengthy delays and obstruction of scores of judicial nominees in the prior 6½ years of Republican control, we never attacked the Chairman of the Committee in the manner Republicans chose this week. Similarly, as disappointed as Democrats were with the refusal of Chairman HATCH to include Allen Snyder, Bonnie Campbell, Clarence Sundram, Fred Woocher and other nominees on an agenda for a vote by the committee for months following their hearings, we never resorted to the tactics and tone used by Republicans in committee statements, in hallway discussions, in press conferences or in Senate floor debate. We never tried to override the chairman's prerogative to set the agenda for consideration of judicial nominees by trying to manipulate the committee's cloture rule. We did not try to use the committee rule to hold off consideration of an agenda item for at least a week to force either legislation or nominations to be voted on in one week's time. During Republican rule, even some uncontroversial nominees like Judge Kim Wardlaw were held over more than once. We also never sought to invoke Senate Rule 26.3 to make an end-run around Chairman HATCH—even when weeks and months passed without a single nominee on the agenda or when nominees who had hearings went for months without being placed on the agenda. As frustrated and disappointed as we were that the Republican majority refused to proceed with hearings or votes on scores of judicial nominees, we never sought to override Senator HATCH's judgments and authority as chairman of the committee.

Some in the other party have spared no efforts in making judicial nominations into a partisan, political issue, all the while refusing to acknowledge the progress made in these past 15 months when 100 of President Bush's judicial choices have had committee votes. We have perhaps moved too quickly on some, relaxing past standards, being more expeditious and generous than Republicans were to a Democratic President's nominees, and trying to take some of them at their word that they will follow the law and the ethical rules for judges.

Just last week, on October 2, 2002, we confirmed Ron Clark to an emergency vacancy in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. Two other judicial nominees, Larry Block and Judge James Gardner, were confirmed the very same day. The commissions for Judge Block and Judge Gardner were signed by the President on October 3, but the judge for the emergency vacancy in the President's home state was not. Just this week we learned that Mr. Clark was quoted as saying that he asked the White House to delay signing his commission while he runs as a Republican candidate for re-election to a seat in the Texas legislature. The White House apparently has been complicit in these unseemly political actions by a person confirmed to the federal bench. Mr. Clark, who the Senate has confirmed to a seat on the Federal district court in Texas, has been actively campaigning for election despite his confirmation.

These actions call into question Mr. Clark's ability to put aside his partisan roots and be an impartial adjudicator of cases. In his answers under oath to the committee, he swore that if he were "confirmed" he would follow the ethical rules. Canon 1 of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges explicitly provides that the Code applies to "judges and nominees for judicial office," and Canon 7 provides quite clearly that partisan political activity is contrary to ethical rules. In his answers to me, Mr. Clark promised: "[s]hould I be confirmed as a judge, my role will be different than that of a legislator." Yet now that he is confirmed, he has been flaunting his written statements to me personally and to the Senate Judiciary Committee and, by proxy, to the Senate as a whole. That the White House would go along with these partisan ploys reveals much about the political way this administration approaches judicial nominations.

Senators KENNEDY and SCHUMER have written a letter of complaint to the Fifth Circuit Judicial Council, which has jurisdiction over ethical complaints arising in that jurisdiction. I ask unanimous consent that the letter and a newspaper report of the Clark scandal be included in the RECORD. Tonight, only after this scandal came to the Nation's attention in today's news account in the New York Times, the President has apparently signed Mr. Clark's commission.

With a White House that is politicizing the Federal courts and making so many nominations, especially to the circuit courts, to appease the far-right wing of the Republican Party, it would be irresponsible for us to simply rubber-stamp these nominations for lifetime appointments to our independent Federal judiciary. Advice and consent does not mean giving any President carte blanche to pack the courts with ideologues from the right or the left.

I have worked hard to bring to a vote an overwhelming majority of this President's judicial nominees, but we cannot afford to make errors in these lifetime appointments out of haste or sentimental considerations, however well intentioned. To help smooth the confirmation process, I have gone out of my way to encourage the White House to work in a bipartisan way with the Senate, as past Presidents have, but, in all too many instances, the White House has chosen to bypass bipartisan cooperation in favor of partisanship.

The American people expect the federal courts to be fair forums and not bastions of favoritism on the right or the left. These are the only lifetime appointments in our whole system of government, and they matter a great deal to the future of each and every American. I will continue to work hard to ensure the independence of our Federal judiciary.

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, October 9, 2002.

The Hon. CAROLYN DINEEN KING,
Chief Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, New Orleans, LA.

DEAR CHIEF JUDGE KING: We write to raise an ethics issue regarding Ronald W. Clark, who was nominated by President Bush on January 24 and confirmed by the Senate on October 2, to be a judge on the U.S. District court for the Eastern District of Texas, but whose commission has not yet been signed by the President.

It has come to our attention Mr. Clark continues to hold his seat in the Texas state legislature and continues to campaign for re-election to that seat. Although Mr. Clark does not officially become a federal judge until he takes the oath of office, his continuing campaign activities appear to be in clear violation of Code of Conduct for United States Judges. The commentary to Code of Conduct makes clear that the Canons of Ethics define judicial nominees as judges and bind them to the same ethical rules. Canon 7 of the Code states that "a judge should refrain from political activity" and should not "act as a leader or hold any office in a political organization; make speeches for a political organization, or candidate or publicly endorse or oppose a candidate for public office; [or] solicit funds." Canon 7 goes on to state that a judge "should not engage in any other political activity."

Traditionally, this provision has been construed to have limited application to nominees. Because of the contingent nature of the Senate confirmation process, it would be unfair to require nominees to resign from elective office merely upon being nominated. But once the President's nominees are confirmed by the Senate, the process loses its uncertainty. The only step between nominee and judge is a ministerial act that should be completed promptly, and not delayed for partisan or political reasons.

Despite the clear applicability of the Code of Conduct, Mr. Clark continues to be a candidate for re-election to the Texas House of Representatives. This matter is of grave concern to us. As Members of the United States Senate Judiciary Committee, we take our Constitutional confirmation responsibilities seriously. Mr. Clark's continued candidacy appears to be a flagrant violation of the judicial code of conduct, which is deeply troubling. Judges should be paragons of ethics, and Mr. Clark's actions do not set a sterling standard at the outset of his judicial career.

According to the Code of Conduct, complaints of ethical misconduct may be lodged with the Circuit council, which we understand you chair. We would appreciate your prompt consideration of this inquiry, and we look forward to hearing from you in the near future.

Sincerely,

CHARLES E. SCHUMER,
U.S. Senator.

EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senator.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSH ACTING TO FORESTALL AN ISSUE IN TEXAS

(By Neil A. Lewis)

WASHINGTON, OCT. 9.—The White House moved quickly tonight to quash a politically embarrassing problem with one of President Bush's nominees to a federal court seat.

Although the nominee, Ron Clark, was confirmed by the Senate earlier this month to be a federal district judge based in Texas, he was out campaigning today for re-election as a state representative from his district north of Dallas. Mr. Clark had said he might want to delay taking his seat on the bench to serve one more term in the State Legislature, where his vote might be crucial to Republicans winning the speakership.

Two Democratic Senators, Charles E. Schumer of New York and Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, complained about Mr. Clark's actions today, saying they were a blatant violation of judicial ethics, a view with which some legal scholars agreed. The senators wrote to Carolyn D. King, the chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit based in New Orleans, asking her to evaluate whether Mr. Clark had violated the judicial canons of ethics even before he had put on his robe.

By evening, the White House intervened, saying President Bush would soon sign the formal commission for Mr. Clark, the last step in making him a federal judge.

In an interview earlier today, Mr. Clark said he was just playing it safe.

"If the president signs the certificate then, I'll move forward," he said before going out to a campaign appearance in which he presented a flag to some cub scouts. He said he had no control over Mr. Bush's actions and "right now, I'm running for state representative."

Mr. Clark said he had been trapped by circumstances because he was confirmed on Oct. 2 and the last date for withdrawing from the ballot under Texas law was Sept. 3. "There is no legal way to take it off, so I'm in the race, until Election Day," he said. Asked if he intended to keep campaigning for re-election, he said: "Oh, yes, I go to functions, go block walking, that sort of thing."

Mr. Clark has asserted that he did not know why Mr. Bush had not yet acted, yet he was quoted in this week in Texas Weekly, a political journal, as saying he had asked the White House to delay signing his commission so he could serve another legislative term. Ross Ramsey, the journal's editor, who wrote the article, said Mr. Clark had told him he would be interested in serving through May, when the 20-week session is expected to end.

In his article, Mr. Ramsey said Mr. Clark's presence in the Legislature when it convenes in January might be crucial to Republican hopes to retain the speakership in what is expected to be a close race.

Senators Schumer and Kennedy, both of whom serve on the Judiciary committee, said in their letter that Mr. Clark's legislative campaign "appears to be in clear violation of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges." The canons mandate that "a judge refrain from political activity."

Steven Gillers, the vice dean of the New York University Law School and an authority on ethics, said that provisions in both the federal and state codes of conduct mandated that Mr. Clark resign his political office. The Texas code, he said, makes it clear that a candidate for a judicial office has to behave as a judge in avoiding politics. The federal rules require a judge to resign from office when he or she becomes a candidate for political office.

"While a person seeking a judgeship may have an argument that he not give up a political office, this man is, for all intents and purposes, a judge," Mr. Gillers said.

Erwin Chemerinsky, a visiting law professor at Duke University, said Mr. Clark seemed to be using the formality of Mr. Bush's signature to avoid his obligations.

"But judicial ethics is all about removing judges from politics," Mr. Chemerinsky said, and given that Mr. Bush is the president who appointed him, Mr. Clark should not run for office.

Senate Republicans and President Bush have said that there is an urgent need to fill federal judgeships and that action is being blocked by the Democrats who have opposed several of the president's nominees.

In fact, today, at a White House celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month, Mr. Bush criticized the Senate's handling of his nomination of Miguel Estrada to a seat on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"There are senators who are playing politics with this good man's nomination," the president said. "There are senators who would rather not give him the benefit of the doubt, senators looking for a reason to defeat him as opposed to looking for a reason to herald his intelligence, his capabilities, his talent. I strongly object to the way this man is going to be treated in the United States Senate."

The Judiciary Committee recently held a hearing on Mr. Estrada's nomination but has not scheduled a vote.

PALESTINIAN SUICIDE BOMBER

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, as the Senate debates the resolution authorizing the use of force against Iraq, yet another Palestinian suicide bomber killed himself and an innocent bystander in Israel. Twenty-nine others were reportedly injured in that attack.

Those who believe that Saddam Hussein's murderous regime poses no immediate threat to America or our allies would be wise to consider the evidence seized by Israeli forces in their own war against terrorism. According to recent press reports, Iraqi Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan personally directed the transfer of funds to the families of suicide bombers in amounts ranging from $10,000 to $25,000. The delusional butchers in Baghdad may view this money as a sort of "martyr fund", in reality it is no more than a "murder fund."

Palestinian and Iraqi extremists are cut from the same cloth as the al-Qaida terrorists who attacked our shores. As a threat to human life and decency, there is only one way to deal with these fanatics and that is to destroy them.

The innocent victims of this latest suicide bombing are in my thoughts and prayers. I ask all my colleagues to join me in honoring all those killed by terrorists in the United States and abroad, particularly in Israel.

SENATOR BYRD: ELOQUENTLY RESISTING THE RUSH TO WAR

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I welcome this opportunity to commend our outstanding colleague, Senator ROBERT

BYRD, for his thoughtful and eloquent op-ed article in The New York Times this morning. In his article, Senator BYRD rightfully condemns the failure of Congress to take adequate time to exercise our all-important constitutional responsibility in deciding whether or not America should go to war with Iraq.

Instead of fairly assessing the full consequences of the administration's proposal, Congress is allowing itself to be rushed into a premature decision to go to war. Many of us agree with Senator BYRD, and so do large numbers of Americans across the country.

We owe the Senate and the Nation a more thoughtful deliberation about war. Senator BYRD's article is a powerful statement urging Congress not delegate our constitutional power to the President, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS MUST RESIST THE RUSH TO WAR

(By Robert C. Byrd)

WASHINGTON.—A sudden appetite for war with Iraq seems to have consumed the Bush administration and Congress. The debate that began in the Senate last week is centered not on the fundamental and monumental questions of whether and why the United States should go to war with Iraq, but rather on the mechanics of how best to wordsmith the president's use-of-force resolution in order give him virtually unchecked authority to commit the nation's military to an unprovoked attack on a sovereign nation.

How have we gotten to this low point in the history of Congress? Are we too feeble to resist the demands of a president who is determined to bend the collective will of Congress to his will—a president who is changing the conventional understanding of the term "self-defense"? And why are we allowing the executive to rush our decision-making right before an election? Congress, under pressure from the executive branch, should not hand away its Constitutional powers. We should not hamstring future Congresses by casting such a shortsighted vote. We owe our country a due deliberation.

I have listened closely to the president, I have questioned the members of his war cabinet. I have searched for that single piece of evidence that would convince me that the president must have in his hands, before the month is out, open-ended Congressional authorization to deliver an unprovoked attack on Iraq. I remain unconvinced. The president's case for an unprovoked attack is circumstantial at best. Saddam Hussein is a threat, but the threat is not so great that we must be stampeded to provide such authority to this president just weeks before an election.

Why are we being hounded into action on a resolution that turns over to President Bush the Congress's Constitutional power to declare war? This resolution would authorize the president to use the military forces of this nation wherever, whenever and however he determines, and for as long as he determines, if he can somehow make a connection to Iraq. It is a blank check for the president to take whatever action he feels "is necessary and appropriate in order to defend the national security of the United States against the continuing threat posed by Iraq." This broad resolution underwrites, promotes and endorses the unprecedented Bush doctrine of preventive war and preemptive strikes—detailed in a recent publication, "National Security Strategy of the United States"—against any nation that the president, and the president alone, determines to be a threat.

We are at the gravest of moments. Members of Congress must not simply walk away from their Constitutional responsibilities. We are the directly elected representatives of the American people, and the American people expect us to carry out our duty, not simply hand it off to this or any other president. To do so would be to fail the people we represent and to fall woefully short of our sworn oath to support and defend the Constitution.

We may not always be able to avoid war, particularly if it is thrust upon us, but Congress must not attempt to give away the authority to determine when war is to be declared. We must not allow any president to unleash the dogs of war at his own discretion and for an unlimited period of time.

Yet that is what we are being asked to do. The judgment of history will not be kind to us if we take this step.

Members of Congress should take time out and go home to listen to their constituents. We must not yield to this absurd pressure to act now, 27 days before an election that will determine the entire membership of the House of Representatives and that of a third of the Senate. Congress should take the time to hear from the American people, to answer their remaining questions and to put the frenzy of ballot-box politics behind us before we vote. We should hear them well, because while it is Congress that casts the vote, it is the American people who will pay for a war with the lives of their sons and daughters.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred June 20, 2000 in New York NY. Amanda Milan, a 27-year-old transgendered woman, died after her throat was slashed with a knife outside the Port Authority. Witnesses say that a group of taxi drivers cheered and applauded as the crime was committed and shouted anti-transgender remarks. One of the perpetrators shouted phrases like "You're a man!" and made crude reference to the victim's gender. Three men were arrested in connection with the incident.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CONFLICT

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, during the summer I cautioned that we had problems: the terrorism war, the Middle East, Iraq, and we needed to put first things first. Success in the terrorism war depends in large measure on the cooperation and support of the Arab world. Obviously, this support would sharply diminish with an invasion of Iraq. The Israeli-Palestinian conflict had gotten out of hand with daily suicide bombings and we needed to stabilize the peace process before invading. More importantly, I was convinced that any imminent threat from Saddam would be handled by Israel without debate. I ask unanimous consent a copy of these thoughts published in the Charleston, SC Post and Courier back in August be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Post and Courier, Aug. 30, 2002]

ISRAEL-PALESTINE CRISIS, NOT SADDAM, SHOULD BE BUSH'S PRIORITY

(By Senator Ernest F. Hollings)

We have problems:

- (1) The Muslim extremists' attack on 9/11 starting the Terrorism War.
- (2) The Israeli-Palestinian conflict.
- (3) The Saudi Arabian and other Muslim support of terrorists.
- (4) At the same time, the need for Muslim support in the Terrorism War.
- (5) Iraq.

For the moment, the Iraq problem is easily solved. Our friend Israel, with its Mossad Intelligence, knows the Iraqi threat—nuclear, chemical, or biological. In 1981, they didn't wait for the nuclear plant to be completed in Baghdad. They knocked it out and today stand ready to knock out such a threat again. We can depend on Israel for this. But Israel must depend on America to get it out of its present fix. Prime Minister Sharon's approach to peace—bulldozing homes, sending in gun ships, and reoccupying Palestinian territories—is creating more terrorists than are being eliminated. We must put first things first. Secure Israel and deal later with Saddam. Mention the Middle East and the extremes take over. There are those who want to eliminate Israel; and those who want to prevent a Palestinian state. It's important to remember a few historical "non-extremes":

- (1) We supported the settlement of Holocaust survivors into the Middle East, and the United States and the United Nations recognized the State of Israel.
- (2) Egypt, Syria, Jordan and the Palestinians went to war with Israel over this and Israel won.
- (3) As a result, the Palestinian losers have been holed up in Gaza and the West Bank for 35 years. The Israelis use the Palestinians in Israel as a workforce, but Palestinian living conditions in Gaza and the West Bank have been semi-prisoner and now prisoner.
- (4) Israel and the world leadership recognized that the condition of the Palestinians could not be sustained and all have announced for a Palestinian state.

Trying to define a Palestinian state and guaranteeing the security of Israel at the same time has always been tenuous. Anwar Sadat tried and was assassinated. Yitzhak Rabin tried and was assassinated. In forming the state of Israel, Palestinians were scattered to Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, Egypt, Kuwait and the world around. Many still consider themselves refugees and live for the day that they can return to Israel. They feel the U.S. support for Israel prevents that return. This enmity toward the U.S. in exacerbated by our support of the corrupt government of Saudi Arabia.

The Saudis are two-faced. They maintain the kingdom by financing the clerics and Madrassa schools against the "Great Satan" United States while securing their national defense from the United States with cheap oil. Not surprisingly 15 of the terrorists on September 11th were from Saudi Arabia. A feeling of hopelessness has developed in Gaza and the West Bank. Youngsters with nothing to lose willingly give their lives to terrorize Israel.

Frustration with the United States' support of Israel is exemplified by attacks on the World Trade Towers in 1993, on our barracks in Lebanon and Saudi Arabia, our embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, the consulate now in Pakistan and martyrs willingly giving their lives to blow up the USS Cole, the Pentagon and again the World Trade Center. A cause against Israel and the United States has developed in the Muslim world. A recent Gallup poll in Pakistan shows that 80 percent of the people in Pakistan consider Osama bin Laden a war hero.

When President Bush took office, he was determined not to pursue President Clinton's full-court press for peace in the Middle East. He applied "benign neglect" for 16 months. Now that it has his attention, he dismisses the problem by calling for the removal of the elected leader of the Palestinians and the forming of a democratic government in three years. In the Middle East forming a democracy would be more like 30 years. And the best way to guarantee the continuation of Yasser Arafat is for the U.S. president to call for his removal.

Whining, "they hate us," we refuse to discuss or recognize the Palestinian cause. The cause must be confronted. "You can't kill an idea with a sword." The Terrorism War won't be won militarily. Our foreign policy must not be left to the extremes, Sharon and Arafat. Five years from now, 10 years from now, 50 years from now there will be an Israel and there will be a Palestine. The only course is for the Israelis and the Palestinians to learn to live together. For this to occur, President Bush must personally meet with the Middle East leaders and work out a realistic step-by-step institution for the security of Israel and the State of Palestine. Only after that can America get the support we need around the globe for the Terrorism War and the overthrow of Saddam.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The President's policy is correct, but his implementation miserable. One would hope that, with an imminent threat, the Congressional leadership is corralled quietly, briefed, and allies consulted for whatever action is taken. On the contrary, this President started off by threatening friends and foes alike blabbing, "You are either with us or against us," "We are the world superpower," "I don't need the U.N.," "I don't need the Congress." He seemed totally oblivious to the fact that he is going in two different directions at the same time.

Success in the war on terrorism is largely dependent on support of the Arab world, but with the President's abruptness and braggadocio, that support could disappear with the invasion of an Arab country. The President thinks leadership is announcing without any massaging. His policy of preventive war was made to appear that war was our first choice. At one time the President managed to have the international community united against us.

Now, it seems that President Bush has been housebroken on foreign policy. He has asked for the approval of Congress; he has presented his case to the United Nations; and, amazingly, last week said that for the United States, "War is the last option." In turn, some of our European allies have come on board so that we now have a coalition, the United Nations is strengthening its inspection resolution and finally—itself. The resolution of approval by the Congress for the President to take action has now been changed to make sense. While the threat is not imminent, the goal is desirable and the failure of Congress and the President to move together at this point would seriously damage our creditability and cause us irreparable harm in foreign affairs.

LIGHTS ON AFTER SCHOOL! DAY

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to recognize today as Lights On After School! Day. Lights On After School! is a project of the Afterschool Alliance to open the doors of after-school programs around the country to neighbors, community leaders, and the media so that everyone understands the importance of after-school programs to providing children of working parents with a safe place to be until their parents are home and providing all children with cultural and academic opportunities. Last year, more than 400,000 people participated in Lights On After School! events and I hope that even more will participate this year.

I have been a longtime supporter of the 21st Century Community Learning Centers program, which provides federal support for local after-school centers. For years, I have worked hard, as have many others, including Senator JEFFORDS and Senator BOXER, to increase support for these centers. And, with the appropriation having grown from $750,000 in fiscal year 1995 to $1 billion in fiscal year 2002, I think we've been phenomenally successful. I'm very disappointed that the President wants to freeze support for these programs, but I'm pleased that the Senate Appropriations Committee's education appropriations bill increases funding for fiscal year 2003 by $90 million. I hope that we can do even better in the end.

I can think of few programs with as wide-ranging support as these centers.

Parents, teachers, youth groups, law enforcement, and others all recognize that providing extensive, effective after-school programs is one of the most important things we can do to support working parents and to help our children be safe and reach their potential in school and in life.

As evidence, a survey taken in August by the Afterschool Alliance found that nine in ten voters agree that there should be organized activities for children and teens after school every day that provide opportunities for them to learn.

By more than two to one, voters disagree with the President's proposal to freeze federal funding for after-school programs, and sixty-three percent are concerned that existing programs may have to reduce their services or close their doors due to lack of increased funding.

More than nine in ten voters who have children in after-school programs believe that their children are safer and less likely to be involved in juvenile crime than children who aren't in after-school programs.

Finally, 92 percent of these parents say their children do better in reading, writing and math because of after-school programs, and 87 percent say that their children are less likely to use alcohol and drugs because of after-school programs.

I thank the Afterschool Alliance for all their work, and urge my colleagues to join me in commemorating Lights On After School!

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss an issue of great importance to our Nation's children: afterschool programs. Children are much more likely to be involved in crime, substance abuse, and teenage pregnancy in the hours after school. In fact, about 10 percent of violent juvenile crimes are committed between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. alone. The Urban Institute estimates that at least 7 million and as many as 15 million "latchkey kids" go to an empty house on any given afternoon. These children need a place to go—an empty house should not be an option.

It is essential that we provide children with organized activities or programs to go to during the critical afterschool hours. According to the Departments of Education and Health and Human Services, extracurricular activities like those provided by after-school programs have proven to reduce the number of students likely to use drugs by 50 percent and the number of students likely to become teen parents by 33 percent. Furthermore, studies have shown that students who participate in extracurricular activities have better grades, feel greater attachment to school, have lower truancy rates and reach higher levels of achievement in college.

We have made great progress in the last 5 years toward making these kinds of programs more widely available. Through the 21st Century Community Learning Center Program, federal support for local afterschool programs increased from $1 million in fiscal year 1997 to $1 billion in fiscal year 2002. As a result, over 900 communities across the Nation are now providing their children with a positive alternative to unsupervised care. In addition, Senator ENSIGN and I offered an amendment to the Leave No Child Behind Act to increase funding for afterschool programs. As enacted, the bill will raise afterschool funding to $2.5 billion by the year 2007.

To highlight the growing need for afterschool programs, the Afterschool Alliance—a nonprofit organization dedicated to ensuring that all children and youth have access to quality, affordable afterschool programs by the year 2010—has announced the third annual nationwide day of awareness for afterschool programs called "Lights On After School!" Today, schools, community centers, museums, libraries, and parks across America will host activities to inform families about the places currently open to children after school and the need to provide additional centers where children can participate in engaging, stimulating activities until their parents return from work.

I applaud the Afterschool Alliance for recognizing the important role of afterschool programs in the lives of children, families, and communities, and I enthusiastically support the effort to build awareness through "Lights On After School!" Promoting the safety and well-being of our children is the best way to ensure that they have a genuine opportunity to succeed.

CATOCTIN MOUNTAIN NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, on October 1, I introduced legislation, together with Senator MIKULSKI, to redesignate Catoctin Mountain Park as the Catoctin Mountain National Recreation Area.

Catoctin Mountain Park is a hidden gem in our National Park System. Home to Camp David, the Presidential retreat, it has been aptly described as "America's most famous unknown park." Comprising nearly 6,000 acres of the eastern reach of the Appalachian Mountains in Maryland, the park is rich in history as well as outdoor recreation opportunities. Visitors can enjoy camping, picnicking, cross-country skiing, fishing, as well as the solitude and beauty of the woodland mountain and streams in the park.

Catoctin Mountain Park had its origins during the Great Depression as one of 46 Recreational Demonstration Areas, RDA, established under the authority of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The Federal Government purchased more than 10,000 acres of mountain land that had been heavily logged and was no longer productive to demonstrate how sub-marginal land could be turned into a productive recreational area and help put people back to work. From 1936 through 1941, hundreds of workers under the Works Progress Administration and later the Civilian Conservation Corps were employed in reforestation activities and in the construction of a number of camps, roads and other facilities, including the camp now known as Camp David, and one of the earliest, if not the oldest, camps for disabled individuals. In November 1936, administrative authority for the Catoclin RDA was transferred to the National Park Service by Executive Order.

In 1942, concern about President Roosevelt's health and safety led to the selection of Catoclin Mountain, and specifically Camp Hi-Catoclin as the location for the President's new retreat. Subsequently approximately 5,000 acres of the area was transferred to the State of Maryland, becoming Cunningham Falls State Park in 1954. The remaining 5,770 acres of the Catoclin Recreation Demonstration Area was renamed Catoclin Mountain Park by the Director of the National Park Service in 1954. Unfortunately, the Director failed to include the term "National" in the title and the park today remains one of eleven units in the National Park System, all in the National Capital Region, that do not have this designation.

The proximity of Catoclin Mountain Park, Camp David, and Cunningham Falls State Park, and the differences between national and State park management, has caused longstanding confusion for visitors to the area. Catoclin Mountain Park is continually misidentified by the public as containing lake and beach areas associated with Cunningham Falls State Park, being operated by the State of Maryland, or being closed to the public because of the presence of Camp David. National Park employees spend countless hours explaining, assisting and redirecting visitors to their desired destinations.

My legislation would help to address this situation and clearly identify this park as a unit of the National Park System by renaming it the Catoclin Mountain National Recreation Area. The mission and characteristics of this park, which include the preservation of significant historic resources and important natural areas in locations that provide outdoor recreation for large numbers of people, make this designation appropriate. This measure would not change access requirements or current recreational uses occurring within the park. But it would assist the visiting public in distinguishing between the many units of the State and Federal systems. It will also, in my judgment, help promote tourism by enhancing public awareness of the National Park unit.

I urge approval of this legislation.

ECONOMIC GROWTH NOW

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, today the members of the Senate are focused on Iraq. There's no task more serious than deciding whether to send our young men and women into harm's way. My position is clear: The time has come for decisive action to eliminate the threat of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction once and for all.

But as we act to defend America's interests abroad, we must also act to make America strong at home. With 8 million people out of work and millions more struggling to make ends meet, our government is falling down on the job of protecting economic security. To restore an economic environment where businesses are creating jobs and parents are earning a better living for their children, I believe we need to act, and act now. I want to explain very specifically why and how we should act. And I call on the President and my colleagues to join together immediately to take decisive action.

Nobody is a greater optimist about America's future than me. Our long-term economic outlook remains strong because our free enterprise system remains strong—our spirit of innovation, our leadership in new technologies, and of course our people's hard work and productivity.

But sound economic fundamentals and strong economic growth are not things we can take for granted. They are things we have to work for.

Like all Americans, I have hoped that our economy is on the way to a speedy recovery. While I continue to hold out hope, I do not believe that hope can stand in the way of action any longer. There is too much uncertainty and there are too many disturbing signs. Economic indicators that had started to turn up, including consumer confidence and manufacturing, have turned back down again. Many industries, particularly telecommunications, have far too much capacity, and they will continue to cut back in order to restore profitability. Job growth remains stagnant, and CEOs report that they are planning to cut jobs rather than hire. As more and more Americans worry about their prospects, the last bulwark of the economy, consumer spending, shows signs of weakening.

We should not overreact. We need to keep our faith in the fundamental strength of our economy. But we cannot turn away from the reality we face. This administration has spent months saying that recovery is just around the corner, but wishful thinking will not create jobs, pay the bills, or get the economy going again.

America is right to prepare for action against Iraq. But we ought to apply that same logic to our economy. If you look at the recent economic evidence, the risks of inaction on our economy now outweigh the risks of action. We cannot wait until thousands more people lose their jobs before taking steps to defend our economic security. We can and should take preemptive action against this economic slump.

The President's plan is: Do nothing to promote economic growth in the short-run, and pretend that deficit-exploding tax cuts for the wealthiest will promote economic growth in the long-run. That is wrong for our economy and our security.

What our economy needs is the reverse prescription: a shot-in-the arm in the short-term, and a tighter grip on fiscal discipline in the long-term.

Contracting the economy in this environment makes no economic sense. On the other hand, stimulating the economy while exploding the long-term deficit would be self-defeating. The loss of confidence in long-term fiscal discipline can undermine both long-term confidence and short-term progress.

With a shot-in-the-arm now and a tighter grip on fiscal discipline in the long run, we can have the best of both worlds. Right now, we can increase demand, prevent a negative or even deflationary cycle, create jobs, and get incomes growing again. In the long run, we can get back to balanced budgets and maintain the investment climate we need for prosperity.

Let me be very specific about what we should do.

On the long-run side, we have to take two major steps. Number one, we have to tackle excessive spending by restoring the budget enforcement rules that have lapsed. Congress should not go home without making sure these rules are back in place. If Congress and the administration can't agree on spending bills before the election, let us at least show the voters that we are serious about holding down spending.

Number two, we must ask our most fortunate citizens to forgo the full extent of future tax cuts. Since the President took office, a $5.6 trillion surplus has almost entirely disappeared, and the biggest single reason was a tax cut whose full cost was over $2 trillion. As I have said before, we need to ask Americans at the very top of the economic ladder to live with smaller tax cuts than the tax bill passed last year. If we stop cuts in the top two rates, eliminate new deductions for very high-income earners, and triple the estate tax exemption without repealing it, we can save over $1.3 trillion in the next two decades.

This kind of fiscal discipline will have at least five advantages for our country: Number one, it will help bring us back to the strong economic fundamentals that led to growth during the 1990s. Number two, it will enable us to save for grave national security needs. Number three, it will help us save Social Security and address the coming explosion of baby boom retirements. Number four, it will reduce our dependence on foreign capital. Number five, it will allow us to confront emergencies when we need to. The fiscal surplus inherited by President Bush has helped our country to meet its challenges since September 11. Restoring long-term fiscal discipline will help us meet the challenges of the future.

To meet the challenge of today, we need decisive action that satisfies two basic principles. First, we should provide an efficient and effective spur to the economy. Second, the effect must be immediate and temporary—with incentives for business investment and consumer demand that will jumpstart the economy now, and get out of the way when they are no longer needed.

We all have to admit that the stimulus package of last spring did not meet that test. In the fall, I advocated a stimulus package that would have provided greater depreciation in the near-term, then tapered off quickly. That package would have been efficient and temporary. Unfortunately, the President and his party blocked proposals like that because they supported special-interest giveaways that the independent Congressional Budget Office found to be the most ineffective on the market. While we all hoped for the best, the business incentives that eventually passed did not create the surge our country needed. In addition, the tax rebates bypassed in part or in full 50 million Americans who would have been most likely to spend the money and increase economic activity.

This time, we should do it right. Here is how.

First, and most important, we have to make sure the economic uncertainty and higher energy prices we're likely to face this winter don't hurt the economic confidence and consumer spending that have been so critical over the last year. Today, I am proposing a one-time refundable energy tax cut of $500 per family. This tax cut will put money into the pockets of Americans who will spend it where they need it most: to pay their heating bills; make their homes more energy-efficient, and prevent higher energy prices from squeezing out other vital needs. Unlike last year's rebate, this energy tax credit will leave no American behind.

Earlier this week, this administration's own experts said that families in the Midwest will be paying 19 percent more for natural gas and 22 percent more for heating oil. Increases in the Northeast will be even higher. All the price hikes will fall particularly hard on the elderly, who have watched their life savings disappear in the stock market and have no way to make up the lost income.

Americans are prepared to sacrifice to win the war on terrorism and in Iraq. But America can win a war without leaving old people to cut back on their medicine to keep from shivering in the dark. We can protect people against rising oil prices and, at the same time, reduce our country's dependence on Middle Eastern oil. This administration approaches energy the same way it approaches the economy: doing nothing in the short-term and ignoring the big problems in the long-term. That is wrong.

I also continue to believe we should take the steps to stimulate the economy that the administration failed to take earlier this year. To encourage businesses to invest, we should raise the bonus for investing in new equipment from 30 percent to 45 percent—a 50 percent increase—but do it through June 30 of next year only. This will do what the administration's stimulus has failed to do so far: persuade businesses to get off the fence and put their money to work in our economy.

We also should act to prevent painful property tax increases and education cuts at the State level, giving States relief to deal with what the Wall Street Journal this week said is a $58 billion budget gap. The Senate has already acted to provide relief in the quickest possible way—through the Medicaid program—and there is no excuse for further delay.

Last but not least, we have to change a terrible reality: At a time when the index of Help Wanted listings is at historic lows, we are set to cut off unemployment benefits for nearly a million out-of-work Americans just three days after Christmas. These are good people who want nothing more than to get back to work. Last September, 800,000 Americans had been out of work for 6 months or more. By December, that total will have climbed to over 2 million. We have to do what is right for the workers who have done the worst in this economy and extend their benefits. They are sure to pump the money right back into our economy.

I call on the President and my colleagues in both parties to put politics aside and come together immediately to take these urgent steps to get our economy going again. Americans deserve nothing less from us.

HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, as the ranking member of the Special Committee on Aging, and in honor of this year's Hispanic Heritage Month, I rise today to give special recognition to 104-year-old Jose Rodriguez, who recently has been determined to be the Oldest Hispanic American now living in my State of Idaho. In honoring one man, Jose Rodriguez, this Nation honors all Americans of Hispanic descent.

Hispanic Heritage Month began on September 15 a day which marks the anniversary of independence for five Latin American countries Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua. Mexico achieved its independence on September 16, and Chile on September 18.

This being a Nation of immigrants, it is only fitting that Jose Rodriguez is himself an immigrant from Mexico. Some of us have been blessed by being born in Idaho. Others, like Jose, have been wise and bold enough to journey, sometimes great distances, to claim these blessings. He chose Idaho because Idaho was in his heart a place where family, faith, and freedom flourish.

Jose was born in Doctor Arrollo, in the State of Nuevo Leon, Mexico, on March 19, 1898. In 1913, at the tender age of 15, he joined in the Mexican revolution led by Pancho Villa. He arrived in the United States in 1922 and settled in Eagle Pass, TX. He married his wife Guadalupe, who he knew from childhood, in 1929. They had seven children together: Five sons and two daughters. While his wife passed away a few years ago and he misses her, Mr. Rodriguez enjoys his more than 80 grandchildren and numerous great-grandchildren, who carry on his legacy.

In the 1950s, Mr. Rodriguez moved his family to Idaho where he worked as a farm worker and crew leader for most of his life. According to one of his sons, the hallmark of Jose's life has been his generosity. He is a man known to help others, especially those in need.

Still living independently today, Mr. Rodriguez spends summers in Idaho with his son Meliton and winters in Arizona with his daughter Marina. Jose still cares for himself, takes daily walks, and credits his long life to, in his words, "God's good will and living a healthy life." That is what aging should be.

That type of wonderfully positive outlook have no doubt contributed to his longevity.

When Jose Rodriguez was born, Idaho had only been a State for 7 years and 8 months. That year, the first photographs taken with a flashbulb were produced and 1,000 automobiles were manufactured, up from a total of 100 the year before. Around that time, a child born in the United States was expected to live less than fifty years. Jose, a child born in Mexico, has more than doubled that expectation.

Jose is part of a large and growing population of Hispanic Americans throughout the nation and especially in Idaho. Within the past decade, the Hispanic population in Idaho has doubled from approximately 50,000 in 1990 to more than 100,000 today. Nationwide, there are now some 26 million people of Hispanic origin in the United States approximately ten percent of the American population. We honor their contributions during Hispanic Heritage Month, which have maintained America's tradition as a rich, cultural melting pot and strengthened our shared national values.

Jose is a trendsetter in another way. Following his example, the number of centenarians those 100 years old or older has grown to 50,000 Americans today. In the next 50 years, according to Census Bureau estimates, there will be between 800,000 and one million people 100 years or older living in the United States.

Jose Rodriguez is a man of honor. It is with great pride that I rise today to recognize him, and I thank him for allowing me this privilege.

LOW-FAT, LOW-CALORIE CUISINE

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today at the weekly Thursday Republican Lunch group, Lifestyle Advantage from Highmark Blue Cross/Blue Shield, in collaboration with Dr. Dean Ornish, served a gourmet, low-calorie, virtually no-fat, lunch with the following menu: Tuscan Vegetable Minestrone, Roasted Vegetable Lasagne, Caesar Salad, Apple-Raisin Strudel, Vanilla ala mode with caramel sauce.

As explained by Ms. Anna Silberman and Ms. Marlene Janco, Executives of Lifestyle Advantage/Highmark, the lunch contained approximately 450 calories compared to about 850 calories with regular ingredients.

There was real enthusiasm among the 27 Republican Senators who were very complimentary about the taste, elegance, and healthy content of the cuisine.

When one senator was being served the apple-raisin strudel with vanilla ice cream—actually ice milk—topped by caramel sauce and was told it was fat-free and low-calorie, he replied:

"Next they'll want to sell me the Brooklyn Bridge."

When assured that it was fat-free and low-calorie, he was very much impressed. Other senators marveled at the tastiness of the caesar salad, especially contrasted to its ordinarily high-caloric content. The Tuscan vegetable minestrone had a special quality with roasted vegetables. Again, the roasted vegetables in the lasagne made it especially tasty.

The Capitol dining service is now considering adding to the regular menu on both the House and Senate sides low-fat, low-calorie tasty cuisine as demonstrated by today's lunch.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

IN RECOGNITION OF JOSEPH TORREZ

• Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I honor the accomplishments of Principal Joseph Torrez of Tucumcari, NM, who is in the Nation's capital today to be recognized as the 2002 New Mexico National Distinguished Principal of the Year. He was one of 63 principals from across the country who will be honored by the United States Department of Education and the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

Joseph is a product of the New Mexico higher education system, having received both his undergraduate degree and Master's degree from New Mexico Highlands University. Since completing his master's degree, he has dedicated his life to educating New Mexico's children. As a language arts teacher at Taos High School, Thoreau High School and Memorial Middle School in Las Vegas, NM, he has touched the hearts and minds of his students, while generating interest and enthusiasm in learning.

Three years ago Joseph agreed to move from the classroom to the principal's office. In this role he has shown leadership skills that have earned him the respect of parents and teachers alike.

One of his many accomplishments is the development of a program that targets at-risk kids by providing them with after-school activities. These include recreation, assistance with school work, and instruction on ways to become involved as volunteers in the community.

This program is not limited simply to the children in these families, however. He has used money from a state grant to assist parents of his students obtain the skills needed to succeed in the workforce.

Joseph's contributions to the community are not limited simply to his work in the Tucumcari schools. He has also encouraged his students to aid the local homeless shelter, collect food, and visit senior citizens.

I commend Joseph for his hard work and dedication to help students, their parents and the community of Tucumcari. Joseph has set the bar for excellence through his exemplary efforts. He has used creative and innovative means to improve the lives of his students and beyond, through reaching out to the community.

I am proud to honor Principal Joseph Torrez, our 2002 New Mexico National Distinguished Principal. On behalf of the Senate and New Mexico, I thank this fellow New Mexican for making a difference in our children's lives.●

NORTH DAKOTA'S 164TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

• Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, it was 60 years ago that 2,000 men from North Dakota's 164th Infantry Regiment performed heroically in a savage battle in the South Pacific. It marked the first time the U.S. Army launched an offensive operation in that war and stands today as a critical juncture in World War II.

Coming from almost every city and village in North Dakota, the members of the 164th Infantry were North Dakota's National Guard and traced their unit's heritage to the Indian wars on the American frontier. Its history was one of distinction, most notably marked by a spectacular ten Medals of Honor its men won in the Philippines in 1899.

Called to active duty early in 1941, the North Dakotans were ordered to the West Coast the day after Pearl Harbor, and landed in the South Pacific in the spring of 1942.

Meanwhile, on the island of Guadalcanal, U.S. Marines had begun America's first offensive action against Japan. By autumn, it was a precarious deadlock and the 164th Infantry was sent in October 13. By noon it had its first casualty. Corporal Kenneth Foubert of Company M of Grand Forks, North Dakota, was killed in a bombing run by Japanese planes. As Japanese ground patrols tested U.S. positions, the 164th Infantry advanced, the first unit of the Army to go on the offensive in WWII.

An intense Japanese attack, the largest battle fought on Guadalcanal, occurred October 24-25. In "Citizens as Soldiers," a history of the North Dakota National Guard, authors Jerry Cooper and Glenn Smith tell how a battalion of the 164th Infantry was sent to reinforce the Marines. Despite the blackness of night, made darker by a heavy tropical rain, the 164th Infantry, over narrow trails slippery with mud, followed its Marine escorts to the front line, holding on to the backpacks of the man in front of them to avoid being lost.

Fighting side by side with the Marines, the 164th Infantry poured relentless fire through the night into continuous waves of oncoming Japanese. At dusk of the next day, the Japanese attacked again. The situation was precarious and cooks, messengers, and clerks manned positions and waited for the worst. Even the musicians of the North Dakota band were pressed into service as litter bearers. Every member of the 164th had a role in that battle, the fiercest of the campaign.

At one outpost, 18 Marines, many seriously wounded, were surrounded. The 164th Infantry's Sgt. Kevin McCarthy of Jamestown, ND, used a small, lightly armored, open topped vehicle to make repeated trips to the desperate men and, under heavy fire, rescued them all. For his bravery, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

By dawn, it was clear the enemy had suffered a disastrous defeat. In front of the 164th Infantry were 1,700 dead Japanese. The North Dakota unit, meanwhile, suffered only 26 killed and 52 wounded.

Impressed, the Marines' commanding general sent the North Dakotans a message that said the Marines "salute you for a most wonderful piece of work. We are honored to serve with such a unit. Our hat is off to you."

Lt. Col. Robert Hall of Jamestown, ND, received the Navy Cross for his leadership of the battalion during this crucial action.

The fight for Guadalcanal continued into November when the 164th was assigned to drive Japanese defenders off a series of ridges. From November 20-27, the battle raged. It was the bloodiest week of the entire war for the unit. More than 100 men were killed and some 200 wounded. Not until February did the Japanese finally flee the island.

It was none too soon. Guadalcanal had taken its toll. The 164th was no longer combat effective. It was down to less than two-thirds its authorized number. Most men had lost 20 pounds or more. They suffered from malaria, heat exhaustion, exotic tropical diseases. All told, the unit buried 147 men on the island, had 309 wounded, and another 133 casualties from shock, trauma, and neurosis.

It was little wonder that the Americans called the island "green hell" and Japanese referred to it as the "island of death."

The regiment received a Presidential Unit Citation for its outstanding contributions and personal plaudits from General George Marshall, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Admiral William Halsey, commander of the South Pacific forces. For Guadalcanal, men of the regiment won a Navy Cross, five Distinguished Service Crosses, 40 Silver Stars, more than 300 Purple Hearts, and many Soldier's Medals and Legions of Merit. One of its proud boasts was that it would leave no one behind and, indeed, it had no men missing in action.

The survivors are now old men. They have had America's hat tipped to them before, but they deserve it again, one more time before they leave us to rejoin their comrades, brave young men who left North Dakota on troop trains in the bitter February cold so long ago to answer their Nation's call.●

COMMEMORATING THE BIRTH OF GEORGE ROGERS CLARK

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about an important event in Indiana, the 250th birthday of George Rogers Clark. Vincennes University, located in Vincennes, IN, is hosting a celebration that will be held on November 19, 2002. I am pleased to add my voice to those honoring a man who is one of the greatest figures in American frontier history.

George Rogers Clark was born on November 19, 1752, to John and Ann Rogers Clark. Although Clark was literate, he was not known as a scholar. Instead, like George Washington, he took an interest in surveying, a high risk profession that presented the possibility of great reward. Surveying required intelligence, determination, physical strength, resilience, and a thorough knowledge of wilderness survival skills.

When the Revolution began, the Virginia legislature appointed Clark to the position of Commander of the Frontier Militia. He set out, in May 1778, with a small force to battle the British and their Native American allies. During the summer, Clark and his troops ousted the British from Kaskaskia, Cohokia, and Vincennes.

On December 17, 1778, British Lt. Governor Henry Hamilton and his troops retook Fort Sackville, the important stronghold in the City of Vincennes. Clark led about 170 men on a grueling 18-day winter trek from Kaskaskia, through present day Illinois, up to Fort Sackville. Clark and his men moved relentlessly, braving cold weather and crossing freezing rivers, in an effort to stop further British incursions. Then, in a brilliant maneuver, he duped the British into believing that he had gathered a considerably larger militia than he actually had. This tactic worked, and Lt. Governor Henry Hamilton surrendered Fort Sackville to Clark on February 25, 1779. For the next several years, Clark conducted successful campaigns against the Shawnee. He and his forces maintained control of most of the Northwest. This success not only had military significance, but it also strengthened America's post-war claims to the western territories. During this period, Clark spent his own money to help maintain his small army.

George Rogers Clark's courage and leadership have been recognized and carefully remembered in the Hoosier State. President Franklin Roosevelt dedicated the memorial of George Rogers Clark in the City of Vincennes on June 14, 1936. This memorial is the focal point of George Rogers Clark National Historical Park that had 128,000 visitors last year.

I appreciate the efforts of Vincennes University and the George Rogers Clark National Historical Park to honor this remarkable man and his contributions to American history. This event will be a testament to the exceptional accomplishments and overall character of George Rogers Clark and his men.●

THE AWARDING OF THE 2002 NOBEL PRIZE IN CHEMISTRY TO PROFESSOR JOHN B. FENN

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to express my heartfelt congratulations to a former long-time Connecticut resident and member of the Yale University faculty, Professor John B. Fenn, for being jointly awarded the 2002 Nobel Prize in Chemistry, the world's highest honor for scientific achievement.

I cannot imagine another person for whom this prestigious award is more richly deserved. Professor Fenn has conducted pioneering research on powerful analytical methods for studying biological macromolecules such as proteins. His work has revolutionized the development of new medicines and has broken new ground in the early diagnosis of certain cancers. The possibility of analyzing proteins in detail has led to an increased understanding of the processes of life. Because of the advances resulting from Professor Fenn's work, researchers can now rapidly and simply identify the constituent proteins contained within a substance. They can also create three-dimensional pictures showing what protein molecules look like in solution in order to better understand their functions within a cell. In addition to assisting the diagnosis of breast and prostate cancer, applications of this groundbreaking area of research are also being reported in other areas; for example, foodstuff control, pharmaceutical development, environmental analysis, and the diagnosis of malaria.

Mass spectrometry is a very important analytical method used in practically all chemistry laboratories the world over. This process lets scientists rapidly identify a substance and is used in areas such as testing for doping and illegal drugs. For much of the 20th century, the technique had been used to identify only small-or medium-sized molecules. In the latter half of the 1980s, Professor Fenn and his colleague Koichi Tanaka, with whom he is sharing the prize, developed methods that make it possible to analyze biological macromolecules as well. Professor Fenn has been honored for finding ways to extend the technique to large molecules by making the individual molecules separate and spread out as a cloud in a gas without losing their original structure. In the method that he published in 1988, electrospray ionisation—ESI—charged droplets of protein solution are produced which shrink as the water evaporates. Eventually, freely hovering protein ions remain, and their masses may then be determined by setting them in motion and measuring their time of flight over a known distance.

Professor Fenn received a B.A. in chemistry from Berea College in 1937 and a Ph.D. from Yale in 1940. After a dozen years in industry, he was appointed director of Project SQUID, a Navy program of basic and applied research in jet propulsion administered by Princeton University, where he later became professor of aerospace and mechanical sciences in 1959. He returned to Yale in 1967 as professor of applied science and chemistry, a post he held for 13 years. From 1980 until his retirement in 1987, he was a professor of chemical engineering. He became a research scientist at Yale after being named Emeritus in 1987. In 1994, he moved to Virginia Commonwealth University as a research professor. He has served as a visiting professor at Trento University in Italy, the University of Tokyo, the Indian Institute of Science at Bangalore, and the Chinese Academy of Science in Beijing, and as a distinguished lecturer at several other institutions. Author of one book and over a hundred papers, he is sole or co-inventor on 19 patents. Much of his research has centered on the properties and uses of supersonic free jets expanding into vacuum. Such jets can produce molecular beams with much higher intensities and energies than can the classical effusion ovens they have replaced. Their ability to cool molecules to ultra low temperatures, with or without condensation, has revolutionized molecular spectroscopy and made them versatile sources of clusters and van der Waals molecules. In mass spectrometry, Professor Fenn is best known for his work in the development and applications of electrospray ionization.

I speak with utmost sincerity in expressing my gratitude to Professor Fenn for the lifetime of contributions or, more accurately, several lifetimes' worth of contributions that he has rendered in service to our Nation in his research on mass spectrometry. The work resulting from his drive and genius will no doubt improve our lives and our society, and it fills me with exceptional pride to see him recognized for his efforts. Outstanding scientists such as he undertake research to fully realize human and societal potential, and by having had someone as accomplished as Professor Fenn on its faculty, both Connecticut and Yale University have greatly benefited from his groundbreaking work. On behalf of your State and your country, Professor Fenn, please accept my deepest congratulations and thanks.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. LURA POWELL

● Mrs. MURRAY Mr. President, I would like to take a moment today to recognize the accomplishments of Dr. Lura Powell, the Laboratory Director of the Department of Energy's Pacific Northwest National Laboratory in Richland, WA. Dr. Powell will be stepping down at the end of this year and, over the past 2 years as director, has provided many contributions while leading this National Laboratory. I would also like to thank her for her leadership and her commitment to the Tri-Cities Community.

Lura Powell joined the Laboratory after a lengthy career at the Department of Commerce's National Institute of Standards and Technology. During her tenure at NIST, she served as Director of the Advanced Technology Program. She earned the Department of Commerce Gold Medal in 1998. In 2000, Dr. Powell joined Battelle and became the first woman director of the Laboratory. There are several noteworthy successes to mention, including two "Outstanding" ratings from the Department of Energy, the highest rating available, during her tenure. In addition, DOE recently announced its intention to renew the 5-year contract for the Laboratory.

During her tenure, the acquisition of two major pieces of equipment, including a leading-edge supercomputer and the world's first 900 Megahertz wide bore Nuclear Magnetic Resonance spectrometer, will position the laboratory to be a leader in molecular research. Dr. Powell can also be credited with enhancing university partnerships in the Northwest with the University of Washington and Washington State University, as well as the University of Idaho and Oregon State University. Dr. Powell's legacy is the successful combination of academic partnerships with this state-of-the-art laboratory, securing a strong economic future for my state of Washington and the Pacific Northwest region of the United States.

In the Tri-City Community, Dr. Powell has been active in promoting economic growth and providing leadership in the role that science and technology can play in education, work, and our daily lives. In Washington State, Dr. Powell has been a member of the Washington Roundtable and the Washington Technology Alliance Board where she has cared deeply about bringing growth to the state economy.

On behalf of the people of the Tri-Cities and Washington State, I would like to thank Lura Powell for her hard work and know that wherever she goes, those around her will benefit from her leadership, insight, and commitment.●

WEST VIRGINIA VET CENTER RECEIVES AWARD

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER Mr. President, once again I rise to congratulate the Morgantown Vet Center in my State of West Virginia for receiving both the "Clinical Programs of Excellence" award presented by the Department of Veterans Affairs Health Administration and the "Vet Center of Excellence" award presented by VA's Readjustment Counseling Service.

For the second time in a row, the skilled, dedicated staff of the Morgantown Vet Center has been recognized by VA for providing the best of VA care in their field. To receive either of these two awards once would be an outstanding accomplishment. But to receive both of them, twice in a row, by continuing to meet such high standards of care is something to be enormously proud of.

The services provided by the staff at the Morgantown Vet Center include individual and group counseling, family/marital counseling, sexual trauma counseling, substance abuse counseling, vocational and employment assistance, VA claims and benefits information, help for the homeless, and social service and health care referrals. They provide readjustment counseling to combat veterans and their families, including veterans who served during Vietnam, Korea, World War II, and the Persian Gulf.

The staff at the Morgantown Vet Center is extremely dedicated, and literally hundreds of veterans have benefited from their expertise. In fiscal year 2001, 11,528 visits were made to the Morgantown Vet Center, a 41 percent increase in the number of visits for fiscal year 1998. This growth is just one of the many positive facets of Morgantown's program that allowed VA to select them once again as a "Clinical Program of Excellence."

So to each and every one of the staff at the Morgantown Vet Center, thank you again for the exemplary work you do, for your professionalism, your dedication, and your compassion.

NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE WEEK

● Mr. DOMENICI Mr. President, I rise today to celebrate National Wildlife Refuge Week. This week of wildlife education and activities marks the 99th birthday of the National Wildlife Refuge System. Following in the footsteps of one of our first conservationist Presidents, Theodore Roosevelt, who in 1903 instituted the National Wildlife Refuge on Pelican Island in Florida, the National Wildlife Refuge System attentively monitors and preserves wildlife habitats on 538 National Wildlife Refugees spanning 94 million acres. The National Wildlife Refuge System plays a unique and critical role in ensuring Americans a safe, clean, and natural ecosystem where both wildlife and people benefit from a healthy environment.

The National Wildlife Refuge System protects a wide range of wildlife and landscapes throughout the country. In particular, the refuges in the Southwest are necessary to secure the well-being and survival of an assortment of migratory birds, including the bald eagle, who make the Southwest their home during the fall and spring months. The National Wildlife Refuge System concentrates not only on the hands-on aspect of environmental protection but, focuses on the importance of science in determining the future and well-being of wildlife. Specifically, they direct their scientific endeavors towards the accelerating rate of extinction of species and the associated loss of biological diversity coupled with habitat alteration and destruction. Their efforts towards the preservation of wildlife are in conjunction with and for the well-being of Americans and their ability to enjoy a peaceful, natural, and unspoiled national refuge.

The National Wildlife Refuge contributes greatly to ensuring many of New Mexico's natural landmark treasures such as Bitter Lake, Bosque del Apache, Grulla, Las Vegas, Maxwell, San Andres, and Sevilleta. The National Wildlife Refuge has been devoted to the restoration of Sevilleta, making native animals such as deer, elk, coyotes, mountain lions, and various birds and reptiles more abundant and visible. In particular, and of great interest to me, is the Long-Term Ecological Research Project the National Wildlife Refuge System they have launched. Such programs are key to the revitalization of not just Sevilleta, but to all of New Mexico's varying ecosystems. Their project is in line with the Sevilleta National Wildlife Refuge program and the Rio Grande Bosque Initiative that was implemented in 1991.

As part of my concern for New Mexico's wildlife, I included a provision in this year's Interior Appropriations bill providing $1.25 million for the Fish and Wildlife program to design a new research complex for Sevilleta NWR. This facility will support numerous university and Federal agency research programs.

The National Wildlife Refuge System consistently helps prevent and regulate environmental disasters through their highly cultivated set of management tools that includes farming, prescribed burning, exotic plant control, moist soil management, and water level manipulation. Without the perseverance of such organizations as the National Wildlife Refuge System, we would not be able to successfully tackle the many environmental obstacles that stand in the way of a healthy and well managed ecosystem.

I wish the National Wildlife Refuge System a great week of learning, exploration, and fun and a continued success in their wildlife and environmental work. Although I cannot be in my beloved home of New Mexico for this noble event, I congratulate this organization for their almost one hundred years of conservation and public works.●

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN CIVICS AND GOVERNMENT

●Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the work of the Center for Civic Education. The center offers outstanding professional development institutes for teachers of civics and government throughout the United States.

While the center is based in my home State of California, their programs are administered nationally by a network of State and congressional district coordinators. Many of you are familiar with We the People: The Citizen and the Constitution, a nationally acclaimed civic education program for upper elementary, middle, and high school students. I know that a number of you have met with the high school students who participate in the We the People national finals, a three-day academic competition in which students respond to questions on the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights.

The center-sponsored professional development institutes are offered at national, regional, and State levels. These institutes are designed to instruct teachers in the content and methodology required to deliver quality education in civics and government. Institutes are usually one week long and provide rigorous content knowledge, innovative teaching techniques, and authentic assessment practices. Regional institutes provide an opportunity for teachers from neighboring states to share best practices in civic education.

This past year, 27 regional and State institutes were held in Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. A Juvenile Justice Institute was offered for teachers of incarcerated youth, and a civics and government institute was held for university professors of education.

The center also sponsors a more intensive 3-week National Academy for teachers from across the country; the academy is held in California. Participants in the academy study major works of political theory such as Aristotle's Politics, Hobbes' Leviathan, Locke's Second Treatise, The Federalist, anti-federalist writings, and U.S. Supreme Court opinions. They also discuss relevant knowledge and creative ways to apply this experience when they return to the classroom.

National institutes for elementary school teachers and teachers interested in advanced content knowledge were held for the first time this year. These institutes were conducted in Virginia and Missouri, respectively. In 2003, the center will increase the number of summer professional development institutes offered.

The poor performance of students on the 1998 National Assessment for Educational Progress, NAEP, Civics Report Card can be traced to inadequate teacher preparation and insufficient quantity of instruction. We know that outstanding programs and student outcomes are directly attributed to adequately prepared teachers.

Investment in professional development opportunities, such as the summer institutes and the National Academy sponsored by the Center for Civic Education, are helping to address this critical situation of teacher preparedness in the field of civics and government.

I commend the center for their efforts and applaud their investment in one of our most treasured resources, the American classroom teacher. ●

TRIBUTE TO DANIEL A. BENAC

●Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am delighted to bring to the attention of my colleagues a great American. Mr. Daniel A. Benac of Hillman, MI has made service to his country and community a cornerstone of his life. In 1942, Daniel answered the call to serve his country and joined the United States Army's 103rd Infantry Division. After being honorably discharged from the Army, Dan went back to Michigan where he became a member of a variety of important organizations including the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the United Auto Workers. As a skilled tradesman, Dan also ran a successful small business. In the military, business and personal life, he has demonstrated his commitment to his country, family, and friends.

Dan's leadership capabilities are highlighted by his commitment to a variety of community-based organizations including the Masons, Shriners, Disabled American Veterans, and the American Legion. He also serves as a Board member for the United Auto Worker's state-wide coordinating committee for the Democratic Party and the National Council for Senior Citizens. Furthermore, Dan is the Chairman of the Michigan Veterans Trust Fund for Montmorency County and Past Chairman of the Montmorency County Democratic Party. Dan currently serves as the chairman of Region 1D, United Auto Worker Retirees, a region which encompasses 62 counties. Daniel was instrumental in the formation of the Montmorency County Democratic Party and has served as the party chairman for many years.

Dan and his wife Geraldine will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary on February 9, 2003. They have three children, eight grandchildren, and fifteen great grandchildren. At 80 years of age, he has been, and continues to be, an inspiration to all who know him. I know my colleagues will join me in saluting Daniel Benac for his leadership in the community dedication to his country, and loyalty to his family and friends.●

FEED AMERICA THURSDAY

●Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce "Feed America Thursday," a resolution which designates November 21, 2002, the Thursday before Thanksgiving Day, as "Feed America Thursday."

This resolution encourages Americans to sacrifice two meals on November 21 and donate the money they would have used for food to a charity or religious organization of their choice. The charities and churches, in turn, are encouraged to feed the hungry with the funds received. "Feed America Thursday" will not only encourage Americans to help those in need, it will encourage a spirit of selflessness and sacrifice vital to our strength as a nation.

Each day people in our Nation suffer due to hunger. The United States Department of Agriculture recently reported that 33 million Americans, 13 million of whom are children, live in homes that do not have an adequate supply of food. Hunger among children is especially devastating because it has a serious impact on physical growth and brain development. The contributions this resolution encourages will serve the needs of those who suffer from hunger in our Nation, especially the children. This resolution will not only help alleviate hunger, it will both affirm and restore the spirit of giving in our society. Hunger affects people from every state and in all age groups.

I ask every American to join me in feeding the hungry and affirming the values that make our Nation great. This resolution, if passed, will provide food to the hungry and hope to our nation.●

THE RETIREMENT OF SHERIFF BILL BREWER

● Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I have often heard it said that Wyoming is such a remarkable place to live because of the remarkable people who live there. For my part, I can not only assure you that it is true, but I have the proof in the form of one of the stories of our remarkable citizenry that I would like to share with my colleagues today.

In just a few weeks, Bill Brewer will be retiring after serving for 26 years as our Sheriff for Park Country. All told, he will be closing the books on a career in law enforcement that totals almost 40 years.

As a former Mayor, I know full well the importance of a good Sheriff in city and county management and the important role law enforcement plays in the services we provide to the citizens of our communities. If nothing else, good city and county government demands that we ensure the safety of our people to the fullest extent possible. That is why law enforcement officers like Bill Brewer are so important in the day to day life of our communities.

Sheriff Brewer has been an integral part of the daily life of the community of Cody and Park County since 1972, when he became the Sheriff of Park County. Over the years, he proved to be instrumental in bringing the Cody Police Department and the Park County Sheriff's Department together as he worked to bring both offices into the modern age. Through his efforts, he was able to improve the technology both offices have come to depend on as they became more effective and responsive to the needs of the people of the area. Thanks to his dedication to improving the system he was a part of, numerable changes were made in the way the offices communicated with each other. And thanks to his willingness to try new things, the kind of information they exchanged and the speed with which it was shared increased dramatically.

Sheriff Brewer's vision and commitment to making a difference in his corner of the world did not go unnoticed through the years, and he was named Wyoming Peace Officer of the Year in 1981. The award was presented to him to recognize his devotion to duty as well as his dedication and commitment to improving the tools his officers had access to in the performance of their daily duties.

For example, in the 1980's, Sheriff Brewer's foresight and commitment to ensuring Cody and Park County had the most modern crime fighting tools possible led him to create a SWAT team for the County. Although there was quite a bit of dissension about the formation of such a force, it proved to be an important addition to the law enforcement team of the area when there was a shooting at a bar in Cody. The perpetrators fled the scene and barricaded themselves in a cabin. It was then up to the newly formed SWAT team to capture them and bring them to justice. They were subsequently convicted and the story was broadcast across the nation as part of a television series of law enforcement.

In addition to his duties as a Sheriff, Bill has also been very involved with the youth of the community. He was a boxing coach and referee, as well as a baseball and basketball coach.

I would be remiss if I didn't also point out Bill's participation in the music community of the area. He plays the banjo and the guitar and he and his father played with the Wyoming Fiddlers Association. He also enjoys playing horseshoes and now that he's retired, I have no doubt that he is going to get into a lot more activities in the years to come.

Bill Brewer will long be remembered for all he has done to make his community a better place to live. For his almost forty years of service, he has made a huge difference in his neck of the woods of Wyoming. There is no way to measure all Bill has accomplished as Sheriff and the lives he has touched in all his activities. A lot of the area bears his remarkable and gentle touch and is better for his having passed by.

Now, I have a hunch Bill and his remarkable wife Janet won't be slowing down so much as changing gears and direction in retirement. I wish them all the best in whatever they decide to do in the coming years. After all, Bill has done all we could have asked him to do, and more, for almost forty years. I hope he and Janet enjoy their retirement. They have been a great team for Park County and Wyoming and they have earned it.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:57 p.m., a message from the House or Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 114. A joint resolution to authorize the use of the United States Armed Forces against Iraq.

At 5:34 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5010) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5011) making appropriations for military construction, family housing, and base realignment and closure for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

H.R. 2121. An act to make available funds under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to expand democracy, good governance, and anti-corruption programs in the Russian Federation in order promote and strengthen democratic government and civil society and independent media in that country.

H.R. 4085. An act to increase, effective as of December 1, 2002, the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for the survivors of certain disabled veterans.

The enrolled bills were signed subsequently by the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD.)

At 8:42 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it request the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 122. A joint resolution making further appropriations for the fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes.

At 11:05 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

H. Con. Res. 508. Concurrent resolution resolving all disagreements between the House of Representatives and Senate with respect to H.R. 3295.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the text to the bill (H.R. 3295) to establish a program to provide funds to States to replace punch card voting systems, to establish the Election Assistance Commission to assist in the administration of Federal elections and to otherwise provide assistance with the administration of certain Federal election laws and programs, to establish minimum election administration standards for States and units of local government with responsibility for the administration of Federal elections and for other purposes.

The House insists on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title to the aforesaid bill.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the second time, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 5427. An act to designate the Federal building located at Fifth and Richardson Avenues in Roswell, New Mexico, as the "Joe Skeen Federal Building".

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LEVIN:

S. 3089. A bill to authorize the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment (normal trade relations treatment) to the products of Ukraine, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today I introduce a bill to grant normal trade treatment to the products of Ukraine. My brother, Congressman SANDER LEVIN, has introduced an identical bill, H.R. 4723, in the House. It is our hope that enactment of this legislation will help to build stronger economic ties between the United States and Ukraine.

The cold war era Jackson-Vanik immigration restrictions that deny most favored nation trade status to imports from former Soviet-Block countries are outdated and when applied to Ukraine, inappropriate. Those restrictions were established as a tool to pressure Communist nations to allow their people to freely emigrate in exchange for favorable trade treatment by the United States.

Ukraine does allow its citizens the right and opportunity to emigrate. It has met the Jackson-Vanik test. In fact, Ukraine has been found to be in full compliance with the freedom of emigration requirements under the Jackson-Vanik law. Ukraine has been certified as meeting the Jackson-Vanik requirements on an annual basis since 1992 when a bilateral trade agreement went into effect. It is time the United States recognize this reality by eliminating the Jackson-Vanik restrictions and granting Ukraine normal trading status on a permanent basis. Our bill does this as well as addressing traditional Jackson-Vanik issues such as emigration, religious freedom, restoration of property, and human rights. It also deals with the important trade issues that must be considered when granting a country permanent normal trade relations, PNTR, such as making progress toward World Trade Organization, WTO, accession and tariff and excise tax reductions.

Since reestablishing independence in 1991, Ukraine has taken important steps toward the creation of democratic institutions and a free-market economy. As a member state of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, OSCE, Ukraine is committed to developing a system of governance in accordance with the principles regarding human rights and humanitarian affairs that are set forth in the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Helsinki Final Act. I believe that more needs to be done to reform Ukraine's economy and legal structures, but I believe that the hope for PNTR and thus PNTR itself, can encourage these reforms.

Drawing Ukraine into normal trade relations should lead Ukraine to achieve greater market reform and continue its commitment to safeguarding religious liberty and enforcing laws to combat discrimination as well as expand on the restitution of religious and communal properties. Also, PNTR status will hopefully do more than increase bilateral trade between the United States and Ukraine and encourage increased international investment in Ukraine. Hopefully it will also stimulate the reform we all want and Ukraine deserves on their way to achieving a mature nation statehood.

Ukraine is important to U.S. strategic interests and objectives in Central and Eastern Europe and has participated with the United States in its peacekeeping operations in Europe and has provided important cooperation in the global struggle against international terrorism. It's time we recognize Ukraine's accomplishments and status as an emerging democracy and market economy and graduate it from the Jackson-Vanik restrictions.

By Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself and Mr. KOHL):

S. 3090. A bill to provide for the testing of chronic wasting disease and other infectious disease in deer and elk herds, to establish the Interagency Task Force on Epizootic Hemorrhagic Disease, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to address two emergent wildlife diseases in my state, chronic wasting disease, or CWD, and epizootic hemorrhagic disease, or EHD, both of which have been found in Wisconsin's deer. I am pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation today by the Senior Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. KOHL. CWD was detected in wild deer in my state earlier this year, and, unfortunately, has now spread to captive herds. EHD was detected in wild deer in the last week of September. These diseases have become serious and substantial management problems in my home State of Wisconsin.

To address CWD, the State of Wisconsin has decided to eradicate free-ranging white tailed deer within eastern Iowa, western Dane, and southern Sauk counties in an effort to try to eradicate the disease. Wisconsin will sample and test another 50,000 deer statewide. This represents an unprecedented eradication and sampling effort in Wisconsin. Most likely, it is the largest ever undertaken in the United States.

For months, the Wisconsin delegation has been unified, on a bipartisan basis, in seeking Federal assistance from the Administration to combat this problem. We have sought assistance from the United States Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior. We have pursued any and every other Federal agency that might be able to provide us with assistance. Some help has been forthcoming, and we are grateful for the help that we have received.

But the help our State has gotten so far to combat CWD isn't near enough. We need to be ready for the deer hunt that begins next month. We need to expand the availability of CWD testing in our State, and we need to expand it now. Wisconsin is undertaking an unprecedented testing program, but USDA has refused to allow Wisconsin to certify private labs to run CWD tests. That is why I have authored this new bill to require USDA to make CWD screening tests available to the public, that's the only way Wisconsinites can make informed decisions when hunting season arrives.

USDA is concerned that the public may interpret the results of the currently available CWD tests to be more than a determination of whether the deer does or does not have CWD. USDA is concerned because the current tests have certain limitations and are only accurate in determining whether a deer is infected with CWD. No test has yet been approved by the Food and Drug Administration as a way of proving that deer meat is safe to eat.

While I understand USDA's concern that an animal screening test for CWD should not be viewed by the public as a food safety test, at present there is no food safety test for venison. The CWD screening tests are the only tests that are available today. We should make the public aware of the limitations of today's tests, but we should also make those tests available and let the public use their own judgment. The World Health Organization has advised that meat from CWD-infected deer should not be consumed. The only way Wisconsin can follow the WHO's advice and make an informed decision is to have their deer tested.

This bill addresses Wisconsin's urgent short term need for enhanced testing capacity in two ways. First, the bill requires USDA to release, within 30 days, protocols both for labs to use in performing tests for chronic wasting disease and for the proper collection of animal tissue to be tested. Second, the bill requires USDA to develop a certification program for Federal and non-federal labs, including private labs, allowing them to conduct chronic wasting disease tests within 30 days of enactment. I hope these measures will enhance Wisconsin's capacity to expand deer testing this year. To address longer-term needs the bill directs USDA to accelerate research into the development of live animal tests for chronic wasting disease, including field diagnostic tests, and to develop testing protocols that reduce laboratory test processing time.

I believe that the alternative to not expanding testing in Wisconsin is much worse, and much more challenging than undertaking an effort to educate our hunters about the limitations of current tests. The alternative, frankly, is the spread of this disease. We should be very clear that the Federal Government will be allowing this disease to spread if it does not act to make more testing available.

Concerned hunters, faced with limited information, will simply choose not to hunt. Already, the lack of testing is affecting the number of hunters who will take to the woods in Wisconsin this fall. Registration for hunting licenses in my State is already down 30 percent from this time last year. If we do not expand testing in Wisconsin, we will likely guarantee the spread of the disease.

Failure to aggressively work to eradicate CWD before it spreads could allow the very resilient prions that spread the disease to survive in the environment for years, further complicating eradication efforts. And although CWD has never spread to other species, scientists have not ruled out that possibility, and more deer with the disease may well increase the risk.

The bill also addresses another issue, the emergence of another animal disease, this time a viral disease, EHD. This disease has apparently killed eighteen deer in Iowa County, and could have spread beyond the deer population in Iowa County.

This disease affects not only our deer population, but could also harm our world famous dairy industry. While I am told that cows don't frequently die from EHD, they can carry the disease, and some are worried that this disease could subject our dairy herds to quarantine if they were found to have EHD.

Our hunters and dairy industry do seem to have caught a break when it comes to EHD. I understand that colder weather will kill off the biting insects that spread the EHD virus. This should provide some protection for deer and dairy cattle for the next few months. In the meantime, however, we must take steps to prevent the spread of this disease now before it becomes a problem in the spring and to prevent its possibly spreading to our dairy industry.

The Administration has simply not taken sufficient steps on CWD, and I am concerned that it will again fail to do enough if EHD becomes a problem. That's why my legislation today also includes a provision to create an action plan to address concerns about EHD. It would require that the Secretary of Agriculture create a federal working group to outline what actions the federal government is taking now, and to determine the future actions that are important to take in addressing EHD.

My legislation is also budget neutral. It won't cost taxpayers a dime. It asks USDA to undertake these activities using current funds. I refuse to accept that USDA cannot find the resources within its budget of over seventy three billion dollars to take these actions. The Department must find the means to develop an efficient and accurate way to certify private labs to conduct CWD tests following the standards that the USDA labs use.

Legislative action on this problem is urgently needed. We cannot afford to wait, or we will allow these wildlife diseases to spread. This legislation is a necessary step in ensuring that we can bring these diseases under control and I urge its swift consideration.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3090

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Comprehensive Wildlife Disease Testing Acceleration Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) CHRONIC WASTING DISEASE.—The term "chronic wasting disease" means the animal disease that afflicts deer and elk—

(A) that is a transmissible disease of the nervous system resulting in distinctive lesions in the brain; and

(B) that belongs to the group of diseases—

(i) that is known as transmissible spongiform encephalopathies; and

(ii) that includes scrapie, bovine spongiform encephalopathy, and Cruetzfeldt-Jakob disease.

(2) EPIZOOTIC HEMORRHAGIC DISEASE.—The term "epizootic hemorrhagic disease" means the animal disease afflicting deer and other wild ruminants—

(A) that is an insect-borne transmissible viral disease; and

(B) that results in spontaneous hemorrhaging in the muscles and organs of the afflicted animals.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(4) TASK FORCE.—The term "Task Force" means the Interagency Task Force on Epizootic Hemorrhagic Disease established by section 4(a).

SEC. 3. CHRONIC WASTING DISEASE SAMPLING GUIDELINES AND TESTING PROTOCOL.

(a) SAMPLING GUIDELINES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue guidelines for the collection of animal tissue by Federal, State, tribal, and local agencies for testing for chronic wasting disease.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Guidelines issued under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) include procedures for the stabilization of tissue samples for transport to a laboratory for assessment; and

(B) be updated as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

(b) TESTING PROTOCOL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue a protocol to be used in the laboratory assessment of samples of animal tissue that may be contaminated with chronic wasting disease.

(c) LABORATORY CERTIFICATION AND INSPECTION PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a program for the certification and inspection of Federal and non-Federal laboratories (including private laboratories) under which the Secretary shall authorize laboratories certified under the program to conduct tests for chronic wasting disease.

(2) VERIFICATION.—In carrying out the program established under paragraph (1), the Secretary may require that the results of any tests conducted by private laboratories shall be verified by Federal laboratories.

(d) DEVELOPMENT OF NEW TESTS.—Not later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall accelerate research into—

(1) the development of animal tests for chronic wasting disease, including—

(A) tests for live animals; and

(B) field diagnostic tests; and

(2) the development of testing protocols that reduce laboratory test processing time.

SEC. 4. INTERAGENCY TASK FORCE ON EPIZOOTIC HEMORRHAGIC DISEASE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established a Federal interagency task force to be known as the "Interagency Task Force on Epizootic Hemorrhagic Disease" to coordinate activities to prevent the outbreak of epizootic hemorrhagic disease and related diseases in the United States.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Task Force shall be composed of—

(1) the Secretary, who shall serve as the chairperson of the Task Force;

(2) the Secretary of the Interior;

(3) the Secretary of Commerce;

(4) the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(5) the Secretary of the Treasury;

(6) the Commissioner of Food and Drugs;

(7) the Director of the National Institutes of Health;

(8) the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention;

(9) the Commissioner of Customs; and

(10) the heads of any other Federal agencies that the President determines to be appropriate.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Task Force shall submit to Congress a report that—

(1) describes any activities that are being carried out, or that will be carried out, to prevent—

(A) the outbreak of epizootic hemorrhagic disease and related diseases in the United States; and

(B) the spread or transmission of epizootic hemorrhagic disease and related diseases to dairy cattle or other livestock; and

(2) includes recommendations for—

(A) legislation that should be enacted or regulations that should be promulgated to prevent the outbreak of epizootic hemorrhagic disease and related diseases in the United States; and

(B) coordination of the surveillance of and diagnostic testing for epizootic hemorrhagic disease, chronic wasting disease, and related diseases.

SEC. 5. FUNDING.

To carry out this Act, the Secretary may use funds made available to the Secretary for administrative purposes.

By Mr. KOHL (for himself, Mr. REID, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MILLER, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Ms. LANDRIEU, and Mrs. LINCOLN):

S. 3091. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to prevent abuse of recipients of long-term care services under the Medicare and Medicaid programs; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the Patient Abuse Prevention Act, which will help protect patients in long-term care from abuse and neglect by those who are supposed to care for them. This legislation will establish a National Registry of abusive long-term care workers and require criminal background checks for potential employees. The changes we are making today are technical in nature and are designed to ensure that the background check system runs as smoothly and efficiently as possible.

There is absolutely no excuse for abuse or neglect of the elderly and disabled at the hands of those who are supposed to care for them. Our parents and grandparents made our country what it is today, and they deserve to live with dignity and the highest quality care.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case. We know that the majority of caregivers are dedicated, professional, and do their best under difficult circumstances. But it only takes a few abusive staff to cast a dark shadow over what should be a healing environment.

Current State and national safeguards are inadequate to screen out abusive workers. All States are required to maintain registries of abusive nurse aides. But nurse aides are not the only workers involved in abuse, and other workers are not tracked at all. Even worse, there is no system to coordinate information about abusive nurse aides between States. A known abuser in Iowa would have little trouble moving to Wisconsin and continuing to work with patients there.

In addition, there is no Federal requirement that long-term care facilities conduct criminal background checks on prospective employees. People with violent criminal backgrounds, people who have already been convicted of murder, rape, and assault, could easily get a job in a nursing home or other health care setting without their past ever being discovered.

Our legislation will go a long way toward solving this problem. First, it will create a National Registry of abusive long-term care employees. States will be required to submit information from their current State registries to the National Registry. Facilities will be required to check the National Registry before hiring a prospective worker. Any worker with a substantiated finding of patient abuse will be prohibited from working in long-term care.

Second, the bill provides a second line of defense to protect patients from violent criminals. If the National Registry does not contain information about a prospective worker, the facility is then required to initiate a FBI background check. Any conviction for patient abuse or a relevant violent crime would bar that applicant from working with patients.

A disturbing number of cases have been reported where workers with criminal backgrounds have been cleared to work in direct patient care, and have subsequently abused patients in their care. In 1997, the Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel ran a series of articles describing this problem. In 1998, at my request, the Senate Special Committee on Aging held a hearing that focused on how easy it is for known abusers to find work in long-term care and continue to prey on patients. At that hearing, the HHS Inspector General presented a report which found that, in the two States they studied, between 5-10 percent of employees currently working in nursing homes had serious criminal convictions in their past. They also found that among aides who had abused patients, 15-20 percent of them had at least one conviction in their past.

In 1998, I offered an amendment which became law that allowed long-term care providers to voluntarily use the FBI system for background checks. So far, 7 percent of those checks have come back with criminal convictions, including rape and kidnapping.

And on July 30, 2001, the House Government Reform Committee's Special Investigations Division of the Minority staff issued a report which found that in the past two years, over 30 percent of nursing homes in the U.S. were cited for a physical, sexual, or verbal abuse violation that had the potential to harm residents. Even more striking, the report found that nearly 10 percent of nursing homes had violations that caused actual harm to residents.

Clearly, this is a critical tool that long-term care providers should have; they don't want abusive caregivers working for them any more than families do. I am pleased that the nursing home industry has worked with me over the years to refine this legislation, and I greatly appreciate their support of the bill with the changes we are incorporating today. This bill reflects their input and will help ensure a smooth transition to an efficient, accurate background check system. This is a common-sense, cost-effective step we can and should take to protect patients by helping long-term care providers thoroughly screen potential caregivers.

I realize that this legislation will not solve all instances of abuse. We still need to do more to stop abuse from occurring in the first place. But this bill will ensure that those who have already abused an elderly or disabled patient, and those who have committed violent crimes against people in the past, are kept away from vulnerable patients.

I want to repeat that I strongly believe that most long-term care providers and their staff work hard to deliver the highest quality care. However, it is imperative that Congress act immediately to get rid of those that don't.

This bill is the product of collaboration and input from the health care industry, patient and employee advocates, who all have the same goal I do: protecting patients in long-term care. I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues, the Administration, and the health care industry in this effort. Our Nation's seniors and disabled deserve nothing less than our full attention.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3091

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Patient Abuse Prevention Act".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO PREVENT ABUSE OF NURSING FACILITY RESIDENTS.

(a) SCREENING OF SKILLED NURSING FACILITY AND NURSING FACILITY EMPLOYEE APPLICANTS.—

(1) MEDICARE PROGRAM.—Section 1819(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(8) SCREENING OF SKILLED NURSING FACILITY WORKERS.—

“(A) BACKGROUND CHECKS ON APPLICANTS.—Subject to subparagraph (B)(ii), before hiring a skilled nursing facility worker, a skilled nursing facility shall—

“(i) give the worker written notice that the facility is required to perform background checks with respect to applicants;

“(ii) require, as a condition of employment, that such worker—

“(I) provide a written statement disclosing any conviction for a relevant crime or finding of patient or resident abuse;

“(II) provide a statement signed by the worker authorizing the facility to request the search and exchange of criminal records;

“(III) provide in person to the facility a copy of the worker’s fingerprints or thumb print, depending upon available technology; and

“(IV) provide any other identification information the Secretary may specify in regulation;

“(iii) initiate a check of the data collection system established under section 1128E in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary to determine whether such system contains any disqualifying information with respect to such worker; and

“(iv) if that system does not contain any such disqualifying information—

“(I) request through the appropriate State agency that the State initiate a State and national criminal background check on such worker in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e)(6); and

“(II) submit to such State agency the information described in subclauses (II) through (IV) of clause (ii) not more than 7 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays under section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code) after completion of the check against the system initiated under clause (iii).

“(B) PROHIBITION ON HIRING OF ABUSIVE WORKERS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A skilled nursing facility may not knowingly employ any skilled nursing facility worker who has any conviction for a relevant crime or with respect to whom a finding of patient or resident abuse has been made.

“(ii) PROVISIONAL EMPLOYMENT.—After complying with the requirements of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (A), a skilled nursing facility may provide for a provisional period of employment for a skilled nursing facility worker pending completion of the check against the data collection system described under subparagraph (A)(iii) and the background check described under subparagraph (A)(iv). Such facility shall maintain direct supervision of the covered individual during the worker’s provisional period of employment.

“(C) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—A skilled nursing facility shall report to the State any instance in which the facility determines that a skilled nursing facility worker has committed an act of resident neglect or abuse or misappropriation of resident property in the course of employment by the facility.

“(D) USE OF INFORMATION.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A skilled nursing facility that obtains information about a skilled nursing facility worker pursuant to clauses (iii) and (iv) of subparagraph (A) may use such information only for the purpose of determining the suitability of the worker for employment.

“(ii) IMMUNITY FROM LIABILITY.—A skilled nursing facility that, in denying employment for an applicant (including during the period described in subparagraph (B)(ii)), reasonably relies upon information about such applicant provided by the State pursuant to subsection (e)(6) or section 1128E shall not be liable in any action brought by such applicant based on the employment determination resulting from the information.

“(iii) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—Whoever knowingly violates the provisions of clause (i) shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both.

“(E) CIVIL PENALTY.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A skilled nursing facility that violates the provisions of this paragraph shall be subject to a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed—

“(I) for the first such violation, $2,000; and

“(II) for the second and each subsequent violation within any 5-year period, $5,000.

“(ii) KNOWING RETENTION OF WORKER.—In addition to any civil penalty under clause (i), a skilled nursing facility that—“(I) knowingly continues to employ a skilled nursing facility worker in violation of subparagraph (A) or (B); or shall be subject to a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for the first such violation, and $10,000 for the second and each subsequent violation within any 5-year period.

“(F) DEFINITIONS.—In this paragraph:

“(i) CONVICTION FOR A RELEVANT CRIME.—The term ‘conviction for a relevant crime’ means any Federal or State criminal conviction for—

“(I) any offense described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of section 1128(a); and

“(II) such other types of offenses as the Secretary may specify in regulations, taking into account the severity and relevance of such offenses, and after consultation with representatives of long-term care providers, representatives of long-term care employees, consumer advocates, and appropriate Federal and State officials.

“(ii) DISQUALIFYING INFORMATION.—The term ‘disqualifying information’ means information about a conviction for a relevant crime or a finding of patient or resident abuse.

“(iii) FINDING OF PATIENT OR RESIDENT ABUSE.—The term ‘finding of patient or resident abuse’ means any substantiated finding by a State agency under subsection (g)(1)(C) or a Federal agency that a skilled nursing facility worker has committed—

“(I) an act of patient or resident abuse or neglect or a misappropriation of patient or resident property; or “(II) such other types of acts as the Secretary may specify in regulations.

“(iv) SKILLED NURSING FACILITY WORKER.—The term ‘skilled nursing facility worker’ means any individual (other than a volunteer) that has access to a patient of a skilled nursing facility under an employment or other contract, or both, with such facility. Such term includes individuals who are licensed or certified by the State to provide such services, and nonlicensed individuals providing such services, as defined by the Secretary, including nurse assistants, nurse aides, home health aides, and personal care workers and attendants.”

(2) MEDICAID PROGRAM.—Section 1919(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(A) BACKGROUND CHECKS ON APPLICANTS.—Subject to subparagraph (B)(ii), before hiring a nursing facility worker, a nursing facility shall—

“(i) give the worker written notice that the facility is required to perform background checks with respect to applicants;

“(ii) require, as a condition of employment, that such worker—

“(I) provide a written statement disclosing any conviction for a relevant crime or finding of patient or resident abuse;

“(II) provide a statement signed by the worker authorizing the facility to request the search and exchange of criminal records;

“(III) provide in person to the facility a copy of the worker’s fingerprints or thumb print, depending upon available technology; and

“(IV) provide any other identification information the Secretary may specify in regulation;

“(iii) initiate a check of the data collection system established under section 1128E in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary to determine whether such system contains any disqualifying information with respect to such worker; and

“(iv) if that system does not contain any such disqualifying information—

“(I) request through the appropriate State agency that the State initiate a State and national criminal background check on such worker in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e)(8); and

“(II) submit to such State agency the information described in subclauses (II) through (IV) of clause (ii) not more than 7 days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays under section 6103(a) of title 5, United States Code) after completion of the check against the system initiated under clause (iii).

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A nursing facility may not knowingly employ any nursing facility worker who has any conviction for a relevant crime or with respect to whom a finding of patient or resident abuse has been made.

“(ii) PROVISIONAL EMPLOYMENT.—After complying with the requirements of clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (A), a nursing facility may provide for a provisional period of employment for a nursing facility worker pending completion of the check against the data collection system described under subparagraph (A)(iii) and the background check described under subparagraph (A)(iv). Such facility shall maintain direct supervision of the worker during the worker’s provisional period of employment.

“(C) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—A nursing facility shall report to the State any instance in which the facility determines that a nursing facility worker has committed an act of resident neglect or abuse or misappropriation of resident property in the course of employment by the facility.

“(D) USE OF INFORMATION.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A nursing facility that obtains information about a nursing facility worker pursuant to clauses (iii) and (iv) of subparagraph (A) may use such information only for the purpose of determining the suitability of the worker for employment.

“(ii) IMMUNITY FROM LIABILITY.—A nursing facility that, in denying employment for an applicant (including during the period described in subparagraph (B)(ii)), reasonably relies upon information about such applicant provided by the State pursuant to subsection (e)(8) or section 1128E shall not be liable in any action brought by such applicant based on the employment determination resulting from the information.

“(iii) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—Whoever knowingly violates the provisions of clause (i) shall be fined in accordance with title 18, United States Code, imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both.

“(E) CIVIL PENALTY.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A nursing facility that violates the provisions of this paragraph shall be subject to a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed—

“(I) for the first such violation, $2,000; and

“(II) for the second and each subsequent violation within any 5-year period, $5,000.

“(i) KNOWING RETENTION OF WORKER.—In addition to any civil penalty under clause (i), a nursing facility that—

“(I) knowingly continues to employ a nursing facility worker in violation of subparagraph (A) or (B); or shall be subject to a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for the first such violation, and $10,000 for the second and each subsequent violation within any 5-year period.

“(F) DEFINITIONS.—In this paragraph:

“(i) CONVICTION FOR A RELEVANT CRIME.—The term ‘conviction for a relevant crime’ means any Federal or State criminal conviction for—

“(I) any offense described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of section 1128(a); and

“(II) such other types of offenses as the Secretary may specify in regulations, taking into account the severity and relevance of such offenses, and after consultation with representatives of long-term care providers, representatives of long-term care employees, consumer advocates, and appropriate Federal and State officials.

“(ii) DISQUALIFYING INFORMATION.—The term ‘disqualifying information’ means information about a conviction for a relevant crime or a finding of patient or resident abuse.

“(iii) FINDING OF PATIENT OR RESIDENT ABUSE.—The term ‘finding of patient or resident abuse’ means any substantiated finding by a State agency under subsection (g)(1)(C) or a Federal agency that a nursing facility worker has committed—

“(I) an act of patient or resident abuse or neglect or a misappropriation of patient or resident property; or

“(II) such other types of acts as the Secretary may specify in regulations.

“(iv) NURSING FACILITY WORKER.—The term ‘nursing facility worker’ means any individual (other than a volunteer) that has access to a patient of a nursing facility under an employment or other contract, or both, with such facility. Such term includes individuals who are licensed or certified by the State to provide such services, and non-licensed individuals providing such services, as defined by the Secretary, including nurse assistants, nurse aides, home health aides, and personal care workers and attendants.”.

(3) FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITIES.—

(A) DEVELOPMENT OF STANDARD FEDERAL AND STATE BACKGROUND CHECK FORM.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Attorney General and representatives of appropriate State agencies, shall develop a model form that an applicant for employment at a nursing facility may complete and Federal and State agencies may use to conduct the criminal background checks required under sections 1819(b)(8) and 1919(b)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b), 1396r(b)) (as added by this section).

(B) PERIODIC EVALUATION.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Attorney General, periodically shall evaluate the background check system imposed under sections 1819(b)(8) and 1919(b)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b), 1396r(b)) (as added by this section) and shall implement changes, as necessary, based on available technology, to make the background check system more efficient and able to provide a more immediate response to long-term care providers using the system.

(4) NO PREEMPTION OF STRICTER STATE LAWS.—Nothing in section 1819(b)(8) or 1919(b)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b)(8), 1396r(b)(8)) (as so added) shall be construed to supersede any provision of State law that—

(A) specifies a relevant crime for purposes of prohibiting the employment of an individual at a long-term care facility (as defined in section 1128E(g)(6) of the Social Security Act (as added by section 3(f) of this Act) that is not included in the list of such crimes specified in such sections or in regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to carry out such sections; or

(B) requires a long-term care facility (as so defined) to conduct a background check prior to employing an individual in an employment position that is not included in the positions for which a background check is required under such sections.

(5) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—Effective as if included in the enactment of section 941 of the Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP Benefits Improvement and Protection Act of 2000 (114 Stat. 2763A-585), as enacted into law by section 1(a)(6) of Public Law 106-554, sections 1819(b) and 1919(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b), 1396r(b)), as amended by such section 941 (as so enacted into law) are each amended by redesignating the paragraph (8) added by such section as paragraph (9).

(b) FEDERAL AND STATE REQUIREMENTS CONCERNING BACKGROUND CHECKS.—

(1) MEDICARE.—Section 1819(e) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(6) FEDERAL AND STATE REQUIREMENTS CONCERNING CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECKS ON SKILLED NURSING FACILITY EMPLOYEES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon receipt of a request by a skilled nursing facility pursuant to subsection (b)(8) that is accompanied by the information described in subclauses (II) through (IV) of subsection (b)(8)(A)(ii), a State, after checking appropriate State records and finding no disqualifying information (as defined in subsection (b)(8)(F)(ii)), shall immediately submit such request and information to the Attorney General and shall request the Attorney General to conduct a search and exchange of records with respect to the individual as described in subparagraph (B).

“(B) SEARCH AND EXCHANGE OF RECORDS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—Upon receipt of a submission pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Attorney General shall direct a search of the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for any criminal history records corresponding to the fingerprints and other positive identification information submitted. The Attorney General shall provide any corresponding information resulting from the search to the State.

“(C) STATE REPORTING OF INFORMATION TO SKILLED NURSING FACILITY.—Upon receipt of the information provided by the Attorney General pursuant to subparagraph (B), the State shall—

“(i) review the information to determine whether the individual has any conviction for a relevant crime (as defined in subsection (b)(8)(F)(i));

“(ii) immediately report to the skilled nursing facility in writing the results of such review; and

“(iii) in the case of an individual with a conviction for a relevant crime, report the existence of such conviction of such individual to the database established under section 1128E.

“(D) FEES FOR PERFORMANCE OF CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECKS.—

“(I) ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General may charge a fee to any State requesting a search and exchange of records pursuant to this paragraph and subsection (b)(8) for conducting the search and providing the records. The amount of such fee shall not exceed the lesser of the actual cost of such activities or $50. Such fees shall be available to the Attorney General, or, in the Attorney General's discretion, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation until expended.

“(II) STATE.—A State may charge a skilled nursing facility a fee for initiating the criminal background check under this paragraph and subsection (b)(8), including fees charged by the Attorney General, and for performing the review and report required by subparagraph (C). The amount of such fee shall not exceed the actual cost of such activities.

“(ii) PROHIBITION ON CHARGING APPLICANTS OR EMPLOYEES.—An entity may not impose on an applicant for employment or an employee any charges relating to the performance of a background check under this paragraph.

“(E) REGULATIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the Secretary's authority to promulgate regulations under this title, the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary, may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out the Attorney General's responsibilities under this paragraph and subsection (b)(9), including regulations regarding the security confidentiality, accuracy, use, destruction, and dissemination of information, audits and recordkeeping, and the imposition of fees.

“(ii) APPEAL PROCEDURES.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary, shall promulgate such regulations as are necessary to establish procedures by which an applicant or employee may appeal or dispute the accuracy of the information obtained in a background check conducted under this paragraph. Appeals shall be limited to instances in which an applicant or employee is incorrectly identified as the subject of the background check, or when information about the applicant or employee has not been updated to reflect changes in the applicant's or employee's criminal record.

“(F) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Attorney General shall submit a report to Congress on—

“(i) the number of requests for searches and exchanges of records made under this section;

“(ii) the disposition of such requests; and

“(iii) the cost of responding to such requests.”.

(2) MEDICAID.—Section 1919(e) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(8) FEDERAL AND STATE REQUIREMENTS CONCERNING CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECKS ON NURSING FACILITY EMPLOYEES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon receipt of a request by a nursing facility pursuant to subsection (b)(8) that is accompanied by the information described in subclauses (II) through (IV) of subsection (b)(8)(A)(ii), a State, after checking appropriate State records and finding no disqualifying information (as defined in subsection (b)(8)(F)(ii)), shall immediately submit such request and information to the Attorney General and shall request the Attorney General to conduct a search and exchange of records with respect to the individual as described in subparagraph (B).

“(B) SEARCH AND EXCHANGE OF RECORDS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—Upon receipt of a submission pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Attorney General shall direct a search of the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for any criminal history records corresponding to the fingerprints and other positive identification information submitted. The Attorney General shall provide any corresponding information resulting from the search to the State.

“(C) STATE REPORTING OF INFORMATION TO NURSING FACILITY.—Upon receipt of the information provided by the Attorney General pursuant to subparagraph (B), the State shall—

“(i) review the information to determine whether the individual has any conviction for a relevant crime (as defined in subsection (b)(8)(F)(i));

“(ii) immediately report to the nursing facility in writing the results of such review; and

“(iii) in the case of an individual with a conviction for a relevant crime, report the existence of such conviction of such individual to the database established under section 1128E.

“(D) FEES FOR PERFORMANCE OF CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECKS.—

“(I) ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General may charge a fee to any State requesting a search and exchange of records pursuant to this paragraph and subsection (b)(8) for conducting the search and providing the records. The amount of such fee shall not exceed the lesser of the actual cost of such activities or $50. Such fees shall be available to the Attorney General, or, in the Attorney General's discretion, to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, until expended.

“(II) STATE.—A State may charge a nursing facility a fee for initiating the criminal background check under this paragraph and subsection (b)(8), including fees charged by the Attorney General, and for performing the review and report required by subparagraph (C). The amount of such fee shall not exceed the actual cost of such activities.

“(ii) PROHIBITION ON CHARGING APPLICANTS OR EMPLOYEES.—An entity may not impose on an applicant for employment or an employee any charges relating to the performance of a background check under this paragraph.

“(E) REGULATIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the Secretary's authority to promulgate regulations under this title, the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary, may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out the Attorney General's responsibilities under this paragraph and subsection

(b)(8), including regulations regarding the security, confidentiality, accuracy, use, destruction, and dissemination of information, audits and recordkeeping, and the imposition of fees.

“(ii) APPEAL PROCEDURES.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary, shall promulgate such regulations as are necessary to establish procedures by which an applicant or employee may appeal or dispute the accuracy of the information obtained in a background check conducted under this paragraph. Appeals shall be limited to instances in which an applicant or employee is incorrectly identified as the subject of the background check, or when information about the applicant or employee has not been updated to reflect changes in the applicant's or employee's criminal record.

“(F) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Attorney General shall submit a report to Congress on—

“(i) the number of requests for searches and exchanges of records made under this section;

“(ii) the disposition of such requests; and

“(iii) the cost of responding to such requests.”.

(C) APPLICATION TO OTHER ENTITIES PROVIDING HOME HEALTH OR LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES.—

(1) MEDICARE.—Part D of title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“APPLICATION OF SKILLED NURSING FACILITY PREVENTIVE ABUSE PROVISIONS TO ANY PROVIDER OF SERVICES OR OTHER ENTITY PROVIDING HOME HEALTH OR LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES

“SEC. 1897. (a) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of subsections (b)(8) and (e)(6) of section 1819 shall apply to any provider of services or any other entity that is eligible to be paid under this title for providing home health services, hospice care (including routine home care and other services included in hospice care under this title), or long-term care services to an individual entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B, including an individual provided with a Medicare+Choice plan offered by a Medicare+Choice organization under part C (in this section referred to as a ‘medicare beneficiary’).

“(b) SUPERVISION OF PROVISIONAL EMPLOYEES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to an entity that provides home health services, such entity shall be considered to have satisfied the requirements of section 1819(b)(8)(B)(ii) or 1919(b)(8)(B)(ii) if the entity meets such requirements for supervision of provisional employees of the entity as the Secretary shall, by regulation, specify in accordance with paragraph (2).

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The regulations required under paragraph (1) shall provide the following:

“(A) Supervision of a provisional employee shall consist of ongoing, good faith, verifiable efforts by the supervisor of the provisional employee to conduct monitoring and oversight activities to ensure the safety of a medicare beneficiary.

“(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), monitoring and oversight activities may include (but are not limited to) the following:

“(i) Follow-up telephone calls to the medicare beneficiary.

“(ii) Unannounced visits to the medicare beneficiary's home while the provisional employee is serving the medicare beneficiary.

“(iii) To the extent practicable, limiting the provisional employee's duties to serving only those medicare beneficiaries in a home or setting where another family member or resident of the home or setting of the medicare beneficiary is present.”.

(2) MEDICAID.—Section 1902(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (64), by striking “and” at the end;

(B) in paragraph (65), by striking the period and inserting “; and”; and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (65) the following:

“(66) provide that any entity that is eligible to be paid under the State plan for providing home health services, hospice care (including routine home care and other services included in hospice care under title XVIII), or long-term care services for which medical assistance is available under the State plan to individuals requiring long-term care complies with the requirements of subsections (b)(8) and (e)(8) of section 1919 and section 1897(b) (in the same manner as such section applies to a medicare beneficiary).”.

(3) EXPANSION OF STATE NURSE AIDE REGISTRY.—

(A) MEDICARE.—Section 1819 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3) is amended—

(i) in subsection (e)(2)—

(aa) by striking "By not later than January 1, 1989, the" and inserting "The";

(bb) by striking "a registry of all individuals" and inserting "a registry of (i) all individuals"; and

(cc) by inserting before the period the following: ", (ii) all other nursing facility employees with respect to whom the State has made a finding described in subparagraph (B), and (iii) any employee of an entity that is eligible to be paid under the State plan for providing home health services, hospice care (including routine home care and other services included in hospice care under title XVIII), or long-term care services and with respect to whom the entity has reported to the State a finding of patient neglect or abuse or a misappropriation of patient property"; and

(III) in subparagraph (C), by striking "a nurse aide" and inserting "an individual"; and

(ii) in subsection (g)(1)—

(I) by striking the first sentence of subparagraph (C) and inserting the following: "The State shall provide, through the agency responsible for surveys and certification of nursing facilities under this subsection, for a process for the receipt and timely review and investigation of allegations of neglect and abuse and misappropriation of resident property by a nurse aide or a nursing facility employee of a resident in a nursing facility, by another individual used by the facility in providing services to such a resident, or by an individual described in subsection (e)(2)(A)(iii)."; and

(II) in the fourth sentence of subparagraph (C), by inserting "or described in subsection (e)(2)(A)(iii)" after "used by the facility"; and

(III) in subparagraph (D)—

(aa) in the subparagraph heading, by striking "NURSE AIDE"; and

(bb) in clause (i), in the matter preceding subclause (I), by striking "a nurse aide" and inserting "an individual"; and

(cc) in clause (i)(I), by striking "nurse aide" and inserting "individual".

(d) REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS FOR BACKGROUND CHECKS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall reimburse nursing facilities, skilled nursing facilities, and other entities for costs incurred by the facilities and entities in order to comply with the requirements imposed under sections 1819(b)(8) and 1919(b)(8) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(b)(8), 1396r(b)(8)), as added by this section.

SEC. 3. INCLUSION OF ABUSIVE WORKERS IN THE DATABASE ESTABLISHED AS PART OF NATIONAL HEALTH CARE FRAUD AND ABUSE DATA COLLECTION PROGRAM.

(a) INCLUSION OF ABUSIVE ACTS WITHIN A LONG-TERM CARE FACILITY OR PROVIDER.—Section 1128E(g)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(g)(1)(A)) is amended—

(i) by redesignating clause (v) as clause (vi); and

(2) by inserting after clause (iv), the following:

"(v) A finding of abuse or neglect of a patient or a resident of a long-term care facility, or misappropriation of such a patient's or resident's property."

(b) COVERAGE OF LONG-TERM CARE FACILITY OR PROVIDER EMPLOYEES.—Section 1128E(g)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(g)(2)) is amended by inserting ", and includes any individual of a long-term care facility or provider (other than any volunteer) that has access to a patient or resident of such a facility under an employment or other contract, or both, with the facility or provider (including individuals who are licensed or certified by the State to provide services at the facility or through the provider, and nonlicensed individuals, as defined by the Secretary, providing services at the facility or through the provider, including nurse assistants, nurse aides, home health aides, individuals who provide home care, and personal care workers and attendants)" before the period.

(c) REPORTING BY LONG-TERM CARE FACILITIES OR PROVIDERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1128E(b)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(b)(1)) is amended by striking "and health plan" and inserting ", health plan, and long-term care facility or provider".

(2) CORRECTION OF INFORMATION.—Section 1128E(c)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(c)(2)) is amended by striking "and health plan" and inserting ", health plan, and long-term care facility or provider".

(d) ACCESS TO REPORTED INFORMATION.—Section 1128E(d)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(d)(1)) is amended by striking "and health plans" and inserting ", health plans, and long-term care facilities or providers".

(e) MANDATORY CHECK OF DATABASE BY LONG-TERM CARE FACILITIES OR PROVIDERS.—Section 1128E(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(d)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) MANDATORY CHECK OF DATABASE BY LONG-TERM CARE FACILITIES OR PROVIDERS.—A long-term care facility or provider shall check the database maintained under this section prior to hiring under an employment or other contract, or both, any individual as an employee of such a facility or provider who will have access to a patient or resident of the facility or provider (including individuals who are licensed or certified by the State to provide services at the facility or through the provider, and nonlicensed individuals, as defined by the Secretary, that will provide services at the facility or through the provider, including nurse assistants, nurse aides, home health aides, individuals who provide home care, and personal care workers and attendants)."

(f) DEFINITION OF LONG-TERM CARE FACILITY OR PROVIDER.—Section 1128E(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7e(g)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(6) LONG-TERM CARE FACILITY OR PROVIDER.—The term 'long-term care facility or provider' means a skilled nursing facility (as defined in section 1819(a)), a nursing facility (as defined in section 1919(a)), a home health agency, a provider of hospice care (as defined in section 1861(dd)(1)), a long-term care hospital (as described in section 1886(d)(1)(B)(iv)), an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded (as defined in section 1905(d)), or any other facility or entity that provides, or is a provider of, long-term care services, home health services, or hospice care (including routine home care and other services included in hospice care under title XVIII), and receives payment for such services under the medicare program under title XVIII or the medicaid program under title XIX."

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the amendments made by this section, $10,200,000 for fiscal year 2003.

SEC. 4. PREVENTION AND TRAINING DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish a demonstration program to provide grants to develop information on best practices in patient abuse prevention training (including behavior training and interventions) for managers and staff of hospital and health care facilities.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), an entity shall be a public or private nonprofit entity and prepare and submit to the Secretary of Health and Human Services an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts received under a grant under this section shall be used to—

(1) examine ways to improve collaboration between State health care survey and provider certification agencies, long-term care ombudsman programs, the long-term care industry, and local community members;

(2) examine patient care issues relating to regulatory oversight, community involvement, and facility staffing and management with a focus on staff training, staff stress management, and staff supervision;

(3) examine the use of patient abuse prevention training programs by long-term care entities, including the training program developed by the National Association of Attorneys General, and the extent to which such programs are used; and

(4) identify and disseminate best practices for preventing and reducing patient abuse.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by the Act shall take effect on the date that is 6 months after the effective date of final regulations promulgated to carry out this Act and such amendments.

By Ms. CANTWELL (for herself and Mrs. MURRAY):

S. 3092. A bill to amend title XXI of the Social Security Act to extend the availability of allotments to States for fiscal years 1998 through 2000, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Children's Health Protection and Eligibility Act. I am delighted to be joined on this bill with my good friend, Senator PATTY MURRAY. Senator MURRAY has been a champion for children's health issues throughout her career in the Senate. This important legislation addresses the allocation of budgeted but unspent SCHIP funds that are currently out of reach of states and, under current law, are scheduled to be returned to the federal treasury. This legislation also helps those States with the highest unemployment rates use more of their SCHIP dollars to provide health insurance coverage for low-income children.

Washington State is in the middle of an economic crisis resulting from a downturn in both our aviation and high-tech sectors. With the jobless rate at 7.2 percent, we have one of the highest unemployment rates in the country. 202,000 Washingtonians are unable to find work. And over the last 12 months, our State has lost 50,000 jobs, and 60 percent of those are in the high-paying manufacturing sector.

In 2000, before the recession began, there were 780,000 uninsured people in Washington state, including 155,000 children. That number has surely grown as the economy has worsened and our population has risen. In fact, just last week the Census Bureau reported that the number of uninsured increased for the first time in two years. Sadly, there are 41.2 million people nationwide without health insurance, 8.5 million of whom are children.

The increasing number of uninsured isn't the only problem facing the health care system. In September, the Kaiser Family Foundation reported the largest increase in health insurance premium costs since 1990, while the Center for Studying Health System Change found that health care spending has returned to double-digit growth for the first time since that year.

The lack of health insurance has very real consequences. We know that the uninsured are four times as likely as the insured to delay or forego needed care, and uninsured children are six times as likely as insured children to go without needed medical care. Health insurance matters for kids, and coverage today defrays costs tomorrow.

Five years ago, Congress created a new $40 billion state grant program to provide health insurance to low-income, uninsured children who live in families that earn too much to qualify for Medicaid but not enough to afford private insurance. In most states, the State Children's Health Insurance Program, SCHIP, has been extremely successful. Nearly one million children gained coverage each year through SCHIP and, by December 2001, 3.5 million children were enrolled in the program.

Unfortunately, however, not all States have been able to participate in this success, and perversely, these are the states that had taken bold initiatives by expanding their Medicaid programs to cover low-income children at higher levels of poverty. Sadly, the recession and high unemployment means that the health insurance coverage we do have for children, pregnant women, and low-income individuals is in jeopardy due to State budget crises.

Washington State has been a leader in providing health insurance to our constituents. We have long provided optional coverage to Medicaid populations and began covering children up to 200 percent of poverty in 1994, three years before Congress passed SCHIP.

When SCHIP was enacted in 1997, most States were prohibited from using the new funding for already covered populations. This flaw made it difficult for Washington to access the money and essentially penalized the few States that had led the nation on expanding coverage for kids. This means that my State only receives the enhanced SCHIP matching dollars for covering kids between 200 and 250 percent of the Federal poverty level. Washington has been able to use less than four percent of the funding the Federal Government gave us for SCHIP.

Today, Washington has the highest unemployment in the country, an enormous budget deficit, and may need to cut as many as 150,000 kids from the Medicaid roles. Because it is penalized by SCHIP rules and cannot use funds like other States, Washington State is sending $95 million back to the Federal treasury or to other States. This defies common sense, and I do not believe that innovative States should be penalized for having expanded coverage to children before the enactment of SCHIP.

This is why we are introducing the Children's Health Protection and Eligibility Act. This bill will give States the ability to use SCHIP funds more efficiently to prevent the loss of health care coverage for children. This bill targets expiring funds to States that otherwise may have to cut health care coverage for kids. States that have made a commitment to insuring children could use expiring SCHIP funds and a portion of current SCHIP funds on a short-term basis to maintain access to health care coverage for all low-income children in the State. The bill also ensures that all states that have demonstrated a commitment to providing health care coverage to children can access SCHIP funds in the same manner to support children's health care coverage.

First, as my colleagues know, 1998 and 1999 State allotments "expired" at the end of fiscal year 2002 and are scheduled to be returned to the federal treasury. Our bill allows states to keep their remaining 1998 and 1999 funds, and use these funds for the for the purposes of this legislation.

Second, unused SCHIP dollars from the fiscal year 2000 allotment are due to be redistributed at the end of fiscal year 2002 among those States that have spent all of their SCHIP funds. Our bill would allow the retention and redistribution these funds as was done two years ago through the Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP Benefits Improvement and Protection Act, P.L. 106-554. However, under our bill, States that had an unemployment rate higher than six percent for two consecutive months in 2002 would be eligible to keep all of their unspent 2000 SCHIP allotment.

Third, at State option, for certain Medicaid expenditures, qualifying States would receive the difference between their Medicaid federal matching assistance percentage, or FMAP, and their enhanced SCHIP matching rate. This temporary measure would be paid out of a State's current SCHIP allotment to ensure children's health care coverage does not erode as states face enormous budget deficits. States would be able to use any remaining funds from fiscal years 1998, 1999, and 2000 SCHIP allotments, plus ten percent of fiscal 2001, 2002, and 2003 allotments.

Finally, our bill allows States that have expanded coverage to the highest eligibility levels allowed under SCHIP, and meet certain requirements, to receive the enhanced SCHIP match rate for any kids that had previously been covered above the mandatory level.

Children are the leaders of tomorrow; they are the very future of our great nation. We owe them nothing less than the sum of our energies, our talents, and our efforts in providing them a foundation on which to build happy, healthy and productive lives. During this tough economic time, it is more important than ever to maintain existing health care coverage for children in order to hold down health care costs and to keep children healthy. I urge my colleagues to join us in support of this bill.

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself and Mr. KYL):

S. 3093. A bill to develop and deploy technologies to defeat Internet jamming and censorship; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, over the past seven years, Congressman CHRIS COX and I have teamed up several times on legislation affecting the Internet. The Global Internet Freedom Act that I will introduce today could be called "Cox-Wyden V," because this is our fifth collaboration. I am pleased to be joined by Senator KYL in introducing this bill in the Senate.

This legislation aims to foster the development and deployment of technologies to defeat state-sponsored Internet jamming and censorship, and in turn, to help unleash the potential of the Internet to promote the causes of freedom and democracy worldwide.

This is a time when Americans are acutely focused on security threats emanating from sources beyond U.S. borders. The terrorist attacks of September 11 made plain that ignorance, extremism, and hate abroad can have terrible consequences not just in other countries, but right here at home. And the daily drumbeat of debate over Iraq emphasizes that oppressive foreign regimes can pose serious hazards. The world is truly getting smaller.

In the field of information technology, Americans have rightly responded with a renewed emphasis on cybersecurity. The interlinked computer networks that make up the Internet, and on which American's critical infrastructure increasingly relies, must be secured against would-be cyberterrorists. This is a matter of top importance, and I have sponsored legislation, as Chairman of the Science and Technology Subcommittee, to promote research and innovation in this area. It is my hope that the Cybersecurity Research and Development Act will be signed by the President in the coming weeks.

But it is important to remember that the international nature of the Internet does not just create new threats. It also presents tremendous new opportunities.

Openness, transparency, and the unfettered flow of information have always been the allies of freedom and democracy. Over time, nothing erodes oppression and intolerance like the widespread dissemination of knowledge and ideas. And technology has often played a key role in this process. From the printing press to radio, technological advances have revolutionized the spread information and ideas and opened up new horizons for people everywhere. Not surprisingly, the foes of freedom, understanding the threat these technologies pose, have often responded with such steps as censoring the press, jamming radio broadcasts, and putting media outlets under state control.

The Internet promises to revolutionize the spread of information yet again. Unlike its predecessor technologies, it offers a truly worldwide network that makes geographic distance irrelevant. It enables any person connected to it to exchange ideas quickly and easily with people and organizations on the other side of the globe. The quantity and variety of information it permits access to are virtually unlimited.

So once again, governments that fear freedom are trying to rein in the technology's potential. They block access to websites. They censor websites and email. They interrupt Internet search engines when users try explore the "wrong" topics. They closely monitor citizens' Internet usage and make it known that those who visit the "wrong" websites will be punished. Or they prevent Internet access altogether, by prohibiting ownership of personal computers.

For a confirmed example of this, I would simply call attention to the inaugural report of the Congressional-Executive Commission on China, issued just last week, October 2. This report, the product of a bipartisan commission with members from the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the Administration, finds that "over the last 18 months, the Chinese government has issued an extensive and still growing series of regulations restricting Internet content and placing monitoring requirements on industry." It goes on to cite accounts of the Chinese government using high-tech software and hardware to "block, filter, and hack websites and e-mail." Offshore dissident websites, foreign news websites, search engines, and Voice of America's weekly e-mail to China are all subject to being blocked. Internet users attempting to access foreign websites often find themselves redirected to Chinese government-approved websites.

Other countries, from Cuba to Burma to Tunisia to Vietnam, engage in similar activity.

There are technologies that can help defeat the firewalls and filters that these governments choose to erect. Proxy servers, intermediaries, "mirrors," and encryption may all have useful applications in this regard. But the U.S. Government has done little to promote technological approaches. This country devotes considerable resources to combat the jamming of Voice of America broadcasting abroad.

But to date, it has budgeted only about $1 million for technologies to counter Internet jamming and censorship.

This country can and should do better. The Internet is too important a communications medium, and its potential as a force for freedom and democracy is too great, to make a second-rate effort in this area.

That is why Senator KYL and I are introducing the Global Internet Freedom Act today. It is time for the U.S. Government to make a serious commitment to support technology that can help keep the Internet open, available, and free of political censorship for people all over the world.

This legislation would establish an Office of Global Internet Freedom, with the express mission of promoting technology to combat state-sponsored Internet jamming. The office would be based in the Department of Commerce's National Telecommunications and Information Administration, NTIA, to take advantage of NTIA's extensive expertise in international telecommunications and Internet issues. Location within the Department of Commerce will also help ensure close ties with American technology companies, whose active involvement will be essential for any technology-based effort to succeed. Cooperation with the International Broadcasting Bureau will be indispensable as well, and is required in the legislation.

Funding for the new office would be authorized at $30 million for each of the next two fiscal years. The office would make an annual report to Congress on its activities, and on the extent of state-sponsored Internet blocking in different countries around the world.

Finally, the bill would express the sense of Congress that the United States should denounce the practice of state-sponsored blocking of access to the Internet, should submit a resolution on the topic to the United Nations Human Rights Convention, and should deploy technologies to address the problem as soon as practicable.

As I mentioned at the outset, Representatives CHRIS COX and TOM LANTOS have already introduced companion legislation in the House, and I strongly applaud them for taking the lead on this issue. Here in the Senate, I urge my colleagues to join Senator KYL and myself in this important, bipartisan effort.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3093

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Global Internet Freedom Act".

SEC. 2 FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of association are fundamental characteristics of a free society. The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble." These constitutional provisions guarantee the rights of Americans to communicate and associate with one another without restriction, including unfettered communication and association via the Internet. Article 19 of the United Nation's Universal Declaration of Human Rights explicitly guarantees the freedom to "receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers".

(2) All people have the right to communicate freely with others, and to have unrestricted access to news and information, on the Internet.

(3) With nearly 10 percent of the world's population now online, and more gaining access each day, the Internet stands to become the most powerful engine for democratization and the free exchange of ideas ever invented.

(4) Unrestricted access to news and information on the Internet is a check on repressive rule by authoritarian regimes around the world.

(5) The governments of Burma, Cuba, Laos, North Korea, the People's Republic of China, Saudi Arabia, Syria, and Vietnam, among others, are taking active measures to keep their citizens from freely accessing the Internet and obtaining international political, religious, and economic news and information.

(6) Intergovernmental, nongovernmental, and media organizations have reported the widespread and increasing pattern by authoritarian governments to block, jam, and monitor Internet access and content, using technologies such as firewalls, filters, and "black boxes". Such jamming and monitoring of individual activity on the Internet includes surveillance of e-mail messages, message boards, and the use of particular words; "stealth blocking" individuals from visiting websites; the development of "black lists" of users that seek to visit these websites; and the denial of access to the Internet.

(7) The Voice of America and Radio Free Asia, as well as hundreds of news sources with an Internet presence, are routinely being jammed by repressive governments.

(8) Since the 1940s, the United States has deployed anti-jamming technologies to make Voice of America and other United States Government sponsored broadcasting available to people in nations with governments that seek to block news and information.

(9) The United States Government has thus far commenced only modest steps to fund and deploy technologies to defeat Internet censorship. To date, the Voice of America and Radio Free Asia have committed a total of $1,000,000 for technology to counter Internet jamming by the People's Republic of China. This technology, which has been successful in attracting 100,000 electronic hits per day from the People's Republic of China, has been relied upon by Voice of America and Radio Free Asia to ensure access to their programming by citizens of the People's Republic of China, but United States Government financial support for the technology has lapsed. In most other countries there is no meaningful United States support for Internet freedom.

(10) The success of United States policy in support of freedom of speech, press, and association requires new initiatives and technologies to defeat totalitarian and authoritarian controls on news and information over the Internet.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to adopt an effective and robust global Internet freedom policy;

(2) to establish an office within the National Telecommunications and Information Administration with the sole mission of promoting technological means of countering Internet jamming and blocking by repressive regimes;

(3) to expedite the development and deployment of technology to protect Internet freedom around the world;

(4) to authorize the commitment of a substantial portion of United States Government resources to the continued development and implementation of technologies to counter the jamming of the Internet;

(5) to utilize the expertise of the private sector in the development and implementation of such technologies, so that the many current technologies used commercially for securing business transactions and providing virtual meeting space can be used to promote democracy and freedom; and

(6) to bring to bear the pressure of the free world on repressive governments guilty of Internet censorship and the intimidation and persecution of their citizens who use the Internet.

SEC. 4. DEVELOPMENT AND DEPLOYMENT OF TECHNOLOGIES TO DEFEAT INTERNET JAMMING AND CENSORSHIP.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF GLOBAL INTERNET FREEDOM.—There is established in the National Telecommunications and Information Administration the Office of Global Internet Freedom (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the “Office”). The Office shall be headed by a Director who shall develop and implement, in consultation with the International Broadcasting Bureau, a comprehensive global strategy for promoting technology to combat state-sponsored and state-directed Internet jamming and persecution of those who use the Internet.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Office $30,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 and 2004.

(c) CORPORATION OF OTHER FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES.—Each department and agency of the United States Government shall cooperate fully with, and assist in the implementation of, the strategy developed by the Office and shall make such resources and information available to the Office as is necessary to the achievement of the purposes of this Act.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—On March 1 following the date of the enactment of this Act and annually thereafter, the Director of the Office shall submit to the Congress a report on the status of state interference with Internet use and of efforts by the United States to counter such interference. Each report shall list the countries that pursue policies of Internet censorship, blocking, and other abuses; provide information concerning the government agencies or quasi-governmental organizations that implement Internet censorship; and describe with the greatest particularity practicable the technological means by which such blocking and other abuses are accomplished. In the discretion of the Director, such report may be submitted in both a classified and nonclassified version.

(e) LIMITATION ON AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this Act shall be interpreted to authorize any action by the United States to interfere with foreign national censorship for the purpose of protecting minors from harm, preserving public morality, or assisting with legitimate law enforcement aims.

SEC. 5. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that the United States should—

(1) publicly, prominently, and consistently denounce governments that restrict, censor, ban, and block access to information on the Internet;

(2) direct the United States Representative to the United Nations to submit a resolution at the next annual meeting of the United Nations Human Rights Commission condemning all governments that practice Internet censorship and deny freedom to access and share information; and

(3) deploy, at the earliest practicable date, technologies aimed at defeating state-directed Internet censorship and the persecution of those who use the Internet.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, with Senator WYDEN, the Global Internet Freedom Act.

The Internet is one of the most powerful tools to promote the exchange of ideas and to disseminate information. In that regard, it is a key component in our efforts to reach populations living under undemocratic governments that continue to restrict freedom of speech, the press, and association. Unfortunately, however, many authoritarian governments including the regimes in the People's Republic of China, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Vietnam, Cuba, and North Korea aggressively block and censor the Internet, often subjecting to torture and imprisonment those individuals who dare to resist the controls.

In Vietnam, for example, the Prime Minister issued a decree in August 2000 that prohibits individuals from using the Internet “for the purpose of hostile actions against the country or to destabilize security, violate morality, or violate other laws and regulations.” The Communist government owns and controls the sole Internet access provider, which is authorized to monitor the sites that subscribers use. It erects firewalls to block sites it deems politically or culturally inappropriate. And it is seeking additional authority to monitor some 4,000 Internet cafes in Vietnam, and hold responsible the owners of these cafes for customer use of the Internet.

The situation in Syria is no better. Like Vietnam, that country has only one government-run Internet service provider. The Government blocks access to Internet sites that contain information deemed politically sensitive including pro-Israel sites and also periodically blocks access to servers that provide free e-mail services. In 2000, the Syrian Government which monitors e-mail detained one individual for simply forwarding via e-mail a political cartoon.

sweeping regulations in the past 2 years prohibiting news and commentary on Internet sites in China that are not state-sanctioned. The Ministry of Information Industry regulates Internet access, and the Ministries of Public and State Security monitor its use. According to the State Department's most recent Country Reports on Human Rights Practices.

Despite the continued expansion of the Internet in the country, the Chinese government maintained its efforts to monitor and control content on the Internet. . . . The authorities block access to Web sites they find offensive. Authorities have at times blocked politically sensitive Web sites, including those of dissident groups and some major foreign news organizations, such as the VOA, the Washington Post, the New York Times, and the BBC.

The U.S.-China Security Review Commission noted in its recent report that China has even convinced American companies like Yahoo! to assist in its censorship efforts, and others, like America Online, to leave open the possibility of turning over names, e-mail addresses, or records of political dissidents if the Chinese Government demands them.

Those who attempt to circumvent Internet restrictions in China are often subject to harsh punishment. For example, Huang Qi, the operator of an Internet site that posted information about missing persons, including students who disappeared in the 1989 Tiananmen massacre, was tried secretly and found guilty of “subverting state power.” According to the State Department, Huang was bound hand and foot and beaten by police while they tried to force him to confess.

These are but a few examples of the incredible lengths that authoritarian governments will go to in order to preserve control over their populations and prevent change. Voice of America, Radio Free Asia, Amnesty International, and the National Endowment for Democracy—just to name a few—all utilize the Internet to try to provide news, spread democratic values, and promote human rights in these countries. But the obstacles they face are great.

The U.S. private sector is developing a number of techniques and technologies to combat Internet blocking. Unfortunately, however, the U.S. Government has contributed few resources to assist these efforts and to put the new techniques to use. For example, Voice of America and Radio Free Asia have budgeted only $1 million for technology to counter Chinese Government Internet jamming, and that funding has now expired.

This is why I am pleased to introduce the Global Internet Freedom Act. This bill will take an important step toward promoting Internet freedom throughout the world. Specifically, it establishes, within the Commerce Department's National Telecommunications and Information Administration, the Office of Global Internet Freedom. It authorizes $30 million per year in fiscal years 2003 and 2004 for this office, which would be responsible for developing and implementing a comprehensive global strategy to combat state-sponsored Internet jamming and persecution of Internet users. Additionally, the director of the office would be required to submit to Congress an annual report on U.S. efforts to counter state interference with Internet use.

Similar legislation has already been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressmen COX and LANTOS.

I cannot stress enough the importance of the Internet in promoting the flow of democratic ideas. If the benefits of the Internet are able to reach more and more people around the globe, repressive governments will begin to be challenged by individuals who are freely exchanging views and getting uncensored news and information.

The United States should take full advantage of the opportunities inherent in worldwide access to the Internet, and should make clear to the international community that fostering Internet freedom is a top priority. Creation of an Office of Global Internet Freedom will enable us to do just that.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

By Mr. DORGAN (for himself, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. BURNS, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. ALLARD, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. CAMPBELL):

S. 3094. A bill to amend the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 to clarify the rates applicable to marketing assistance loans and loan deficiency payments for other oilseeds, dry peas, lentils, and small chickpeas; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, today along with Senators ROBERTS, CONRAD, CRAPO, CRAIG, BURNS, JOHNSON, ALLARD, BROWNBACK, and CAMPBELL I am introducing legislation to clarify Congressional intent regarding minor oilseed and pulse crop loan rates in the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act, FSRIA, of 2002. This is a redraft of legislation introduced last July.

In June, the United States Department of Agriculture incorrectly interpreted the intent of the new farm bill when the Farm Service Agency arbitrarily announced a wide range of minor oilseed loan rates. For some minor oilseed crops, the loan rate increased substantially, while for others, the rates plunged. A few months later, in early September, the Farm Service Agency continued to err when it announced the loan rates for dry peas, lentils and small chickpeas that completely ignored the instructions laid down by the Statement of Managers that accompanied the conference report of the new farm bill.

Not once during the farm bill debate was there ever discussion of splitting apart minor oilseed loan rates. In fact, the minor oilseed industry and farmers alike anticipated a county-level increase in loan rates from $9.30 to 9.60/cwt. The announcement by the Farm Service Agency caught virtually everyone in the agriculture community by surprise.

This legislation is intended to correct this misinterpretation of the new farm bill, and to prevent what will certainly be extreme acreage shifts among these crops in the coming years should these rates be allowed to stand. These acreage shifts will destroy segments of the minor oilseed and pulse crop industry that have been painstakingly developed over a number of years.

For instance, already, users of the oil derived from oil sunflowers anticipate supply shortages next year and have indicated they may remove sunflower oil from their product mix. Conversely, incentives caused by the much higher confectionery sunflower loan rate could deluge USDA with massive loan forfeitures of low quality confectionery sunflowers if farmers simply grow for the loan rate rather than a quality crop that has a market.

The legislation amends the new farm bill by simply and redundantly listing each minor oilseed crop after the stated loan rate. The legislation reinstates the crambe and sesame seed loan rates that were eliminated by USDA. The legislation also puts into bill language the instructions that were spelled out in the Statement of Managers regarding a single loan rate for all sunflowers and the quality grades for the loan rates for dry peas, lentils and small chickpeas.

This legislation should not be needed. USDA could easily repeal the current announcement of minor oilseed and pulse crop loan rates in favor of rates consistent with this legislation and the new farm bill, as I and my colleagues have asked in recent meetings and letters on this issue.

I request unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3094

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MARKETING ASSISTANCE LOANS AND LOAN DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS FOR OTHER OILSEEDS, DRY PEAS, LENTILS, AND SMALL CHICKPEAS.

(a) DEFINITION OF OTHER OILSEED.—Section 1001(9) of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (7 U.S.C. 7901(9)) is amended by inserting “crambe, sesame seed,” after “mustard seed.”

(b) LOAN RATES FOR NONRECOURSE MARKETING ASSISTANCE LOANS.—Section 1202 of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (7 U.S.C. 7932) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking paragraph (10) and inserting the following:

“(10) In the case of other oilseeds, $.0960 per pound for each of the following kinds of oilseeds:

- “(A) Sunflower seed.
- “(B) Rapeseed.
- “(C) Canola.
- “(D) Safflower.
- “(E) Flaxseed.
- “(F) Mustard seed.
- “(G) Crambe.
- “(H) Sesame seed.
- “(I) Other oilseeds designated by the Secretary.”;

(2) in subsection (b), by striking paragraph (10) and inserting the following:

“(10) In the case of other oilseeds, $.0930 per pound for each of the following kinds of oilseeds:

- “(A) Sunflower seed.
- “(B) Rapeseed.
- “(C) Canola.
- “(D) Safflower.
- “(E) Flaxseed.
- “(F) Mustard seed.
- “(G) Crambe.
- “(H) Sesame seed.
- “(I) Other oilseeds designated by the Secretary.”;

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(c) SINGLE COUNTY LOAN RATE FOR OTHER OILSEEDS.—The Secretary shall establish a single loan rate in each county for each kind of other oilseeds described in subsections (a)(10) and (b)(10).

“(d) QUALITY GRADES FOR DRY PEAS, LENTILS, AND SMALL CHICKPEAS.—The loan rate for dry peas, lentils, and small chickpeas shall be based on—

“(1) in the case of dry peas, United States feed peas;

“(2) in the case of lentils, United States number 3 lentils; and

“(3) in the case of small chickpeas, United States number 3 small chickpeas that drop below a 20/64 screen.”.

(c) REPAYMENT OF LOANS.—Section 1204 of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (7 U.S.C. 7934) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking “and extra long staple cotton” and inserting “extra long staple cotton, and confectionery and each other kind of sunflower seed (other than oil sunflower seed)”;

(2) by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (h); and

(3) by inserting after subsection (e) the following:

“(f) REPAYMENT RATES FOR CONFECTIONERY AND OTHER KINDS OF SUNFLOWER SEEDS.—The Secretary shall permit the producers on a farm to repay a marketing assistance loan under section 1201 for confectionery and each other kind of sunflower seed (other than oil sunflower seed) at a rate that is the lesser of—

“(1) the loan rate established for the commodity under section 1202, plus interest (determined in accordance with section 163 of the Federal Agriculture Improvement and Reform Act of 1996 (7 U.S.C. 7283)); or

“(2) the repayment rate established for oil sunflower seed.

“(g) QUALITY GRADES FOR DRY PEAS, LENTILS, AND SMALL CHICKPEAS.—The loan repayment rate for dry peas, lentils, and small chickpeas shall be based on the quality grades for the applicable commodity specified in section 1202(d).”.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section and the amendments made by this section take effect as if included in the provisions of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-171) to which this section and the amendments relate.

By Mr. DURBIN:

S. 3095. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require premarket consultation and approval with respect to genetically engineered foods, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would strengthen consumer confidence in the safety of genetically engineered foods and genetically engineered animals that may enter the food supply. This bill, known as the Genetically Engineered Foods Act, requires an FDA review of all genetically engineered foods, and requires an environmental review to be conducted as part of the safety review for genetically engineered animals. In addition, the Genetically Engineered Foods Act creates a transparent process that will better inform and involve the public as decisions are made regarding the safety of all genetically engineered foods and animals.

Make no mistake, our country has been blessed with one of the safest and most abundant food supplies in the world, but we can always do better. Genetically engineered foods have become a major part of the American food supply in recent years. Many of the foods we consume now contain genetically engineered ingredients such as corn and soy. These foods have been enhanced with important qualities that help farmers grow crops more efficiently. However, their development has raised important questions about the safety of these foods and the adequacy of government oversight.

Currently, genetically engineered foods are screened by the Federal Food and Drug Administration under a voluntary consultation program. The Genetically Engineered Foods Act will make this review program mandatory, and will strengthen government oversight in several important ways.

Mandatory Review: Producers of genetically engineered foods must receive approval from the FDA before introducing their products into interstate commerce. The FDA will scientifically ensure that genetically engineered foods are just as safe as comparable food products before allowing them on the market.

Public Involvement: Scientific studies and other materials submitted to the FDA as part of the mandatory review of genetically engineered foods will be made available for public review and comment. Members of the public can submit any new information on genetically engineered foods not previously available to the FDA and request a new review of a particular genetically engineered food product even if that food is already on the market.

Testing: The FDA, in conjunction with other Federal agencies, will be given the authority to conduct scientifically-sound testing to determine whether genetically engineered foods are inappropriately entering the food supply.

Communication: The FDA and other Federal agencies will establish a registry of genetically engineered foods for easy access to information about those foods that have been cleared for market. The genetically engineered food review process will be fully transparent so that the public has access to all non-confidential information.

Environmental Review with respect to Animals: While genetically engineered foods such as corn and soy are already part of our food supply, genetically engineered animals will also soon be ready for market approval. These animals hold much promise for serving as an additional source of food for our nation. However, in the case of animals, we must ensure not only the safety of these products as they enter the food supply, but also the safety of these products as they come in contact with the environment.

The FDA has a mandatory review process in place that will be used to review the safety of genetically engineered animals before they enter the food supply. However, this bill will provide the FDA will additional oversight authorities to be used during the safety approval of genetically engineered animals.

Environmental issues have been identified as a major science-based concern associated with genetically engineered animals. Therefore, to obtain approval to market a genetically engineered animal, an environmental assessment must be conducted that analyzes the potential effects of the genetically engineered animal on the environment. A plan must also be in place to reduce or eliminate any negative effects. If the environmental assessment is not adequate, approval will not be granted.

Transparency: In order to gain the benefits that genetically engineered animals can offer as an additional source of food, public confidence must be maintained in the safety of the product. This bill will provide for public involvement in the approval process by providing information to consumers, as well as the opportunity to provide comments. Adding transparency will increase the public's understanding and confidence in the safety of these animals as they enter the food supply.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to strengthen consumer confidence in the safety of genetically engineered foods and genetically engineered animals that may enter the food supply. The Genetically Engineered Foods Act can help provide the public with the added assurance that genetically engineered foods and animals are safe to produce and consume. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3095

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Genetically Engineered Foods Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) genetically engineered food is rapidly becoming an integral part of domestic and international food supplies;

(2) the potential positive effects of genetically engineered foods are enormous;

(3) the potential for both anticipated and unanticipated effects exists with genetic engineering of foods;

(4) genetically engineered food not approved for human consumption has, in the past, entered the human food supply;

(5) environmental issues have been identified as a major science-based concern associated with animal biotechnology;

(6) it is essential to maintain—

(A) public confidence in—

(i) the safety of the food supply; and

(ii) the ability of the Federal Government to exercise adequate oversight of genetically engineered foods; and

(B) the ability of agricultural producers and other food producers of the United States to market, domestically and internationally, foods that have been genetically engineered;

(7) public confidence can best be maintained through careful review and formal determination of the safety of genetically engineered foods, and monitoring of the positive and negative effects of genetically engineered foods as the foods become integrated into the food supply, through a review and monitoring process that—

(A) is scientifically sound, open, and transparent;

(B) fully involves the general public; and

(C) does not subject most genetically engineered foods to the lengthy food additive approval process; and

(8) because genetically engineered foods are developed worldwide and imported into the United States, it is imperative that imported genetically engineered food be subject to the same level of oversight as domestic genetically engineered food.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

(a) THIS ACT.—In this Act, the terms "genetic engineering technique", "genetically engineered animal", "genetically engineered food", "interstate commerce", "producer", "safe", and "Secretary" have the meanings given those terms in section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321) (as amended by subsection (b)).

(b) FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT.—Section 201 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 321) is amended—

(1) in subsection (v)—

(A) by striking "(v) The term" and inserting the following:

"(v) NEW ANIMAL DRUG.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term";

(B) by striking "(1) the composition" and inserting "(A) the composition";

(C) by striking "(2) the composition" and inserting "(B) the composition"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following:

“(2) INCLUSION.—The term ‘new animal drug’ includes—

“(A) a genetic engineering technique intended to be used to produce an animal; and

“(B) a genetically engineered animal.”;

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(11) GENETIC ENGINEERING TECHNIQUE.—The term ‘genetic engineering technique’ means the use of a transformation event to derive food from a plant or animal or to produce an animal.

“(mm) GENETICALLY ENGINEERED ANIMAL.—The term ‘genetically engineered animal’ means an animal that—

“(1) is intended to be used—

“(A) in the production of a food or dietary supplement; or

“(B) for any other purpose;

“(2)(A) is produced in the United States; or

“(B) is offered for import into the United States; and

“(3) is produced using a genetic engineering technique.

“(nn) GENETICALLY ENGINEERED FOOD.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘genetically engineered food’ means a food or dietary supplement, or a seed, microorganism, or ingredient intended to be used to produce a food or dietary supplement, that—

“(A)(i) is produced in the United States; or “(ii) is offered for import into the United States; and “(B) is produced using a genetic engineering technique.

“(2) INCLUSION.—The term ‘genetically engineered food’ includes a split use food.

“(3) EXCLUSION.—The term ‘genetically engineered food’ does not include a genetically engineered animal.

“(oo) PRODUCER.—The term ‘producer’, with respect to a genetically engineered animal, genetically engineered food, or genetic engineering technique, means a person, company, or other entity that—

“(1) develops, manufactures, or imports the genetically engineered animal, genetically engineered food, or genetic engineering technique; or

“(2) takes other action to introduce the genetically engineered animal, genetically engineered food, or genetic engineering technique into interstate commerce.

“(pp) SAFE.—The term ‘safe’, with respect to a genetically engineered food, means as safe as comparable food that is not produced using a genetic engineering technique.

“(qq) SPLIT USE FOOD.—The term ‘split use food’ means a product that—

“(1)(A) is produced in the United States; or

“(B) is offered for import into the United States;

“(2) is produced using a genetic engineering technique; and

“(3) could be used as food by both humans and animals but that the producer does not intend to market as food for humans.

“(rr) TRANSFORMATION EVENT.—The term ‘transformation event’ means the introduction into an organism of genetic material that has been manipulated in vitro.”.

SEC. 4. GENETICALLY ENGINEERED FOODS.

Chapter IV of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 341 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the chapter heading the following:

“Subchapter A—General Provisions”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“Subchapter B—Genetically Engineered Foods

“SEC. 421. PREMARKET CONSULTATION AND APPROVAL.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—A producer of genetically engineered food, before introducing a genetically engineered food into interstate commerce, shall first obtain approval through the use of a premarket consultation and approval process.

“(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall promulgate regulations that describe—

“(1) all information that is required to be submitted for the premarketing approval process, including—

“(A) specification of the species or other taxonomic classification of plants for which approval is sought;

“(B) identification of the genetically engineered food;

“(C)(i) a description of each type of genetic manipulation made to the genetically engineered food;

“(ii) identification of the manipulated genetic material; and

“(iii) the techniques used in making the manipulation;

“(D) the effect of the genetic manipulation on the composition of the genetically engineered food (including information describing the specific substances that were expressed, removed, or otherwise manipulated);

“(E) a description of the actual or proposed applications and uses of the genetically engineered food;

“(F) information pertaining to—

“(i) the safety of the genetically engineered food as a whole; and

“(ii) the safety of any specific substances introduced or altered as a result of the genetic manipulation (including information on allergenicity and toxicity);

“(G) test methods for detection of the genetically engineered ingredients in food;

“(H) a summary and overview of information and issues that have been or will be addressed by other regulatory programs for the review of genetically engineered food;

“(I) procedures to be followed to initiate and complete the premarket approval process (including any preconsultation and consultation procedures); and “(J) any other matters that the Secretary determines to be necessary.

“(2) SPLIT USE FOOD.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The regulations under paragraph (1) shall provide for the approval of—

“(i) split use foods that are not approved for human consumption;

“(ii) split use foods that are intended for human use but are marketed under restricted conditions; and “(iii) other categories of split use food.

“(B) ISSUES.—For each category of split use food, the regulations shall address—

“(i)(I) whether a protocol is needed for segregating a restricted split use food from the food supply; and “(II) if so, what the protocol shall be;

“(ii)(I) whether action is needed to ensure the purity of any seed to prevent unintended introduction of a genetically engineered trait into a seed that is not designed for that trait; and

“(II) if so, what action is needed and what industry practices represent the best practices for maintaining the purity of the seed;

“(iii)(I) whether a tolerance level should exist regarding cross-mixing of segregated split use foods; and

“(II) if so, the means by which the tolerance level shall be determined;

“(iv) the manner in which the food safety analysis under this section should be conducted, specifying different standards and procedures depending on the degree of containment for that product and the likelihood of the product to enter the food supply;

“(v)(I) the kinds of surveillance that are needed to ensure that appropriate segregation of split use foods is being maintained;

“(II) the manner in which and by whom the surveillance shall be conducted; and “(III) the manner in which the results of surveillance shall be reported; and “(vi) clarification of responsibility in cases of breakdown of segregation of a split use food.

“(C) RECALL AUTHORITY.—The regulations shall provide that, in addition to other authority that the Secretary has regarding split use food, the Secretary may order a recall of any split use food (whether or not the split use food has been approved under this section) that—

“(i) is not approved, but has entered the food supply; or

“(ii) has entered the food supply in violation of a condition of restriction under an approval.

“(c) APPLICATION.—The regulations shall require that, as part of the consultation and approval process, a producer submit to the Secretary an application that includes a summary and a complete copy of each research study, test result, or other information referenced by the producer.

“(d) REVIEW.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—After receiving an application under subsection (c), the Secretary shall—

“(A) determine whether the producer submitted information that appears to be adequate to enable the Secretary to fully assess the safety of the genetically engineered food, and make a description of the determination publicly available; and

“(B) if the Secretary determines that the producer submitted adequate information—

“(i) provide public notice regarding the initiation of the consultation and approval process;

“(ii) make the notice, application, summaries submitted by the producer, and research, test results, and other information referenced by the producer publicly available, including, to the maximum extent practicable, publication in the Federal Register and on the Internet; and

“(iii) provide the public with an opportunity, for not less than 45 days, to submit comments on the application.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may withhold information in an application from public dissemination to protect a trade secret if—

“(A) the information is exempt from disclosure under section 522 of title 5, United States Code, or applicable trade secret law;

“(B) the applicant—

“(i) identifies with specificity the trade secret information in the application; and

“(ii) provides the Secretary with a detailed justification for each trade secret claim; and

“(C) the Secretary—

“(i) determines that the information qualifies as a trade secret subject to withholding from public dissemination; and

“(ii) makes the determination available to the public.

“(3) DETERMINATION.—Not later than 180 days after receiving the application, the Secretary shall issue and make publicly available a determination that—

“(A) summarizes the information referenced by the producer in light of the public comments; and

“(B) contains a finding that the genetically engineered food—

“(i) is safe and may be introduced into interstate commerce;

“(ii) is safe under specified conditions of use and may be introduced into interstate commerce if those conditions are met; or

“(iii) is not safe and may not be introduced into interstate commerce, because the genetically engineered food—

“(I) contains genes that confer antibiotic resistance;

“(II) contains an allergen; or

“(III) presents 1 or more other safety concerns described by the Secretary.

“(4) EXTENSION.—The Secretary may extend the period specified in paragraph (3) if the Secretary determines that an extension of the period is necessary to allow the Secretary to—

“(A) review additional information; or

“(B) address 1 or more issues or concerns of unusual complexity.

“(e) RESCISSION OF APPROVAL.—

“(1) RECONSIDERATION.—On the petition of any person, or on the Secretary's own motion, the Secretary may reconsider an approval of a genetically engineered food on the basis of information that was not available before the approval.

“(2) FINDING FOR RECONSIDERATION.—The Secretary shall conduct a reconsideration on the basis of the information described in paragraph (1) if the Secretary finds that the information—

“(A) is scientifically credible;

“(B) represents significant information that was not available before the approval; and

“(C)(i) suggests potential impacts relating to the genetically engineered food that were not considered in the earlier review; or

“(ii) demonstrates that the information considered before the approval was inadequate for the Secretary to make a safety finding.

“(3) INFORMATION FROM THE PRODUCER.—In conducting the reconsideration, the Secretary may require the producer to provide information needed to facilitate the reconsideration.

“(4) DETERMINATION.—After reviewing the information by the petitioner and the producer, the Secretary shall issue a determination that—

“(A) revises the finding made in connection with the approval with respect to the safety of the genetically engineered food; or

“(B) states that, for reasons stated by the Secretary, no revision of the finding is needed.

“(5) ACTION BY THE SECRETARY.—If, based on a reconsideration under this section, the Secretary determines that the genetically engineered food is not safe, the Secretary shall—

“(A) rescind the approval of the genetically engineered food for introduction into interstate commerce;

“(B) recall the genetically engineered food; or

“(C) take such other action as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(f) EXEMPTIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may by regulation exempt a category of genetically engineered food from the regulations under subsection (b) if the Secretary determines that the category of food does not pose a food safety risk.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—A regulation under paragraph (1) shall—

“(A) contain a narrowly specified definition of the category that is exempted;

“(B) describe with specificity the genetically engineered foods that are included in the category; and

“(C) describe with specificity the genes, proteins, and adjunct technologies (including use of markers or promoters) that are involved in the genetic engineering of the foods included in the category.

“SEC. 422. MARKETPLACE TESTING.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall establish a program to conduct testing that the Secretary determines to be necessary to detect, at all stages of production and distribution (from agricultural production to retail sale), the presence of genetically engineered ingredients in food.

“(b) PERMISSIBLE TESTING.—Under the program, the Secretary may conduct tests on foods to detect genetically engineered ingredients—

“(1) that have not been approved for use under this Act, including foods that are developed in foreign countries that have not been approved for marketing in the United States under this Act; or

“(2) the use of which is restricted under this Act (including approval for use as animal feed only, approval only if properly labeled, and approval for growing or marketing only in certain regions).

“SEC. 423. REGISTRY.

“(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the heads of other agencies, as appropriate, shall establish a registry for genetically engineered food that contains a description of the regulatory status of all genetically engineered foods approved under section 421.

“(1) the technical and common names of the genetically engineered food; and

“(2) a description of the regulatory status, under all Federal programs pertaining to the testing and approval of genetically engineered foods, of the genetically engineered food;

“(3) a technical and nontechnical summary of the type of, and a statement of the reason for, each genetic manipulation made to the genetically engineered food;

“(4) the name, title, address, and telephone number of an official at each producer of the genetically engineered food whom members of the public may contact for information about the genetically engineered food;

“(5) the name, title, address, and telephone number of an official at each Federal agency with oversight responsibility over the genetically engineered food whom members of the public may contact for information about the genetically engineered food; and

“(6) such other information as the Secretary determines should be included.

“(c) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The registry under subsection (a) shall be made available to the public, including availability on the Internet.”.

SEC. 5. GENETICALLY ENGINEERED ANIMALS.

Chapter V of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 351 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 512 the following:

“SEC. 512A. GENETICALLY ENGINEERED ANIMALS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 512 shall apply to genetic engineering techniques intended to be used to produce an animal, and to genetically engineered animals, as provided in this section.

“(b) APPLICATION.—An application under section 512(b)(1) shall include—

“(1) specification of the species or other taxonomic classification of the animal for which approval is sought;

“(2) an environmental assessment that analyzes the potential effects of the genetically engineered animal on the environment, including the potential effect on any non-genetically engineered animal or other part of the environment as a result of any intentional or unintentional exposure of the genetically engineered animal to the environment; and

“(3) a plan to eliminate or mitigate the potential effects to the environment from the release of the genetically engineered animal.

“(c) DISSEMINATION OF APPLICATION AND OPPORTUNITY FOR PUBLIC COMMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—On receipt of an application under section 512(b)(1), the Secretary shall—

“(A) provide public notice regarding the application, including making the notice available on the Internet;

“(B) make the application and all supporting material available to the public, including availability on the Internet; and

“(C) provide the public with an opportunity, for not less than 45 days, to submit comments on the application.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may withhold information in an application from public dissemination to protect a trade secret if—

“(i) the information is exempt from disclosure under section 522 of title 5, United States Code, or applicable trade secret law;

“(ii) the applicant—

“(I) identifies with specificity the trade secret information in the application; and

“(II) provides the Secretary with a detailed justification for each trade secret claim; and

“(iii) the Secretary—

“(I) determines that the information qualifies as a trade secret subject to withholding from public dissemination; and

“(II) makes the determination available to the public.

“(B) RISK ASSESSMENT INFORMATION.—This paragraph does not apply to information that assesses risks from the release into the environment of a genetically engineered animal (including any environmental assessment or environmental impact statement performed to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.)).

“(d) DENIAL OF APPLICATION.—Under section 512(d)(1), the Secretary shall deny an application if—

“(1) the environmental assessment for a genetically engineered animal is not adequate; or

“(2) the plan to eliminate or mitigate the potential environmental effects to the environment from the release of the genetically engineered animal does not adequately protect the environment.

“(e) ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Before determining whether to approve an application under section 512 for approval of a genetic engineering technique intended to be used to produce an animal, or of a genetically engineered animal, the Secretary shall—

“(A) conduct an environmental assessment to evaluate the potential effects of such a genetically engineered animal on the environment; and

“(B) determine that the genetically engineered animal will not have an unreasonable adverse effect on the environment.

“(2) CONSULTATION.—In conducting an environmental assessment under paragraph (1), the Secretary may consult, as appropriate, with the Department of Agriculture, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, and any other Federal agency that has expertise relating to the animal species that is the subject of the application.

“(f) SAFETY DETERMINATION.—In determining the safety of a genetic engineering technique or genetically engineered animal, the Secretary shall consider the potential effects of the genetically engineered animal on the environment, including the potential effect on nongenetically engineered animals.

“(g) PROGENY.—If an application for approval of a genetic engineering technique to produce an animal of a species or other taxonomic classification, or genetically engineered animal, has been approved, no additional application shall be required for animals of that species or other taxonomic classification produced using that genetic engineering technique or for the progeny of that genetically engineered animal.

“(h) CONDITIONS OF APPROVAL.—The Secretary may require as a condition of approval of an application that any producer of a genetically engineered animal that is the subject of the application—

“(1) take specified actions to eliminate or mitigate any potential harm to the environment that would be caused by a release of the genetically engineered animal, including actions specified in the plan submitted by the applicant; and

“(2) conduct post-approval monitoring for environmental effects of any release of the genetically engineered animal

“(i) RECALL; SUSPENSION OF APPROVAL.—

“(1) RECALL.—The Secretary may order a recall of any genetically engineered animal (whether or not the genetically engineered animal, or a genetic engineering technique used to produce the genetically engineered animal, has been approved) that the Secretary determines is harmful to—

“(A) humans;

“(B) the environment;

“(C) any animal that is subjected to a genetic engineering technique; or “(D) any animal that is not subjected to a genetic engineering technique.

“(2) SUSPENSION OF APPROVAL.—If the Secretary determines that a genetically engineered animal is harmful to the health of humans or animals or to the environment, the Secretary may—

“(A) immediately suspend the approval of application for the genetically engineered animal;

“(B) give the applicant prompt notice of the action; and “(C) afford the applicant an opportunity for an expedited hearing.

“(j) RESCISSION OF APPROVAL.—

“(1) RECONSIDERATION.—On the motion of any person, or on the Secretary's own motion, the Secretary may reconsider an approval of a genetic engineering technique or genetically engineered animal on the basis of information that was not available during an earlier review.

“(2) FINDING FOR RECONSIDERATION.—The Secretary shall conduct a reconsideration on the basis of the information described in paragraph (1) if the Secretary finds that the information—

“(A) is scientifically credible;

“(B) represents significant information that was not available before the approval; and

“(C)(i) suggests potential impacts relating to the genetically engineered animal that were not considered before the approval; or

“(ii) demonstrates that the information considered before the approval was inadequate for the Secretary to make a safety finding.

“(3) INFORMATION FROM THE PRODUCER.—In conducting the reconsideration, the Secretary may require the producer to provide information needed to facilitate the reconsideration.

“(4) DETERMINATION.—After reviewing the information by the petitioner and the producer, the Secretary shall issue a determination that—

“(A) revises the finding made in connection with the approval with respect to the safety of the genetically engineered animal; or

“(B) states that, for reasons stated by the Secretary, no revision of the finding is needed.

“(5) ACTION BY THE SECRETARY.—If, based on a review under this subsection, the Secretary determines that the genetically engineered animal is not safe, the Secretary shall—

“(A) rescind the approval of the genetic engineering technique or genetically engineered animal for introduction into interstate commerce;

“(B) recall the genetically engineered animal; or

“(C) take such other action as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.”.

SEC. 6. PROHIBITED ACTS.

(a) UNLAWFUL USE OF TRADE SECRET INFORMATION.—Section 301(j) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 331(j)) is amended in the first sentence—

(1) by inserting “421,” after “414,”; and

(2) by inserting “512A,” after “512.”.

(b) ADULTERATED FOOD.—Section 402 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 342) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(i) GENETICALLY ENGINEERED ANIMALS.—If it is a genetically engineered animal, or is a genetically engineered animal produced using a genetic engineering technique, that is not approved under sections 512 and 512A.

“(j) GENETICALLY ENGINEERED FOODS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If it is a genetically engineered food, or is a genetically engineered food produced using a genetic engineering technique, that is not approved under section 421.

“(2) SPLIT USE FOODS.—If it is a split use food that does not maintain proper segregation as required under regulations promulgated under section 421.”.

SEC. 7. TRANSITION PROVISION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food that entered interstate commerce before the date of enactment of this Act shall not require approval under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.), but shall be considered to have been so approved, if—

(1) the producer, not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submits to the Secretary—

(A) a notice stating that the genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food entered interstate commerce before the date of enactment of this Act, providing such information as the Secretary may require; and

(B) a request that the Secretary conduct a review of the genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food under subsection (b); and

(2) the Secretary does not issue, on or before the date that is 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, a notice under subsection (b)(2) that an application for approval is required.

(b) REVIEW BY THE SECRETARY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 21 months after the date on which the Secretary receives a notice and request for review under subsection (a), the Secretary shall review all relevant information in the possession of the Secretary, all information provided by the producer, and other relevant public information to determine whether a review of new scientific information is necessary to ensure that the genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food is safe.

(2) NOTICE THAT APPLICATION IS REQUIRED.—If the Secretary determines that new scientific information is necessary to determine whether a genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food is safe, the Secretary, not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, shall issue to the producer a notice stating that the producer is required to submit an application for approval of the genetic engineering technique, genetically engineered animal, or genetically engineered food under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.).

(c) FAILURE TO SUBMIT APPLICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a genetically engineered animal or genetically engineered food with respect to which the Secretary issues a notice that an application is required under subsection (b)(2) shall be considered adulterated under section 402 or 501, as the case may be, of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 342, 351) unless—

(A) not later than 45 days after the producer receives the notice, the producer submits an application for approval; and

(B) the Secretary approves the application.

(2) PENDING APPLICATION.—A genetically engineered animal or genetically engineered food with respect to which the producer submits an application for approval shall not be considered to be adulterated during the pendency of the application.

SEC. 8. REPORTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years, 4 years, and 6 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary and the heads of other Federal agencies, as appropriate, shall jointly submit to Congress a report on genetically engineered animals, genetically engineered foods, and genetic engineering techniques.

(b) CONTENTS.—A report under subsection (a) shall contain—

(1) information on the types and quantities of genetically engineered foods being offered for sale or being developed, domestically and internationally;

(2) a summary (including discussion of new developments and trends) of the legal status and acceptability of genetically engineered foods in major markets, including the European Union and Japan;

(3) information on current and emerging issues of concern relating to genetic engineering techniques, including issues relating to—

(A) the ecological impact of, antibiotic markers for, insect resistance to, nonterminating or terminator seeds for, or cross-species gene transfer for genetically engineered foods;

(B) foods from genetically engineered animals;

(C) nonfood crops (such as cotton) produced using a genetic engineering technique; and

(D) socioeconomic concerns (such as the impact of genetically engineered animals and genetically engineered foods on small farms);

(4) a response to, and information concerning the status of implementation of, the recommendations contained in the reports entitled "Genetically Modified Pest Protected Plants", "Environmental Effects of Transgenic Plants", and "Animal Biotechnology Identifying Science-Based Concerns", issued by the National Academy of Sciences;

(5) an assessment of the need for data relating to genetically engineered animals and genetically engineered foods;

(6) a projection of—

(A) the number of genetically engineered animals, genetically engineered foods, and genetic engineering techniques that will require regulatory review during the 5-year period following the date of the report; and

(B) the adequacy of the resources of the Food and Drug Administration; and

(7) an evaluation of the national capacity to test foods for the presence of genetically engineered ingredients in food.

By Mr. KOHL (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. SCHUMER, and Mr. REED):

S. 3096. A bill to amend chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, to require ballistics testing of all firearms manufactured and all firearms in custody of Federal agencies; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleagues Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator SCHUMER, and Senator REED to introduce "BLAST", the Ballistics, Law Assistance, and Safety Technology Act.

Never before have the tremendous law enforcement benefits of ballistics testing been so apparent. We have the technology to "fingerprint" every new gun, and if we were using it today, we would be well on our way toward stopping the serial killer who even now is preying on the residents of suburban Washington.

Every gun has a unique "fingerprint", the distinct patterns left on spent casings and bullets after it is fired. What we need to do is create a comprehensive library of the ballistic images of all new guns sold in the U.S. as they come off the assembly line and a library of the images of all guns used in crimes. With those libraries in place, new technology would allow us to compare those "gun prints" with bullets found at crime scenes, bullets like those found from the Washington area sniper's gun.

By keeping a computerized image of each new gun's fingerprint, police can compare the microscopic differences in markings left by each gun until they find a match. Once a match is found, law enforcement can begin tracing that weapon from its original sale to the person who used it to commit the crime.

Police tell of solving multiple crimes simply by comparing bullets and shell casings found at the scene of a crime to a gun seized in a seemingly unrelated incident. Let me explain how ballistics testing works and how our measure is crucial to the fight against crime.

The only evidence at the scene of a recent brutal homicide in Milwaukee was 9 millimeter cartridge casings, there were no other clues. But four months later, when a teenage male was arrested on an unrelated charge, he was found to be in possession of the firearm that had discharged those casings. Ballistics linked the two cases. Prosecutors successfully prosecuted three adult suspects for the homicide and convicted the teen in juvenile court.

On September 9, 2000, several suspects were arrested in Boston for the illegal possession of three handguns. Each of the guns was test fired, and the ballistics information was compared to evidence found at other crime scenes. The police quickly found that the three guns were used in the commission of 15 felonies in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. This routine arrest for illegal possession of firearms provided police with new leads in the investigation of 15 unsolved crimes. Without the ballistics testing, these crimes would not have been linked and might have never been solved.

Since the early 1990's, more than 250 crime labs and law enforcement agencies in more than 40 states have been operating independent ballistics systems maintained by either the ATF or the FBI. Together, ATF's Integrated Ballistics Identification System, "IBIS", and the FBI's DRUGFIRE system have been responsible for linking 5,700 guns to two or more crimes where corroborating evidence was otherwise lacking.

While success stories are increasingly frequent, the potential of ballistics testing is still untapped. One way that the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is making ballistics testing more accessible to State and local law enforcement is through the installation of a new network of ballistics imaging machines. The final introduction of the machines across the country is almost complete and, once it is, the computers will be able to access each other and search for a greater number of images. The National Integrated Ballistics Information network, better known as "NIBIN," will permit law enforcement in one locality access to information stored in other gun crime databases around the entire country. This will help law enforcement exponentially in their efforts to solve gun crimes.

But ballistics testing is only as useful as the number of images in the database. Today, almost all jurisdictions are limited to images of bullets and cartridge casings that come from guns used in crimes. Our bill would dramatically expand the scope of that database by mandating that all guns manufactured or imported would be test fired before being placed into the stream of commerce. The images collected from the test firing would then be collected and accessible to law enforcement, and law enforcement only, for the purpose of investigating and prosecuting gun crimes.

As local, State and Federal law enforcement authorities search for the deranged murderer who has been terrorizing the Washington D.C. metropolitan area, they are using ballistics testing to determine whether the bullets and shell casings found at the scene of each crime are from the same gun. They can then identify the gun, giving them a better idea of what, and who, they are looking for in their manhunt. Had the gun used in these crimes been subject to a test fire before being placed in the stream of commerce, authorities would be able to identify the gun based on the bullets and casings. With that information, law enforcement could then trace the sale and transfer of the firearm in an effort to identify the owner of the gun and solve the crime.

Today, police can find out more about a human being than they can about a gun used in a crime. Law enforcement can use DNA testing, take fingerprints and blood samples, search a person's health records, peruse bank records and credit card statements, obtain phone records and get a list of book purchases to link a suspect to a crime. Yet, the bullets found at the scene of a crime often cannot be traced back to the gun used because our ballistics images database is not comprehensive. We are unnecessarily limiting law enforcement's ability to track the criminals who have used guns in the commission of a crime. The BLAST bill will change all that, by making gun crimes easier to solve, all of us will be safer.

The burden on manufacturers is minimal, we authorize funds to underwrite the cost of testing, and the assistance to law enforcement is considerable. And don't take my word for it, ask the gun manufacturers and the police. Listen to what Paul Januzzo, the vice-president of the gun manufacturer Glock, said in reference to ballistics testing, "our mantra has been that the issue is crime control, not gun control . . . it would be two-faced of us not to want this." In their agreement with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Smith & Wesson agreed to perform ballistics testing on all new handguns. And Ben Wilson, the chief of the firearms section at ATF, emphasized the importance of ballistics testing as a investigative device, "This [ballistics] allows you literally to find a needle in a haystack."

To be sure, we are sensitive to the notion that law abiding hunters and sportsmen need to be protected from any misuse of the ballistics database by government. The BLAST bill explicitly prohibits ballistics information from being used for any purpose unless it is necessary for the investigation of a gun crime.

The BLAST bill will enhance a revolutionary new technology that helps solve crime. BLAST is a worthwhile piece of crime control legislation. I hope that the Senate will quickly move to pass it.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3096

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Ballistics, Law Assistance, and Safety Technology Act" or the "BLAST Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to increase public safety by assisting law enforcement in solving more gun-related crimes and offering prosecutors evidence to link felons to gun crimes through ballistics technology;

(2) to provide for ballistics testing of all new firearms for sale to assist in the identification of firearms used in crimes;

(3) to require ballistics testing of all firearms in custody of Federal agencies to assist in the identification of firearms used in crimes; and

(4) to add ballistics testing to existing law enforcement programs.

SEC. 3. DEFINITION OF BALLISTICS.

Section 921(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(35) BALLISTICS.—The term 'ballistics' means a comparative analysis of fired bullets and cartridge casings to identify the firearm from which bullets and cartridge casings were discharged, through identification of the unique characteristics that each firearm imprints on bullets and cartridge casings."

SEC. 4. TEST FIRING AND AUTOMATED STORAGE OF BALLISTICS RECORDS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 923 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(m)(1) In addition to the other licensing requirements under this section, a licensed manufacturer or licensed importer shall—

"(A) test fire firearms manufactured or imported by such licensees as specified by the Secretary by regulation;

"(B) prepare ballistics images of the fired bullet and cartridge casings from the test fire;

"(C) make the records available to the Secretary for entry in a computerized database; and

"(D) store the fired bullet and cartridge casings in such a manner and for such a period as specified by the Secretary by regulation.

"(2) Nothing in this subsection creates a cause of action against any Federal firearms licensee or any other person for any civil liability except for imposition of a civil penalty under this section.

"(3)(A) The Attorney General and the Secretary shall assist firearm manufacturers and importers in complying with paragraph (1) through—

"(i) the acquisition, disposition, and upgrades of ballistics equipment and bullet and cartridge casing recovery equipment to be placed at or near the sites of licensed manufacturers and importers;

"(ii) the hiring or designation of personnel necessary to develop and maintain a database of ballistics images of fired bullets and cartridge casings, research and evaluation;

"(iii) providing education about the role of ballistics as part of a comprehensive firearm crime reduction strategy;

"(iv) providing for the coordination among Federal, State, and local law enforcement and regulatory agencies and the firearm industry to curb firearm-related crime and illegal firearm trafficking; and

"(v) any other steps necessary to make ballistics testing effective.

"(B) The Attorney General and the Secretary shall—

"(i) establish a computer system through which State and local law enforcement agencies can promptly access ballistics records stored under this subsection, as soon as such a capability is available; and

"(ii) encourage training for all ballistics examiners.

"(4) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection and annually thereafter, the Attorney General and the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives a report regarding the impact of this section, including—

"(A) the number of Federal and State criminal investigations, arrests, indictments, and prosecutions of all cases in which access to ballistics records provided under this section served as a valuable investigative tool in the prosecution of gun crimes;

"(B) the extent to which ballistics records are accessible across jurisdictions; and

"(C) a statistical evaluation of the test programs conducted pursuant to section 6 of the Ballistics, Law Assistance, and State Technology Act.

"(5) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Justice and the Department of the Treasury for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2004, $20,000,000 to carry out this subsection, including—

"(A) installation of ballistics equipment and bullet and cartridge casing recovery equipment;

"(B) establishment of sites for ballistics testing;

"(C) salaries and expenses of necessary personnel; and

"(D) research and evaluation.

"(6) The Secretary and the Attorney General shall conduct mandatory ballistics testing of all firearms obtained or in the possession of their respective agencies."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date on which the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Board of the National Integrated Ballistics Information Network, certify that the ballistics systems used by the Department of Justice and the Department of the Treasury are sufficiently interoperable to make mandatory ballistics testing of new firearms possible.

(2) BALLISTICS TESTING.—Section 923(m)(1) of title 18, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) EFFECTIVE ON DATE OF ENACTMENT.—Section 923(m)(6) of title 18, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. PRIVACY RIGHTS OF LAW ABIDING CITIZENS.

Ballistics information of individual guns in any form or database established by this Act may not be used for prosecutorial purposes unless law enforcement officials have a reasonable belief that a crime has been committed and that ballistics information would assist in the investigation of that crime.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleague Senator KOHL in introducing the Ballistics, Law Assistance, and Safety Technology Act. This legislation would build on the success of the existing National Integrated Ballistic Information Network by requiring, for the first time, ballistics testing of all new firearms so that law enforcement can more effectively trace bullets or cartridge casings recovered from shootings.

As we have learned from the horrific series of sniper shootings in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area over the past week, law enforcement already has the technology to link bullets or casings found at separate crime scenes back to a single gun. Every firearm has individual characteristics that are as unique to it as fingerprints are to human beings. When a gun is fired, it transfers these characteristics, in the form of small, sometimes microscopic scratches and dents, to the projectiles and cartridge casings fired in it.

These unique fingerprints offer a great crime-solving tool for law enforcement. When bullets or cartridge casings are found at a crime scene, firearms examiners can use the marks for comparison, to determine whether or not the bullets or casings were expelled from a suspect's firearm. If a firearm is recovered at the scene, a test fire of the weapon creates example bullets and cartridge casings for comparison to those found in or near a victim. Bullets and casings found at one crime scene can also be compared with those found at another in order to link the crimes.

On the national level, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms recently combined their ballistics identification programs into the National Integrated Ballistic Information Network, or NIBIN, which provides for the installation and networking of automated ballistic imaging equipment in state and local law enforcement agencies across the country. Because thousands more pieces of recovered ballistic evidence can be compared using digital automation than would be possible using only manual comparisons, links between otherwise seemingly unrelated crimes are discovered, and investigative leads are generated for police followup.

Ballistics imaging technology is already demonstrating its potential to revolutionize criminal investigation.

But a major tool for law enforcement is missing here, and that is a national ballistics fingerprint system that would enable law enforcement to trace crime scene evidence back to a suspect. The current NIBIN system provides valuable information on guns that have been used in crime, but unless such a gun was used in a previous crime for which ballistics evidence was collected and entered, the bullets or casings from the crime scene will find no match in the NIBIN system. No ballistics data are available for most of the estimated 200 million guns in this country, and no ballistics fingerprint information is being collected on the three to five million new guns coming into commerce in the United States each year. As a result, law enforcement usually has no way to trace the evidence back to a specific firearm and, ultimately, a suspect.

The bill we are introducing today would give law enforcement the tools it needs to fight violent crime by requiring gun manufacturers and importers to test fire all new firearms, prepare ballistics images of the fired bullet and cartridge casings, and make these records available to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms for entry in a computerized database which would be shared with state and local law enforcement agencies across the country. The bill also provides $20 million per year for ATF to help gun manufacturers and importers comply with these requirements by installing or upgrading ballistics equipment at or near the places of business of manufacturers and importers.

I have no doubt that the National Rifle Association and some in the gun industry are going to say that what we are proposing is tantamount to establishing a national registry of gun owners. I want to point out that this bill does not require the submission to law enforcement of any information beyond the ballistic images produced by test firing the gun. The names of any people or businesses that buy guns from federally licensed manufacturers or importers will continue to be kept in the files of those manufacturers and importers just as the law requires today. Law enforcement would only have access to this information in the context of a criminal investigation, for example when the evidence from a crime scene matches a ballistics fingerprint record for a gun produced and sold by a certain manufacturer or importer.

We should have taken these steps years ago. If we had, maybe the ballistic evidence from this week's sniper shootings would match an image in the law enforcement database, and we could save lives by identifying and arresting this cold-blooded killer before he strikes again. But the gun lobby has prevented the creation of an effective ballistics database by portraying this as a national gun registry. In fact, they have been so successful that even though two States, Maryland and New York, have created a ballistics fingerprint system for all guns sold in those States, the ATF's NIBIN system is not even allowed to access those records, nor can law enforcement agencies in other States look at the records through the NIBIN network. We will never know how many violent crimes may go unsolved because of this insane restriction on law enforcement's ability to do its job.

We have a responsibility to give law enforcement authorities the tools they need to quickly track down and bring to justice those who would use firearms to prey on our communities. The bill we are introducing today will do that by taking full advantage of the crime-fighting benefits that ballistic imaging and analysis can provide. I urge all of my colleagues to support this important legislation.

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 3097. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a non-refundable credit for holders of qualified highway bonds; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the MEGA INNOVATE ACT. Maximum Economic Growth for America through Innovative Financing.

MEGA Innovate is part of a series of bi-partisan bills that Senator CRAPO and I have introduced that serve as our proposals for TEA 21 Reauthorization.

I was privileged to have been an author of TEA 21, and I look forward to working with my fellow Finance Committee members, EPW Committee members, as well as members on other Committees, as we craft the next highway bill under the leadership of Senator JEFFORDS.

The Finance Committee has held hearings that examined how to provide funding for our highway system. We heard about projections for Trust Fund income over the next 10 years.

As successful as standard financing has been, our transportation needs far outweigh our resources.

The MEGA INNOVATE ACT is about increasing financing to the Highway Trust Fund without raising taxes. I am looking at additional means of financing to supplement the Highway Trust Fund in order to meet our Nation's transportation needs.

In recent years there has been increased recognition, throughout the country, of the important contribution that a strong highway program makes to our nation's economic prosperity and quality of life.

In Montana it is our economy's "golden egg" so to speak.

As we prepare to reauthorize the highway program next year, a fundamental question for the Congress is how to increase the level of investment, for the benefit of all citizens and all States.

Earlier this year Senator CRAPO and I introduced bi-partisan legislation with 12 co-sponsors, S. 2678—the MEGA TRUST Act, Maximum Economic Growth for America through the Highway Trust Fund. This bill laid out some ways to increase investment in the highway program without raising taxes.

That legislation would allow the Highway Trust Fund to be properly credited with taxes either paid or foregone with respect to gasoline consumption.

It would also reinstate the principle that the highway and mass transit accounts of the Highway Trust Fund should be credited with interest on their respective balances.

Those are important reforms that I believe we must enact as soon as possible. But we must continue to work to find additional ways to enable a stronger level of highway investment, because that investment is so important and beneficial to the country.

Today I am introducing the MEGA INNOVATE Act—Maximum Economic Growth for America Through Innovative Financing.

Under this legislation the Secretary of the Treasury would sell Tax Credit Bonds with the proceeds being placed in the Highway Account of the Highway Trust Fund. The Treasury would be responsible for the principal and interest.

The bond proceeds will enable the basic highway program to grow and would help the citizens of every state.

Administration of this initiative will be simple. No new structures are required. This is a new idea that does not raise taxes, but would advance our national interest in a strong highway program.

As this is a new idea for highways, the bill introduces this concept at a very modest level, in the range of $3 billion annually in bond sales.

However, when combined with the provisions of the MEGA TRUST Act, and the continuation of current sources of revenue, this legislation should enable the highway program to achieve an obligation level of approximately $41 to 42 billion by fiscal year 2009.

Many other officials and organizations have shown interest in both MEGA TRUST and MEGA INNOVATE, such as the State DOTs of Montana, Idaho, North and South Dakota and Wyoming. Highway Advocate groups, such as the Highway Users Alliance have also shown support for both bills.

I very much appreciate the support of these groups, as well as the support of others for these two important initiatives.

A well-funded highway program is certainly essential to the economic future of my State of Montana and to other States.

So, I look forward to working with my colleagues on the MEGA INNOVATE ACT, on the MEGA TRUST ACT, and all my other MEGA bills. I also look forward to looking at other ways to help our citizens benefit from increased levels of highway investment.

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. GRAMM):

S. 3098. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to establish a program for the competitive acquisition of items and services under the Medicare program; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today with my friend and colleague from Texas, Mr. Gramm, to introduce the Medicare Competition Acquisition Act of 2002.

Today, we are faced with the reality that the Medicare program must be reformed for the 21st Century. In the 37 years since Medicare was created, several medical advances have been achieved. It is time to reap the full benefits of those advances and shift the focus of the Medicare program to one that promotes wellness. For that, a prescription drug benefit is mandatory. It is the single most important reform we can make to Medicare.

However, the absence of a prescription drug benefit for America's seniors is not the only archaic aspect of the Medicare program. Congress has required Medicare to use an arbitrary method of payment for certain items and services, which costs the program and its beneficiaries much more than it should.

We think America's seniors deserve better. They deserve to pay fair market price for high-quality medical products instead of being subject to an outdated fee schedule that often reflects unreasonably high markups above actual cost.

The Medicare Competitive Acquisition Act applies high-quality standards and fiscal discipline to the Medicare program. Under this bill, Medicare will be able to use the same competitive tools the private sector has in place to control costs, while maintaining beneficiary access to quality medical supplies and services. This proposal was included in President Bush's fiscal year 2003 budget, and the Clinton Administration long advocated this fiscally responsible, high quality approach to improve Medicare.

Several studies by the United States General Accounting Office (GAO) and the Department of Health and Human Services, HHS, Inspector General indicate that the Medicare program and Medicare beneficiaries have been paying far too much for some medical equipment and supplies. Take pre-fabricated orthotics, for example. The most recent GAO data available indicates that the Medicare allowance for a pre-fabricated, self-adjusting hand/wrist brace is more than 140% higher than its average retail price. For an intermittent urinary catheter, the difference between the Medicare allowance and the average retail price is 93 percent.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that our bill will save Medicare $1.8 billion over 5 years and $6.9 billion over 10 years. This means savings for beneficiaries of $450 million over 5 years and $1.72 billion over 10 years.

I was pleased that the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 included a modified version of my competitive bidding proposal. It gave HHS the authority to conduct competitive bidding demonstrations for Medicare Part B items and services other than physician services. The Medicare Competitive Acquisition Act builds upon successful demonstration projects in Polk County, Florida and San Antonio, Texas by allowing the HHS Secretary to establish a competitive bidding system for durable medical equipment and supplies in appropriate parts of the country.

I want to thank my colleague from the great State of Georgia, Mr. Cleland, for his leadership on this issue. The Senator not only helped us develop significant beneficiary protections, he worked to ensure flexibility for rural areas. Senator Cleland was also instrumental in our request for a GAO study on the introduction of new and innovative medical equipment and supplies to the Medicare market.

The Medicare Competitive Acquisition Act allows the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, CMS, to award contracts to multiple suppliers in each region in order to enhance beneficiary freedom of choice and promote quality among competitors. The number of suppliers selected will be based on product demand, the number of suppliers selected will be based on product demand, the number of suppliers who bid and the service capacity of bidding suppliers. This ensures that the number of suppliers selected will be more than sufficient to supply a given area and that beneficiaries will have access to the products and services they need. CMS will have the authority to replace any winning supplier whose product or service quality deteriorates after the contract is awarded.

Small businesses are vital to the success of competitive bidding. In both rounds of the Polk County demonstration, small businesses received 12 of the 16 winning contracts. In the San Antonio demonstration, they received 40 of the 51 winning contracts.

To ensure a level playing field in the future, we continue small business protections implemented under the demonstration by CMS. For example, we give suppliers the option to bid for a portion of an expansion area as opposed to having to bid for an entire expansion area. We also allow suppliers to bid for only one or a few product categories in a competitive acquisition area as opposed to having to bid for all of the product categories in a particular area.

The introduction of competitive bidding into the Medicare program will not only ensure beneficiary access to high-quality medical equipment and supplies, it will also reduce fraud and abuse. Suppliers who are under sanctions for fraud and abuse will be ineligible to participate in the bidding process. On-site reviews will be conducted prior to awarding contracts, ensuring that the suppliers are valid and operating businesses.

Contrary to what the nay-sayers will tell you, competitive bidding for durable medical equipment and supplies has nothing to do with cutting services to beneficiaries or lowering quality standards. It has everything to do with improving access to high-quality medical equipment for America's seniors in a cost-effective manner.

As we search for ways to secure Medicare for the long term, we must take prudent steps to improve the efficiency of the program. Implementation of competitive bidding for certain Part B items and services is one way in which Congress can show that we are serious about preserving the integrity of Medicare.

I urge the Senate to support this measure.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself, Mr. GREGG, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 3100. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to limit the misuse of social security numbers, to establish criminal penalties for such misuse, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to strongly speak in favor of the legislation introduced today by Senators FEINSTEIN and GREGG titled "The Social Security Number Misuse Prevention Act of 2002," indeed, I am an original cosponsor of this legislation. If enacted, this bill will reduce the misuse of individuals' Social Security numbers, SSNs, by others.

As you well know, the Social Security number is increasingly being used for purposes not related to the administration of the Social Security program, because it is, in many cases, our national identification number. As a result, many people can gain access to the number, and this facilitates its use as a tool for illegal activity, most significantly for the crime of identity theft. In a report issued by the Social Security Administration's Office of the Inspector General, OIG, in May 1999, investigators concluded that most identity-related crimes involved the fraudulent use of a Social Security number. Additionally, the introduction of the SSN into the arena of electronic commerce has been accompanied by a dramatic increase in SSN misuse.

Given the upward trend in SSN misuse, I feel that the Congress must take a fresh look at options for safeguarding Social Security numbers. I believe that the bill introduced by Senators FEINSTEIN, GREGG and myself today is an important development in that effort. However, I want to make it clear that this bill will not eliminate all misuse of Social Security numbers. There are many legitimate and necessary uses of Social Security numbers and this bill does not prohibit such uses. Unfortunately, the absence of such prohibitions makes it easier for those who seek to misuse Social Security numbers.

The legislation being introduced today is very similar to a bill, S. 848, that was introduced by Senators FEINSTEIN and GREGG during the first session of the 107th Congress. Although S. 848 was referred to the Judiciary Committee, the bill deals extensively with sections of the US Code concerning Social Security numbers, legislative changes to these sections are in the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. Therefore, Senator GRASSLEY and I expressed our concern that S. 848 should have been referred to the Finance Committee and we initiated a successful unanimous consent request, with the support of Senators LEAHY, HATCH, FEINSTEIN, and GREGG, to sequentially refer the bill to the Finance Committee. The Judiciary Committee favorably reported the bill on May 16th of this year and it was immediately referred to the Finance Committee.

We at the Finance Committee examined the problems which this legislation tries to address and found potential solutions to these problems to be very complex. In addition, as the legislation could potentially affect all of the uses and availabilities of SSNs many interested parties contacted the Finance Committee to express their views.

Given the complexity of the issues and the large number of stakeholders involved, the Finance Committee decided to schedule a subcommittee hearing in advance of a mark-up in order to better inform Committee members and their staffs about these issues. Special attention was focused on the core set of solutions embodied in the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. After a long series of discussions, we reached agreement with Senator FEINSTEIN on legislation which makes a number of changes to the reported version of S. 848. We then scheduled a mark-up of this substitute for S. 848, but were unable to proceed with the mark-up because some members of the Committee planned to offer amendments that were extraneous and controversial. As a result, in order to move this legislation forward expeditiously, I asked Senators FEINSTEIN and GREGG to introduce the substitute for S. 848 as new legislation with me as an original cosponsor. Moreover, I intend to use procedures in Rule XIV of the Senate to have it placed on the calendar, rather than have it referred to Committee. Once on the calendar, the bill is eligible to be brought up for debate on the Senate floor.

As reported by the Judiciary Committee, S. 848 would: Prohibit the sale, purchase, or display of a Social Security number to the general public without the individual's consent, with exceptions for legitimate business and government activity; prohibit the release of certain key public records to the general public unless Social Security numbers are first redacted, this provision applies only to records created after the bill is enacted; require Social Security numbers to be removed from government checks, drivers' licenses, and motor vehicle registrations; prohibit the employment of prisoners in any capacity that would give them access to Social Security numbers; make it a crime to obtain an SSN for the purpose of locating or identifying a person with the intent to physically harm that person; give consumers the right to refuse to give out their Social Security numbers when purchasing a good or service from a commercial entity, unless the entity has a legitimate need as specified in the law; and create new civil monetary penalties, criminal penalties, and civil actions to help prevent misuse of Social Security numbers; requires all new credit card payment processing machines to truncate the credit card account numbers to the last five digits on the printed receipt.

The substitute for S. 848 that is being introduced today retains the basic structure and objectives of the Judiciary Committee-reported bill, but makes several substantive changes that improve the bill. The substitute bill: makes clear that it is permissible to sell, purchase or display Social Security numbers for any legitimate use required, authorized or excepted by any Federal law. Stops new public records containing Social Security numbers from being posted on the Internet and calls for a study by the General Accounting Office of issues pertaining to the display of Social Security numbers on any public records. Permits State Attorneys General to enforce the new "right to refuse" to provide a Social Security number, but prohibits class action lawsuits to enforce this new "right." Sunset the "right to refuse" after six years, and calls for a report by the Attorney General, six months after the sunset regarding the effectiveness of this "right to refuse" and whether it should be reauthorized.

To conclude, I think that the introduction of this revised version of S. 848 and the placement of it on the calendar are two very important steps in our fight to reduce the misuse of Social Security numbers and reduce the theft of identities. I look forward to working with my colleagues to enact this important piece of legislation.

S. 3101. A bill to amend title IV of the Missing Children's Assistance Act to provide for increased funding for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Missing Children's Assistance Act of 2002, which doubles the funding for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and reauthorizes the Center through fiscal year 2006. I am pleased to have Senators HATCH and BIDEN as cosponsors.

Due to tragic circumstances, the importance of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, "NCMEC", has become even more pronounced over the past year. We have seen repeated media coverage of missing children from every corner of our nation, and parents and children alike have slept less easily. As a father and grandfather, I know that an abducted child is every parent's or grandparent's worst nightmare.

The Justice Department estimates that between 3,000 and 4,000 children are taken by strangers every year. This legislation will strengthen our efforts to return those children to their homes, and relieve their parents of unimaginable grief.

The Center for Missing and Exploited Children assists parents, children, law enforcement, schools, and the community in their efforts to recover missing children. The professionals at NCMEC have disturbingly busy jobs, they have worked on more than 73,000 cases of missing and exploited children since NCMEC's founding in 1984, helping to recover more than 48,000 of them. They also raise awareness about preventing child abduction, molestation, and sexual exploitation.

As part of its mission, NCMEC runs: 1. a 24-hour telephone hotline to take reports about missing children and clues that might lead to their recovery, 2. a national child pornography tipline, and 3. a program that assists families in the reunification process. NCMEC also helps runaway children, including through attempts to reduce child prostitution.

NCMEC manages to do all of this good work with only a $10 million authorization, which expires after fiscal year 2003. We should act now both to extend its authorization and provide additional funds so that it can continue to help keep children safe and families intact around the nation.

S. 3102. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to clarify and reaffirm State and local authority to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. JEFFORDS, and Mrs. MURRAY):

S. 3103. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to clarify and reaffirm State and local authority to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of wireless services facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to offer two pieces of legislation that would close a loophole that allows Federal regulators to overrule local officials on the building of cellular and broadcast towers. I am proud to be joined by Senator JEFFORDS, and Senator MURRAY in introducing legislation that will return decision-making power on the siting of towers to local communities.

The 1996 Telecommunications Act, which I opposed, contained a provision that allowed the Federal Communications Commission to preempt the decisions of local authorities. Over the last five years, a small loophole in the 1996 Act has spurred David versus Goliath battles across the country. Small communities that pride themselves in deciding what their towns will look like, now have few options when they try to stop or even negotiate a different site for broadcast or cellular towers. In Vermont, we have had several communities, Shelburne, Bethel, and Charlotte, run directly into this problem. What used to be their right to decide these decisions under zoning laws was up-ended.

These communities understand that there will be new towers. Demand for wireless services has skyrocketed over the last few years. The mountains and hills of Vermont make many Vermonters joke that cell phones are more useful as paper weights than as a way to talk with friends and family. However, Vermonters and people across the country do not believe that we have to sacrifice our scenic views and residential areas to ensure wireless coverage.

As a Vermonter, I do not want to wake up ten years from now and see my State turned into a pincushion of antennas and towers. That is why I am introducing these bills today. In a way, these bills are the culmination of a long battle with the Federal Communications Commission and in the courts to protect local authority.

In 1997, the Federal Communications Commission seized on the legislative loophole and proposed an expansive new rule to prevent State and local zoning laws from regulating the placement of cell and broadcast towers on the basis of environmental considerations, aviation safety, or other locally-determined matters. I fought this proposed rule and was joined by many Vermonters, Governor Dean, the Vermont Environmental Board, mayors, zoning officials and others. I also joined with many Vermonters and the rest of the Vermont Congressional Delegation to file an amicus brief in the Supreme Court, arguing that the preemption of local power to issue building permits was a clear violation of the 10th Amendment.

Unfortunately, that petition failed and now I am introducing legislation to fix a problem Congress created. The preemption of local authority should never have happened. Health, safety, and local land use issues should be left in the hands of those who know these issues best and can find a way to balance the needs of their community—the local zoning authorities.

In Vermont, we actually have a very well-tested and successful way of finding a balance between protecting the environment, the health and safety of Vermonters, and meeting economic demands. It's called Act 250. It was adopted over three decades ago when Vermonters realized that our cherished hillsides and New England towns could be overrun with homes. Now, the same realization has occurred with cell and broadcast towers.

My bill will not prohibit new towers. It will simply let local officials use their state and local protections, like Act 250, find the best solution for their community.

I think that many of my colleagues would agree that it is not too much to ask that telecommunication companies follow the zoning laws that apply to everyone else.

In fact, we already have ways to meet the needs of telecommunication companies and communities. There are other viable alternative communication technologies to massive towers. I have in the past discussed how PCS-Over-Cable and PCS-Over-Fiber technologies can provide digital cellular service using small antennas, eliminating the need for large towers. These small antennas can be attached to an existing telephone pole or lamp post. Not only is this technology more aesthetically pleasing, but because the companies do not need to buy land for these antennas, these delivery mechanisms are cheaper as well. We should allow local government to require the usage of these less intrusive technologies.

This is ultimately a very simple issue. It's an issue of local control. I believe that it is local authorities, not Federal regulators, who should determine when and where these structures are built. I urge my fellow Senators to join me in supporting this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of these bills and two section-by-section analyses be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the additional material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3102

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Local Control of Broadcast Towers Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities near residential communities and facilities such as schools can greatly reduce the value of residential properties, destroy the views from properties, produce radio frequency interference, raise concerns about potential long-term health effects of such facilities, and reduce substantially the desire to live in the areas of such facilities.

(2) States and local governments have traditionally regulated development and should be able to exercise control over the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities through the use of zoning and other land use regulations relating to the protection of the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public.

(3) The Federal Communications Commission establishes policies to govern interstate and international communications by television, radio, wire, satellite and cable. The Commission ensures compliance of such activities with applicable Federal laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 and the National Historic Preservation Act, in its decision-making on such activities.

(4) The Commission defers to State and local authorities which regulate the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities through the use of zoning, construction and building, and environmental and safety regulations in order to protect the environment and the health, safety, and general welfare of communities and the public.

(5) On August 19, 1997, the Commission issued a proposed rule, MM Docket No. 97-182, which would preempt the application of most State and local zoning, environmental, construction and building, and other regulations affecting the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities.

(6) The telecommunications industry and its experts should be expected to have access to the best and most recent technical information and should therefore be held to the highest standards in terms of their representations, assertions, and promises to governmental authorities.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to confirm that State and local governments are the appropriate entities—

(1) to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities consistent with State and local zoning, construction and building, environmental, and land use regulations;

(2) to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of broadcast transmission facilities so that their placement, construction, or modification will not interfere with the safe and efficient use of public airspace or otherwise compromise or endanger the health, safety, and general welfare of the public; and

(3) to hold accountable applicants for permits for the placement, construction, or modification of broadcast transmission facilities, and providers of services using such facilities, for the truthfulness and accuracy of representations and statements placed in the record of hearings for such permits, licenses, or approvals.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION ON ADOPTION OF RULE REGARDING PREEMPTION OF STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY OVER BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal Communications Commission shall not adopt as a final rule or otherwise directly or indirectly implement any portion of the proposed rule set forth in "Preemption of State and Local Zoning and Land Use Restrictions on Siting, Placement and Construction of Broadcast Station Transmission Facilities", MM Docket No. 97-182, released August 19, 1997.

SEC. 4. AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.

Part I of title III of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 340. STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.

"(a) AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE LEAST INTRUSIVE FACILITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A State or local government may deny an application to place, construct, or modify broadcast transmission facilities on the basis that alternative technologies, delivery systems, or structures are capable of delivering broadcast signals comparable to that proposed to be delivered by such facilities in a manner that is less intrusive to the community concerned than such facilities.

"(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—In determining under paragraph (1) the intrusiveness of technologies, delivery systems, or structures for the transmission of broadcast signals, a State or local government may consider the aesthetics of such technologies, systems, or structures, the environmental impact of such technologies, systems, or structures, and the radio frequency interference or radiation emitted by such technologies, systems, or structures.

"(3) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In any hearing for purposes of the exercise of the authority in paragraph (1), the burden shall be on the applicant.

"(b) RADIO INTERFERENCE.—A State or local government may regulate the location, height, or modification of broadcast transmission facilities in order to address the effects of radio frequency interference caused by such facilities on local communities and the public.

"(c) AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE STUDIES AND DOCUMENTATION.—No provision of this Act may be interpreted to prohibit a State or local government from—

"(1) requiring a person seeking authority to place, construct, or modify broadcast transmission facilities to produce—

"(A) environmental, biological, and health studies, engineering reports, or other documentation of the compliance of such facilities with radio frequency exposure limits, radio frequency interference impacts, and compliance with applicable laws, rules, and regulations governing the effects of such facilities on the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public; and

"(B) documentation of the compliance of such facilities with applicable Federal, State, and local aviation safety standards or aviation obstruction standards regarding objects effecting navigable airspace; or

"(2) refusing to grant authority to such person to place, construct, or modify such facilities within the jurisdiction of such government if such person fails to produce studies, reports, or documentation required under paragraph (1).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section may be construed to prohibit or otherwise limit the authority of a State or local government to ensure compliance with or otherwise enforce any statements, assertions, or representations filed or submitted by or on behalf of an applicant with the State or local government for authority to place, construct, or modify broadcast transmission facilities within the jurisdiction of the State or local government.

"(e) BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITY DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'broadcast transmission facility' means the equipment, or any portion thereof, with which a broadcaster transmits and receives the radiofrequency waves that carry the services of the broadcaster, regardless of whether the equipment is sited on one or more towers or other structures owned by a person or entity other than the broadcaster, and includes the location of such equipment."

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF LOCAL CONTROL OF BROADCAST TOWERS ACT

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

The subtitle may be cited as the "Local Control of Broadcast Towers Act."

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

The bill finds that as the placement of broadcast towers or other broadcast structures (heretofore referred to as "broadcast transmission facilities") can reduce property values, create radio frequency interference, and raise potential long-term health concerns. It also finds that state and local authorities should have the same control to regulate the placement of broadcast transmission facilities as they would with any other type of construction. The purpose of the bill is to reinstate the right of state and local governments to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of these facilities.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION ON ADOPTION OF RULE REGARDING PREEMPTION OF STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY OVER BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.

Section 3 prohibits the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) from implementing "Preemption of State and Local Zoning and Land Use Restrictions on Siting, Placement and Construction of Broadcast Station Transmission Facilities." This rule prevents state and local governments from regulating the construction or modification of broadcast transmission facilities.

SEC. 4. AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF BROADCAST TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.

Section 4 adds a new section to Part I of title III. It gives state and local governments the power to deny applications to place, construct, or modify broadcast transmission facilities on the basis that less intrusive technologies are available to provide comparable service. Denials can be issued for reasons of aesthetics, environmental impact, radio frequency interference, or radiation emissions. Burden of proof lies with the applicant.

Section 4(b) also stipulates that state and local governments are empowered to regulate the location, height, or modification of broadcast transmission facilities to reduce the effects of radio interference. State and local governments may also require environmental, biological, and health studies, engineering studies, or other comparable documentation from any person seeking to build or modify a broadcast transmission facility. In addition, state and local governments may require documentation of compliance with any applicable Federal, State, or local regulation regarding aviation safety standards. Failure to provide such documentation or studies is grounds for a denial to construct or modify a facility.

Section 4(e) defines broadcast transmission facilities.

S. 3103

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Local Control of Cellular Towers Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The placement, construction, and modification of personal wireless services facilities (also known as wireless facilities) near residential communities and facilities such as schools can greatly reduce the value of residential properties, destroy the views from properties, produce radio frequency interference, raise concerns about potential long-term health effects of such facilities, and reduce substantially the desire to live in the areas of such facilities.

(2) States and local governments have traditionally regulated development and should be able to exercise control over the placement, construction, and modification of wireless facilities through the use of zoning and other land use regulations relating to the protection of the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public.

(3) The Federal Communications Commission establishes policies to govern interstate and international communications by television, radio, wire, satellite and cable. The Commission ensures the compliance of such activities with a variety of Federal laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 and the National Historic Preservation Act, in its decision-making on such activities.

(4) Under section 332(c)(7)(A) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 332(c)(7)(A)), the Commission defers to State and local authorities that regulate the placement, construction, and modification of wireless facilities through the use of zoning and other land use regulations.

(5) Alternative technologies for the placement, construction, and modification of wireless facilities may meet the needs of a wireless services provider in a less intrusive manner than the technologies proposed by the wireless services provider, including the use of small towers that do not require blinking aircraft safety lights, break skylines, or protrude above tree canopies.

(6) It is in the interest of the Nation that the requirements of the Commission with respect to the application of State and local ordinances to the placement, construction and modification of wireless facilities (for example WT Docket No. 97-192, ET Docket No. 93-62, RM-8577, and FCC 97-303, 62 F.R. 47960) be modified so as—

(A) to permit State and local governments to exercise their zoning and other land use authorities to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of such facilities; and

(B) to place the burden of proof in civil actions, and in actions before the Commission and State and local authorities relating to the placement, construction, and modification of such facilities, on the person that seeks to place, construct, or modify such facilities.

(7) PCS-Over-Cable, PCS-Over-Fiber Optic, and satellite telecommunications systems, including Low-Earth Orbit satellites, offer a significant opportunity to provide so-called "911" emergency telephone service throughout much of the United States without unduly intruding into or effecting the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public.

(8) The Federal Aviation Administration must rely upon State and local governments to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of telecommunications facilities near airports or high-volume air traffic areas such as corridors of airspace or commonly used flyways. The proposed rules of the Commission to preempt State and local zoning and other land-use regulations for the siting of such facilities will have a serious negative impact on aviation safety, airport capacity and investment, the efficient use of navigable airspace, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public.

(9) The telecommunications industry and its experts should be expected to have access to the best and most recent technical information and should therefore be held to the highest standards in terms of their representations, assertions, and promises to governmental authorities.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are as follows:

(1) To repeal certain limitations on State and local authority regarding the placement, construction, and modification of personal wireless services facilities under section 332(c)(7) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 332(c)(7)).

(2) To permit State and local governments—

(A) to regulate the placement, construction, or modification of personal wireless services facilities with respect to their impacts on land use, including radio frequency interference and radio frequency radiation, in order to protect the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public;

(B) to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of personal wireless services facilities so that they will not interfere with the safe and efficient use of public airspace or otherwise compromise or endanger the public health and safety and the general welfare of the community and the public; and

(C) to hold accountable applicants for permits for the placement, construction, or modification of personal wireless services facilities, and providers of services using such facilities, for the truthfulness and accuracy of representations and statements placed in the record of hearings for permits, licenses, or approvals for such facilities.

SEC. 3. STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF PERSONAL WIRELESS SERVICES FACILITIES

(a) LIMITATIONS ON STATE AND LOCAL REGULATION OF FACILITIES.—Subparagraph (B) of section 332(c)(7) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 332(c)(7)) is amended—

(1) by striking clause (iv);

(2) by redesignating clause (v) as clause (iv); and

(3) in clause (iv), as so redesignated—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking “may, within 30 days” and all that follows through the end of the sentence and inserting “may commence an action in any court of competent jurisdiction. Such action shall be commenced within 30 days after such action or failure to act unless the State concerned has established a different period for the commencement of such action.”; and

(B) by striking the third sentence and inserting the following: “In any such action in which a person seeking to place, construct, or modify a personal wireless services facility is a party, such person shall bear the burden of proof, regardless of who commences such action.”.

(b) PROHIBITION ON ADOPTION OF RULE REGARDING RELIEF FROM STATE AND LOCAL REGULATION OF FACILITIES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal Communications Commission shall not adopt as a final rule or otherwise directly or indirectly implement any portion of the proposed rule set forth in “Procedures for Reviewing Requests for Relief From State and Local Regulation Pursuant to Section 332(c)(7)(B)(v) of the Communications Act of 1934”, WT Docket No. 97-192, released August 25, 1997.

(c) AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF FACILITIES.—Such section 332(c)(7) is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D); and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph (C):

“(C) ADDITIONAL LIMITATIONS.—

“(i) AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE LEAST INTRUSIVE FACILITIES.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—A State or local government may deny an application to place, construct, or modify personal wireless services facilities on the basis that alternative technologies, delivery systems, or structures are capable of delivering a personal wireless services signal comparable to that proposed to be delivered by such facilities in a manner that is less intrusive to the community concerned than such facilities.

“(II) CONSIDERATIONS.—In determining under subclause (I) the intrusiveness of technologies, delivery systems, or structures for personal wireless services facilities, a State or local government may consider the aesthetics of such technologies, systems, or structures, the environmental impact of such technologies, systems, or structures, and the radio frequency interference or radiation emitted by such technologies, systems, or structures.

“(III) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In any hearing for purposes of the exercise of the authority in subclause (I), the burden shall be on the applicant.

“(ii) RADIO INTERFERENCE.—A State or local government may regulate the location, height, or modification of personal wireless services facilities in order to address the effects of radio frequency interference caused by such facilities on local communities and the public.

“(iii) AUTHORITY TO REQUIRE STUDIES AND DOCUMENTATION.—No provision of this Act may be interpreted to prohibit a State or local government from—

“(I) requiring a person seeking authority to place, construct, or modify personal wireless services facilities to produce—

“(aa) environmental, biological, and health studies, engineering reports, or other documentation of the compliance of such facilities with radio frequency exposure limits, radio frequency interference impacts, and compliance with applicable laws, rules, and regulations governing the effects of such facilities on the environment, public health and safety, and the general welfare of the community and the public; and

“(bb) documentation of the compliance of such facilities with applicable Federal, State, and local aviation safety standards or aviation obstruction standards regarding objects effecting navigable airspace; or “(II) refusing to grant authority to such person to place, construct, or modify such facilities within the jurisdiction of such government if such person fails to produce studies, reports, or documentation required under subclause (I).

“(iv) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subparagraph may be construed to prohibit or otherwise limit the authority of a State or local government to ensure compliance with or otherwise enforce any statements, assertions, or representations filed or submitted by or on behalf of an applicant with the State or local government for authority to place, construct, or modify personal wireless services facilities within the jurisdiction of the State or local government.”.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF LOCAL CONTROL OF CELLULAR TOWERS ACT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

The subtitle may be cited as the “Local Control of Cellular Towers Act.”

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

The bill finds that the placement of cellular towers can reduce property values, create radio frequency interference, and raise potential long-term health concerns. It also finds that state and local authorities should have the same control to regulate the placement of cellular facilities as they would with any other type of construction. The purpose of the bill is to reinstate the right of state and local governments to regulate the placement, construction, and modification of these facilities.

SEC. 3. STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY OVER PLACEMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MODIFICATION OF PERSONAL WIRELESS SERVICES FACILITIES.

This section of the bill amends title 47 of the U.S. Code.

Section 3(a) strikes 47 U.S.C. 332(c)(7), clause iv, which prevented state and local governments from regulating the placement, construction, or modification of personal wireless service facilities on the basis of environmental effects of radio frequency emissions. Clause v of the same section of the Code is amended to allow States to determine the timeline for any appeal of a State or local decision that adversely affects a personal wireless service provider. A personal wireless service provider is no longer allowed to make a further appeal to the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Furthermore, the bill clarifies that the party that wishes to build a personal wireless service facility bears the burden of proof in any appeal of state or local law.

Section 3(b) prohibits the FCC from implementing “Procedures for Reviewing Requests for Relief from State and Local Regulation Pursuant to Section 332(c)(7)(B)(v).” This rule stipulated the procedures for appealing state and local regulations to the FCC.

Section 3(c) adds a new subparagraph (C) to Section 332(c)(7) to give State and local governments the power to deny applications to place, construct, or modify personal wireless service facilities on the basis that less intrusive technologies are available that provide comparable service. Denials can be issued for reasons of aesthetics, environmental impact, radio frequency interference, or radiation emissions.

Section 3(c) also stipulates that state and local governments are empowered to regulate the location, height, or modification of personal wireless service facilities to reduce the effects of radio interference. State and local governments may also require environmental, biological, and health studies, engineering studies, or other comparable documentation from any person seeking to build or modify a personal wireless service facility. In addition, state and local governments may require documentation of compliance with any applicable Federal, State, or local regulation regarding aviation safety standards. Failure to provide such documentation or studies is grounds for a denial to construct or modify a facility.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I would like to rise today to express my support for the Local Control of Cellular Towers Bill, as well as the Local Control of Broadcast Towers Bill. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of these two pieces of legislation and commend my colleague from Vermont, Senator LEAHY, for his continued work on this issue.

The 1996 Telecommunications Act preempts State and local zoning laws, transferring jurisdiction away from State and local authorities to the Federal government. The legislation that we are introducing today would return that jurisdiction to the State and local authorities that are best equipped to make decisions regarding the placement and construction of cellular and broadcast towers.

In Vermont, new development and construction is governed by Act 250, an environmental land use law specifically written to control and manage development, while maintaining a balance between environmental protection and economic growth. Act 250 maintains this equilibrium by placing the permitting rights in the hands of local environmental review boards with appeal rights to the Vermont Environmental Board. Act 250 is therefore administered by men and women who are directly involved in their communities and thoroughly familiar with local concerns.

The state of Vermont established Act 250 in response to a period of unchecked development that began in the 1960's. As the Attorney General for the state at the time, I was one of the primary drafters of the environmental land use law. Since 1969, Act 250 has protected our environment, managed development, and provided a forum for neighbors, municipalities and other interest groups to voice their concerns about new development. I see no reason why the construction of cellular and broadcast towers should not be governed by Act 250 as well, and I remain hopeful that these two bills will reverse what the 1996 Act set forth.

Although I recognize the importance of building a sound and functional wireless network, I urge Congress to allow states and local communities to build that network so the negative impacts of tower construction are kept to a minimum. Among Vermont's greatest assets are its mountain ranges and beautiful views. Giving local communities authority over tower construction and placement is a step towards preserving and protecting those assets.

S. 3104. A bill to amend the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 to repeal the long-term goal for reducing to zero the incidental mortality and serious injury of marine mammals in commercial fishing operations, and to modify the goal of take reduction plans for reducing such takings; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3104

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MODIFICATION OF GOALS FOR REDUCING INCIDENTAL TAKE OF MARINE MAMMALS IN COMMERCIAL FISHING.

(a) REPEAL OF ZERO MORTALITY GOAL.—Section 118 of the Marine Mammal Protection Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1387) is amended by striking subsection (b), and by redesignating subsections (c) through (l) in order as subsections (b) through (k).

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Such Act is further amended as follows:

(1) In section 101(a)(2) (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)(2)) by striking the third sentence.

(2) In section 101(a)(5)(E)(i)(III) (16 U.S.C. 1371(a)(5)(E)(i)(III)) by striking “subsection (d)” and inserting “subsection (c)”.

(3) In section 115(b)(4) (16 U.S.C. 1384(b)(4)) by striking “section 118(f)(1)” and inserting “section 118(e)(1)”.

(4) In section 117(a)(4) (16 U.S.C. 1386(a)(4)) in subparagraph (D) by striking “, and an analysis” and all that follows through the end of the subparagraph and inserting a semicolon.

(5) In section 118 (16 U.S.C. 1387) by striking “subsection (c)(1)(A)(i)” each place it appears and inserting “subsection (b)(1)(A)(i)”.

(6) In section 118 (16 U.S.C. 1387) by striking “subsection (c)(1)(A)(i)” each place it appears and inserting “subsection (b)(1)(A)(i)”.

(7) In section 118(a)(1) (16 U.S.C. 1387(a)(1)) by striking the last sentence.

(8) In section 118(b), as redesignated by this subsection (16 U.S.C. 1387(c)(1)(B)), by striking “subsection (e)” each place it appears and inserting “subsection (d)”.

(9) In section 118(c)(1)(B), as redesignated by this subsection (16 U.S.C. 1387(d)(1)(B)), by striking “subsection (e)” and inserting “subsection (d)”.

(10) In section 118(e)(9)(D), as redesignated by this subsection (16 U.S.C. 1387(f)(9)(D)), by striking “subsection (d)” and inserting “subsection (c)”.

(11) In section 118(f)(1), as redesignated by this subsection (16 U.S.C. 1387(g)(1)), by striking “subsection (c)(1)(A)(iii)” each place it appears and inserting “subsection (b)(1)(A)(iii)”.

(12) In section 118(g), as redesignated by this subsection (16 U.S.C. 1387(h)), by striking “subsection (c)” and inserting “subsection (b)”.

(13) In section 120(j)(2) (16 U.S.C. 1389(j)(2)) by striking “118(f)(5)(A)” and inserting “118(e)(5)(A)”.

(c) MODIFICATION OF GOAL OF TAKE REDUCTION PLANS.—Section 118(e)(2) of such Act, as redesignated by subsection (a) of this section (16 U.S.C. 1387(f)(2)), is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: “The long-term goal of the plan shall be to reduce, within 5 years of its implementation, the incidental mortality or serious injury of marine mammals incidentally taken in the course of fishing operations taking into account the economics of the fishery, the availability of existing technology, and existing State and regional fishery management plans.”.

By Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. BAYH, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. DEWINE):

S. 3105. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants for the operation of enhanced mosquito control programs to prevent and control mosquito-borne diseases; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the “West Nile Virus and Arboviral Disease Act”—a bill to help strengthen our public health system and improve research so that we can better respond to West Nile virus and other arboviruses. I want to thank Senators DODD, SANTORUM, BAYH, COCHRAN, AND DEWINE for their work in helping craft this important legislation.

This year, nearly 3000 Americans have been diagnosed with West Nile Virus, WNV. At least 146 have died. While this virus is transmitted to humans primarily through migratory birds and mosquitoes, recent evidence strongly suggests that WNV can be transmitted through blood transfusions, organ donations, and possibly even breast milk. Further, the latest studies indicate that some patients may experience polio-like symptoms as a result of WNV infection.

WNV first appeared in North America in 1999 with reports of encephalitis in birds, humans and horses. Prior to this summer, there had been only 149 cases and 18 deaths from this virus. Now, WNV has spread as far south as Florida and as far west as California, encompassing areas with warmer climates that will allow a year-round transmission cycle. In three years, we have lost the opportunity to contain the disease to the northeastern region of the United States, where mosquitoes do not breed year-round. As a result, many more people will die and become ill.

Clearly, the increasing spread of the disease and these new findings require an enhanced response at the Federal level. We must do more to support State and local public health efforts to combat the spread of West Nile. And we must also intensify research at the federal level to better understand the etiology of the virus, develop improved abatement tools, and prevent the spread of the illness.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, has published national guidelines for surveillance, prevention and control of WNV. CDC also developed a national electronic surveillance system, ArboNET, to track West Nile in humans, birds, mosquitoes, horses, and other animals. However, the data available to the ArboNET system likely underestimates actual geographic distribution of WNV transmission in the United States because the data are provided by up to 54

ArboNet by local health unit surveillance efforts which vary according to capacity and ability. We need to do more to strengthen the capacity of those surveillance efforts. One only needs to examine the map of the spread of WNV to determine that there may be gaps in our surveillance when some States, like Kansas and West Virginia, are surrounded by other states with similar arbovirus patterns but still not indicating the presence of human disease. One of the peculiarities of great surveillance systems is the increased incidence of disease, simply because better information is being collected.

Although strengthening our surveillance and response capabilities will help, we must also do more to increase the number of appropriately trained entomologists. There is clearly a need for more individuals who can understand the disease vectors, identify their breeding areas, and take action to eliminate the mosquito population before WNV season.

In response to these obvious deficiencies, this legislation establishes a temporary program for the containment of WNV and related arboviral diseases. Through this grant program, which is authorized for two years, but can be extended by the Secretary of Health and Human Services for an additional year, the CDC is authorized to make grants to states. States can use the funds to develop, implement, and evaluate comprehensive, community-based mosquito control plans. Additionally, states can work with local communities to develop and implement programs to support longer term prevention and control efforts, including training to develop a competent public health workforce. Finally, States are encouraged to work with local health entities to develop prevention and control programs.

As part of the requirement under the grant program, the CDC is charged with developing, in consultation with public and private health and mosquito control organizations, guidelines for State and local communities for sustainable, locally managed, integrated mosquito control programs, as well as otherwise increasing CDC's capacity to provide technical assistance.

We also need to learn more about this virus and how it is spread. To combat WNV, we must develop: 1. improved insecticides; 2. rapid tests for the presence of WNV in human blood products; 3. pathogen inactivation technologies; and 4. additional methodologies to contain the spread of WNV or other related arboviruses, including the development of an appropriate WNV vaccine for humans and other mammals and better antiviral treatments.

In 1972, the FDA banned the general use of the pesticide DDT, ending nearly three decades of application, during which time, the once-popular chemical was used to control insect pests on crop and forest lands, around homes and gardens, and for industrial and commercial purposes. DDT was developed as the first of the modern insecticides early in World War II. It was initially used with great effect to combat malaria, typhus, and the other insect-borne human diseases among both military and civilian populations. A persistent, broad-spectrum compound often termed the "miracle" pesticide, DDT came into wide agricultural and commercial usage in this country in the late 1940s, but was banned by the FDA when the Director at that time determined that the continued massive use of DDT posed unacceptable risks to the environment and potential harm to human health. Since that time, we have not developed a replacement for DDT. We have become complacent, assuming that there would be no need to continue reducing the insect population. We can no longer be complacent.

We have not yet developed a rapid diagnostic WNV test for blood products. There are two types of tests available, a serologic test or a polymerase chain reaction, PCR, test, but only the PCR test would be feasible for screening purposes. Experts have suggested that a new PCR test could be available within 18 months if the appropriate market incentives were in place. We need to determine the best way to expedite the development of this test.

Pathogen inactivation techniques could be used to purify blood samples by removing all DNA and RNA particles from the blood. However, we have not yet performed a larger assessment to determine the overall health benefit of this technique. Because the process relies on adding additional chemicals to the blood product, those chemicals, or derivatives thereof, may have a particular health effect. Therefore, given that there will be other emerging infectious diseases in our future, we need to develop a proactive, not reactive, mode to dealing with those infections.

Currently, scientists have developed an equine vaccine for WNV, but there is no human vaccine. Given the limited vaccine options, many veterinarians are even using the equine vaccine for avians and other mammals. Therefore, we need to focus efforts on developing vaccines for a host of susceptible mammals.

In conducting that research, given the nature of all arboviruses and the fact that WNV also infects a host of mammals, we need to build more bridges between veterinary health and public health. Already, avian experts are asked to assist our public health experts to help identify how bird migration would affect the spread of WNV. Additionally, any new vaccine or diagnostic test for WNV may have broader applicability to the host of other mammals affected by the virus.

Given the multitude of federal agencies that should be involved with relevant research, the legislation charges the President with expanding, intensifying, and enhancing research related to the identification or the development of insecticides, the development of screening tools for WNV in both blood and organs, the development of pathogen inactivation technologies, technologies that safely and cost-effectively remove RNA and DNA from blood, and the development of additional methodologies for containing the spread of West Nile Virus and other related arboviruses. This research program is authorized for five years.

More should be done to continuously support the development of a capable public health infrastructure and increased response coordination at all levels. At the Federal level, we have significantly increased our resources for these purposes by providing nearly $1 billion for bioterrorism-related activities, activities which should focus on "dual use" capabilities to strengthen our ability to respond to all infectious diseases. However, we need to ensure a continued investment if we are to stabilize our public health infrastructure and continue to focus on means by which to increase coordination.

Again, I want to commend Senators DODD, SANTORUM, BAYH, COCHRAN, and DEWINE for their contributions to the development of this legislation. It has been an honor and a pleasure to work with my distinguished colleagues on this bill, and I look forward to continuing to working with them and others to find better solutions to combating WNV.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 3106. A bill to amend the Denali Commission Act of 1998 to establish the Denali transportation system in the State of Alaska; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill to establish the Denali Transportation System for my State of Alaska. I am pleased to be joined by the senior Senator from Alaska, Senator STEVENS, on this important legislation. I understand that a companion measure is to be introduced in the House.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to establish a program to fund the costs of construction of the Denali Transportation System, at a level of $440 million per year for the next 5 years. It is patterned after similar statutory language establishing the Appalachian Commission, which provides for transportation construction in that area of the nation.

As my colleagues are aware, Alaska lags far behind the rest of the country in its transportation infrastructure. Our road system is still in its infancy and our highway system reaches only the major cities of the State.

As we all know, the key to a thriving and self-sufficient economy for any State or Nation is commerce. But commerce itself cannot thrive without transportation. We must be able to travel from one place to another, to move goods from one place to another, to harvest our resources and craft our merchandise and get them both to market.

The Denali transportation system will provide benefits far outweighing its costs, not only to Alaska but to the Nation. It will make it possible to provide Alaska's valuable resources to those who need them. It will allow significant savings for residents of Alaska's remote areas, who today must pay the nation's highest prices for even basic things that you and I take for granted, for food, for energy to heat our houses, for access to a doctor's care when we need it, and access to reasonable educational opportunities for our children.

None of these things are universally available in Alaska as they are in other States. We have children who must board an aircraft every day, at least when the weather permits, just to be flown across a river that separates them from their only area school. We have villages where fuel arrives barrel by barrel, because there is no other way to get it there. We have communities where butter, and eggs, and milk, and fresh vegetables are still luxury items. We have towns where injured workers and pregnant women in need of care have access to a doctor only when the weather permits them to undertake an arduous journey by boat and small aircraft.

Alaska has much to offer the rest of the Nation. We have incomparable resources and energetic, innovative citizens. It is time we have a transportation system that will allow us to fully enter the world of the 21st Century, and this bill will help us accomplish that goal.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3106

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Denali Transportation System Act".

SEC. 2. DENALI TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM.

The Denali Commission Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-277; 42 U.S.C. 3121 note) is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 309 as section 310; and

(2) by inserting after section 308 the following:

"SEC. 309. DENALI TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM.

"(a) CONSTRUCTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall establish a program under which the Secretary may pay the costs of construction (including the costs of design) in the State of Alaska of the Denali transportation system.

"(2) DESIGN STANDARDS.—Any design carried out under this section shall use technology and design standards determined by the Commission.

"(b) DESIGNATION OF SYSTEM BY COMMISSION.—The Commission shall submit to the Secretary of Transportation—

"(1) designations by the Commission of the general location and termini of highways, port and dock facilities, and trails on the Denali transportation system;

"(2) priorities for construction of segments of the system; and

"(3) other criteria applicable to the program established under this section.

"(c) CONNECTING INFRASTRUCTURE.—In carrying out this section, the Commission may construct marine connections (such as connecting small docks, boat ramps, and port facilities) and other transportation access infrastructure for communities that would otherwise lack access to the National Highway System.

"(d) ADDITION TO NATIONAL HIGHWAY SYSTEM.—On completion, each highway on the Denali transportation system that is not already on the National Highway System shall be added to the National Highway System.

"(e) PREFERENCE TO ALASKA MATERIALS AND PRODUCTS.—In the construction of the Denali transportation system under this section, the Commission may give preference—

"(1) to the use of materials and products indigenous to the State; and

"(2) with respect to construction projects in a region, to local residents and firms headquartered in that region."

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 310 of the Denali Commission Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-277; 42 U.S.C. 3121 note) (as redesignated by section 2(1)) is amended by striking subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission—

"(1) to carry out the duties of the Commission under this title (other than section 309), and in accordance with the work plan approved under section 304, such sums as are necessary for fiscal year 2003; and

"(2) to carry out section 309 $440,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2008."

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself and Mr. McCain):

S. 3107. A bill to improve the security of State-issued driver's licenses, enhance highway safety, verify personal identity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Driver's License Fraud Prevention Act. This is a timely bill that would provide much needed Federal assistance to the States to help make their driver's licenses more reliable and secure than they are today. I am pleased that my colleague, Senator McCain, has joined me in this effort.

Since September 11, 2001, we have learned much about our society. We learned in the most painful way that those aspects of our open society that we, as Americans, value the most, are the very same characteristics exploited by people who hate freedom.

Our open borders welcome millions of visitors and immigrants each year. Our civil society is based on the integrity of our citizens to self regulate their behaviors and to abide by the rule of law. And our very informal system of personal identification relies on the honesty of people to represent themselves as who they are, and to not hide their true identities.

Yet, after September 11, we learned that it was the very openness of our society that the nineteen terrorists took advantage of by slipping into our country and mingling among us for months before embarking on their evil tasks.

Since that tragic day, as a price for enhancing national security, we have imposed numerous measures across the country, including erecting barricades in front of buildings and requiring tougher screenings at airports. But there is one area that we need further improvements on, which is what our bill would address.

It seems that everywhere we turn today, we are asked to present photo identification. And what is the most common identification that we show? It's the State-issued driver's license.

The purpose of the driver's license has changed dramatically over the years. The driver's license was originally created by States for a public safety purpose, to permit a qualified person to operate a motor vehicle. Today, however, the license has become the most widely-used form of identification that is accepted by a wide variety of private and public entities. In an April 2002 poll conducted by Public Opinion Strategies, 83 percent of the American public noted that they used their driver's license for purposes other than driving.

A driver's license has undoubtedly become a key that can open many doors, yet the current framework that States rely on in issued licenses was not designed for the cards to be used for identification purposes. Today, the 50 States follow 50 different methods for verifying a person's identification when they process driver's license applications. They apply different standards for defining what the acceptable documentation are that they require from applicants.

Additionally, the level of security in the driver's licenses and identification cards varies widely, from those states that incorporate high tech biometric identifiers to ones that are simply laminated. In fact, law enforcement officials estimate that there are more than 240 different formats of valid driver's licenses in circulation today.

Because of the disparity in the State issuance processes and the varying degrees of security of the cards themselves, it is extremely easy for individuals today to abuse the system by shopping around for licenses in those States with the weakest practices.

Earlier this year, I chaired a hearing in the Governmental Affairs Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, where we learned that eighteen of the nineteen hijackers involved in the September 11th attacks probably used State-issued driver's licenses or identification cards to board those doomed airplanes.

We also learned that these terrorists specifically went to motor vehicle agencies in States that, at that time, employed some of the most lenient processes and requirements in issuing licenses and identification cards.

For example, on August 1, 2001, two of the terrorists, Hani Hanjour and Khalid Al-Mihdhar, drove a van from New Jersey to the Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles, DMV, office in Arlington. In the parking lot, they asked around until they found someone willing to lie and vouch for their Virginia residency. They met Luis Martinez-Flores and Herbert Villalobos who, for a price, were willing to help.

Hanjour and Al-Mihdhar paid these strangers $50 each and received notarized forms which claimed that the two transients were in fact Virginia residents. Using these fake documents, Hanjour and Al-Mihdhar walked into the DMV, stood in line, had their photos taken, and walked out with authentic State-issued Virginia photo identification cards.

The next day, on August 2, 2001, Hanjour and Al-Mihdhar returned to the same Arlington DMV with two other September 11 terrorists, Salem Al-Hazmi and Majed Moqed. Hanjour and Al-Mihdhar helped Al-Hazmi and Moqed obtain Virginia identification cards of their own by vouching that they lived together in Virginia.

On the same day, two more terrorists, Abdul Al-Omari and Ahmed Al-Ghamdi, who were renting a room at a Maryland motel, contacted Kenys Galicia, a Virginia legal secretary and notary public, through a referral from Luis Martinez-Flores, the same person who was loitering near the Arlington DMV the day before.

Al-Omari and Al-Ghamdi paid Galicia to have her prepare false notarized affidavits stating that the two men lived in Virginia. Using these fake documents, these two also went to a Virginia motor vehicles office and received State-issued identification cards.

In addition to exploiting the lax Virginia system, at least thirteen of the nineteen terrorists held driver licenses or identification cards from Florida, a State that, at that time, did not require proof of residency from applicants.

A few of the September 11 terrorists held licenses or identification cards from more than one State, including from California, Arizona, and Maryland, while only one did not appear to hold any form of American-issued identification. Some received duplicate cards from the same State within months of September.

Some of them used these licenses to rent automobiles and check into motels, which provided them with constant mobility. Others used licenses as identification to receive wire transferred funds and to register for flight schools.

Yet had they not held these valuable commodities, would they have been successful in carrying out their evil final acts?

At the Governmental Affairs Subcommittee hearing, we heard testimony from a Maryland police chief that, just two days before September 11th, Ziad Jarrah, one of the terrorists, was stopped for speeding on Interstate 95, north of Baltimore. During this traffic stop, Jarrah produced an apparently valid driver's license from the State of Virginia, and as a result, the stop proceeded in a typical fashion.

However, while Jarrah's license indicated a resident address in Virginia, Jarrah was in fact resting overnights at motels along the way to Newark, New Jersey, from where he boarded Flight 93, which ultimately crashed in Pennsylvania. Had he been unable to produce a license when he was pulled over, or if he had produced a license that the trooper could have identified as having been issued fraudulently, who knows how that stop may have concluded.

What we do know is that these terrorists bought their way into our shaky, unreliable, and dangerous system of government-issued identification. With the identification cards that they obtained under phony pretenses, doors opened across America, including the doors of the four doomed aircrafts on the morning of September 11, 2001.

More troubling is that it appears what the terrorists did in obtaining the multiple identification cards was a part of an official strategic plan that terrorists employ as they seek to infiltrate our society.

Last year, Attorney General Ashcroft presented to the Senate Judiciary Committee, on which I serve, a copy of an Al Qaeda Terrorists Manual that was found by Manchester, England, police officials during the search of an Al Qaeda member's home.

Contained in it is a page that reads as follows:

FORGED DOCUMENTS (IDENTITY CARDS, RECORD BOOKS, PASSPORTS)

The following security precautions should be taken:

- * * * * *
- 2. All documents of the undercover brother, such as identity cards and passport, should be falsified.
- 3. When the undercover brother is traveling with a certain identity card or passport, he should know all pertinent [information] such as the name, profession, and place of residence.
- * * * * *

5. The photograph of the brother in these documents should be without a beard. It is preferable that the brother's public photograph [on these documents] be also without a beard. If he already has one [document] showing a photograph with a beard, he should replace it.

6. When using an identity document in different names, no more than one such document should be carried at one time.

* * * * *

It is obvious to me that the September 11 terrorists were trained very well by Al Qaeda. They followed these instructions flawlessly as they sought, and successfully obtained, multiple State-issued driver's licenses and identification cards in America.

The use of fake IDs is one of the oldest tricks in the book for criminals, and now we know that this is a page in the book for terrorists as well.

It is also one of the oldest traditions of adolescence, and a rite of passage for many teenagers who casually use a borrowed or tampered ID to buy alcohol or tobacco products, or to get into a nightclub. But underage drinking not only endangers the lives of those consuming the alcohol, it threatens the lives of others as well.

According to a 2001 survey by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, SAMHSA, more than 10 million individuals aged between 12 to 20 years old reported consuming alcohol in the year prior to the survey. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, NHTSA, reports that in the United States, drivers between the ages of 16 and 21 account for just seven percent of all drivers in the Nation, yet are involved in fifteen percent of all alcohol-related fatalities.

Drunk drivers are perhaps the most dangerous drivers on the road. But there are others who should not be allowed on the road.

We learned that thousands of drivers each year operate motor vehicles using multiple licenses issued under different identities from multiple states, which enable them to evade enforcement of driving restrictions imposed on them.

They know that under the current license issuance process, no State checks the background of license applicants with its sister States to see if that person may have already been issued a license by another State. So it is quite easy for individuals who have had their license suspended or revoked in one State to travel to a neighboring State and acquire a new license.

A representative of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, AAMVA, who testified at our hearing stated it this way: "Although the current system allows for reciprocity among the States, it lacks uniformity. Individuals looking to undermine the system, whether it is a terrorist, a drunk driver or an identity thief, shop around for licenses in those States that have become the weakest link."

AAMVA is a nonprofit voluntary association representing all motor vehicle agency administrators and chief law enforcement officials throughout the United States and Canada.

At the hearing, we also heard from a representative of the National Governors Association, NGA, who testified that the NGA has not yet developed an official position on the subject of identity security or enhancing the driver's license systems.

However, he acknowledged that the current system employed by States is broken, and is more likely to actually enable identity theft and fraud rather than prevent it.

He and others on the panel referenced several initiatives that some states were currently undertaking to improve their driver's license systems. For example, Virginia and Florida adopted revised procedures since last year to prevent the types of abuses we all recognized since September 11. And many other State legislatures have adopted, and are still in the process of debating, various reform measures, which, I believe, are all steps in the right direction.

I was especially encouraged to hear that the states were willing and ready to work with the Federal Government to address their problem together.

At our hearing, the AAMVA representative also testified that:

Seventy-seven percent of the American public support Congress passing legislation to modify the driver's licensing process and identification security. And, we need Congress to help in five areas: (1) support minimum compliance standards and requirements that each state must adopt when issuing a license; (2) help us identify fraudulent documents; (3) support an interstate network for confirming a person's driving history; (4) impose stiffer penalties on those committing fraudulent acts; (5) and, provide funding to make this happen. Funding so states can help ensure a safer America.

Thus, following this hearing, I reached out to, and worked with a number of groups and individuals representing States, motor vehicle agencies, privacy advocates, immigrant communities, and the technology industry, to consider an appropriate federal legislation on this issue.

We also reached out to various agencies in the Bush Administration, including the Office of Homeland Security, to seek their input on legislation.

Then, in July of this year, President Bush unveiled his "National Strategy for Homeland Security." In that report the President wrote:

MAJOR INITIATIVES (STATE)

Given the states' major role in homeland security, and consistent with the principles of federalism inherent to American government, the following initiatives constitute suggestions, not mandates, for state initiatives.

Coordinate suggested minimum standards for state driver's licenses. The licensing of drivers by the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the United States territories varies widely. There is no national or agreed upon state standards for content, format, or license acquisition procedures. Terrorist organizations, including Al-Qaeda operatives involved in the September 11 attacks, have exploited these differences. While the issuance of drivers' licenses fall squarely within the powers of the states, the federal government can assist the states in crafting solutions to curtail the future abuse of drivers' licenses by terrorist organizations. Therefore, the federal government, in consultation with state government agencies and non-governmental organizations, should support state-led efforts to develop suggested minimum standards for driver's licenses, recognizing that many states should and will exceed these standards.

I fully agree with the President that the issuance of driver's licenses is within the province of the States. In fact, our bill explicitly recognizes and preserves the right of states to determine the qualification or eligibility for obtaining driver's licenses, the terms of its validity, and how the license should look.

But I also agree with the President that there is an important role for the Federal Government to play in assisting the states to address the national problem of fraud and abuse. I therefore believe this bill that we are introducing today strikes an appropriate balance between the states' authority and federal interests.

Our bill is narrowly drafted to improve the process by which licenses are issued. First, I note that there are two already existing federal programs that address driver's licenses.

The National Driver Register, NDR, which was first created by Congress in 1960 and revised in 1982, serves as a central file of state reports on drivers whose licenses have been suspended, revoked, canceled, or denied, or who have been convicted of serious traffic-related offenses. The NDR's primary purpose is to enable State motor vehicle agencies to share driver record information with each other so that they can make informed decisions about issuing driver's licenses to individuals, particularly those who move into their states from other jurisdictions.

The Commercial Driver License Information System is the second Federal program, which was established by Congress in 1986, to keep problem commercial drivers off the roads, and to prevent traffic violations from being hidden behind multiple licenses.

Every State today participates in both federal programs, and all States currently share certain information with each other in order to make informed decisions before issuing driver's licenses. However, the current limited scope of these programs leave a gaping loophole: One deals only with records of problem drivers, while the other deals only with records of commercial drivers. What about the records of non-problem drivers who are not commercial drivers?

Our bill closes this loophole by consolidating the appropriate functional-ties of these two programs and by adding new security measures that would allow every State to check all other States' records of all drivers before issuing commercial or regular driver's licenses. This new process will help prevent States from issuing more than one license to any one individual, which will end forum shopping, abuse, and fraud.

In recognizing the federal responsibilities of this program, our bill would provide Federal funding for the upgrades as well as direct Federal funding to states to assist their continued participating in the new integrated system.

While the goals of the bill are specific and firm, we are also mindful of the jurisdiction of the states to regulate who is eligible to receive driver's licenses, and what the licenses should look like. We thus provide authority to the Secretary of Transportation to engage in a negotiated rulemaking which would include all the appropriate affected entities and individuals, in order to collectively develop the required minimum standards on the issuance process.

This program can be successful only if every state participates enthusiastically. Therefore, to provide maximum input from the states, the bill specifically requires that the Secretary consult with the states and entities representing the interest of the states, and, as necessary, with interested groups and individuals in developing consensus implementing regulations.

I should note, as the White House has, that many States should and will exceed these minimum standards set forth in this bill. So for states that are already above the curve, our bill provides federal grants to highlight innovative pilot programs designed to verify driver's identity, prevent fraud, or demonstrate the use of technology to create tamper resistant licenses.

Our bill also requires States to make their driver's licenses and identification cards more resistant to tampering, altering, or counterfeiting than they are today. But, again, the bill does not specify what those security features ought to be. Instead, it requires the Secretary of Transportation to engage in rulemaking with the States and with experts to collectively develop the required minimum standards for all states to adopt.

The bill also cracks down on internal fraud and bribery that, unfortunately, occur behind the DMV counters. We impose tough penalties for unauthorized access to or use of DMV equipment used to manufacture licenses, and also creates penalties for persons who fraudulently issue, obtain, renew, or transfer a driver's license. The bill also requires States to conduct internal audits of license issuance processes to identify and address these fraudulent activities.

Finally, our bill enhances privacy protection for license holders by significantly strengthening the Driver's Privacy Protection Act, which Congress last amended in 1994. The bill protects the privacy of driver's information by expanding the definitions of sensitive "personal information" and by tightening up the current set of permissible disclosures.

Additionally, under this bill, State motor vehicle agencies would be prohibited from disclosing or displaying social security numbers on any driver's license, motor vehicle registration, or any other document issued for the purpose of identification.

With Federal financial and technical assistance and a narrowly tailored common-sense approach, I believe this bill can close the loopholes that continue to leave all of us vulnerable. By working together, we can assist states to adopt a new system that will ensure integrity in the issuance process, integrity in the cards themselves, and protection of privacy of drivers across the country. I urge my colleagues to support this important bill.

By Ms. COLLINS:

S. 3110. A bill to require further study before amendment 13 to the Northeast Multispecies (Groundfish) Management Plan is implemented; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Fisheries Management Fairness Act in order to provide New England fishermen with a guarantee that the fisheries management decisions that affect their lives will not be made without the benefit of sound, reliable data.

Fishing is more than just a profession in New England. Fishing is a way of life. This way of life is being threatened, however, by excessive regulations and unnecessary litigation. Despite scientific evidence of a rebound in fish stocks, fishermen are suffering under ever more burdensome restrictions. As a result of recent litigation, fishermen have seen their days at sea slashed, struggle to implement new gear changes, and are squeezed into ever smaller fishing areas.

Everyday, I hear from fishermen who struggle to support their families because they have been deprived of their right to make an honest living on the seas. The "working waterfronts" of our communities are in danger of disappearing, likely to be replaced by tourism and development. Once the culture of fishing is lost, it will be all but impossible to replace.

On September 11, 2002, the National Marine Fisheries Service announced that the trawler gear used on the NOAA research vessel Albatross IV had been calibrated incorrectly, casting suspicion over the data it had collected since February of 2000. The misaligned gear had been used to conduct the last eight stock abundance surveys, which measure long-term increases and decreases in stock populations.

Data gathered by these surveys are the basis for regulations in fisheries management plans governing the rebuilding of overfished stocks. These regulations take the form of "amendments" to the New England's overall groundfish management plan, covering a complex of thirteen groundfish species. Amendment 13, the next set of regulations, is supposed to be ready for implementation by August 22, 2003.

Although the National Marine Fisheries Service has conducted an observation cruise and a performance review workshop with industry to examine the extent of the damage in the survey, the agency has concluded that additional research is required to determine the full extent of the damage caused by the flawed gear. The Service has pledged to conduct a "short-term experiment" to determine the extent of the damage to the survey. This short-term experiment will rely on video and sensor equipment to gather data, and a subsequent workshop to examine the data and produce a report that can be used in updating groundfish assessments.

It is unlikely that this experiment will provide the quality of data necessary to develop Amendment 13 by its court-ordered deadline. The type of data necessary to develop fisheries management plans can be produced only after years of research that demonstrate long-term stock trends. Theoretical modeling of past data of questionable quality is simply not good enough to develop the regulations of a plan that will affect the survival of our fishermen.

When fishermen's livelihoods depend on the quality of survey data, we owe it to them to get the data collection right. There is no room for second-rate science and faulty data.

My bill addresses these problems by preventing Amendment 13 from being implemented for two years, enough time to allow the Northeast Fishery Science Center and the National Marine Fishery Center to determine the reliability of the data collected by the Albatross IV and to collect accurate data on which to base future amendments.

I will not stand idly by and let New England's fishing community die without a fight. I pledge to work with my colleagues in the Senate to work to pass this legislation. If we cannot pass it as a rider to another bill during this session, then I plan to reintroduce it and fight for its passage when we reconvene next year.

STATEMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 338—DESIGNATING THE MONTH OF OCTOBER, 2002, AS "CHILDREN'S INTERNET SAFETY MONTH"

Mr. MCCAIN (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. BREAUX, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. CRAIG, Mrs. CLINTON, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. DODD, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. HUTCHINSON, and Ms. SNOWE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 338

Whereas the Internet is one of the most effective tools available for purposes of education and research and gives children the means to make friends and freely communicate with peers and family anywhere in the world;

Whereas the new era of instant communication holds great promise for achieving better understanding of the world and providing the opportunity for creative inquiry;

Whereas it is vital to the well-being of children that the Internet offer an open and responsible environment to explore;

Whereas access to objectionable material, such as violent, obscene, or sexually explicit adult material may be received by a minor in unsolicited form;

Whereas there is a growing concern in all levels of society to protect children from objectionable material; and

Whereas the Internet is a positive educational tool and should be seen in such a manner rather than as a vehicle for entities to make objectionable materials available to children: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate

(1) designates October, 2002, as "Children's Internet Safety Month" and supports its official status on the Nation's promotional calendar; and

(2) supports parents and guardians in promoting the creative development of children by encouraging the use of the Internet in a safe, positive manner.

SENATE RESOLUTION 339—DESIGNATING NOVEMBER 2002, AS "NATIONAL RUNAWAY PREVENTION MONTH"

Mrs. MURRAY (for herself and Ms. COLLINS) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 339

Whereas the prevalence of runaway and homeless youth in our Nation is staggering, with studies suggesting that between 1,300,000 and 2,800,000 young people live on the streets of the United States each year;

Whereas running away from home is widespread, with 1 out of every 7 children in the United States running away before the age of 18;

Whereas youth that end up on the streets are often those who have been "thrown out" of their homes by their families, who have been physically, sexually, and emotionally abused at home, who have been discharged by State custodial systems without adequate transition plans, who have lost their parents through death or divorce, and who are too poor to secure their own basic needs;

Whereas effective programs supporting runaway youth and assisting young people in remaining at home with their families succeed because of partnerships created among families, community-based human service agencies, law enforcement agencies, schools, faith-based organizations, and businesses;

Whereas preventing young people from running away and supporting youth in high-risk situations is a family, community, and national responsibility;

Whereas the future well-being of the Nation is dependent on the value placed on young people and the opportunities provided for youth to acquire the knowledge, skills, and abilities necessary to develop into safe, healthy, and productive adults;

Whereas the National Network for Youth and its members advocate on behalf of runaway and homeless youth and provide an array of community-based support services that address the critical needs of such youth;

Whereas the National Runaway Switchboard provides crisis intervention and referrals to reconnect runaway youth to their families and to link young people to local resources that provide positive alternatives to running away; and

Whereas the National Network for Youth and National Runaway Switchboard are co-sponsoring National Runaway Prevention Month to increase public awareness of the life circumstances of youth in high-risk situations and the need for safe, healthy, and productive alternatives, resources, and supports for youth, families, and communities: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate designates November 2002, as "National Runaway Prevention Month".

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by my colleague from Maine, Senator COLLINS, in submitting this Senate resolution designating November as "National Runaway Prevention Month."

A recent study by the Federal Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention estimates that nearly 1.7 million American youth run away or are turned out of their homes in a single year. Many of these children end up living on the streets where they become victims of illness, hunger, drug use, and crime. Any parent knows how important their support is to helping children get a good start in life.

Unfortunately, too many young people find themselves in desperate straits. Imagine a young girl, perhaps 15 or 16 years old, finding herself with no place to sleep. Or realizing that she is hungry but has no money left for food or for bus fare to get to a soup kitchen. Imagine her fear when the nights turn very cold and the clothes on her back are not enough to keep her warm. As a country, we would not, could not and must not ignore this young girl. I bring this resolution to the floor today to raise awareness of the tragedy of runaway youth, to express my appreciation for those who work to prevent runaways and help street children, and to remind my colleagues of the difference our funding decisions make in people's lives.

Many street youth are running from families beleaguered by physical abuse, neglect, parental substance abuse, poverty or serious family conflict. Unlike many homeless adults, who often suffer from mental illness or substance abuse problems, most of these young people are leaving their homes as a reaction to intolerable circumstances. But while the conditions that drive these young people out of their homes may be intolerable, they are almost always preventable or treatable.

As with many problems our society faces, the best way for us to prevent runaway and "throwaway" children from taking to the streets is for our communities to work together. Communities can and must intervene to strengthen families and help youth in high-risk situations. The needs of these families are as diverse as our nation, but the solutions are often as simple as high-quality intervention services from a government, community or faith-based organization. Local organizations offering services to victims of domestic violence, counseling and anger management courses, substance abuse treatment and other social services could make the difference in whether or not a child runs away.

I would like to take a moment to recognize and thank the social workers, counselors, caseworkers, teachers, and volunteers who devote their lives to preventing runaways. The services they offer vary widely, but their intervention may keep a family together and a young person in a healthy home. I would also like to thank the thousands of workers and volunteers who work with runaway youth. It is not always easy to work with young people who may be angry, alienated or addicted to drugs, but the people who go into the streets to find and help these children are capable, committed and caring. They are often the only thing standing between a young person and self-destruction. They help street children find shelter and food, get an education and recover from substance abuse where necessary. They also help them reunite with their families when appropriate, or find a safe alternative. They are truly guardian angels.

Finally, I want to remind my colleagues that many of the local services that can help a struggling family become a healthy home are federally funded. We often see these services as abstract line-items in an appropriations bill: Temporary Assistance to Needy Families, Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment State Grants, and Social Services Block Grants. We must remember that these are not just line-items, they are lifelines to youth who need our help. Given the enormous deficits most States are facing, many of these services are losing critical state resources. As we ensure resources are available for the war against terrorism, we must not abandon our vulnerable young people in their own fight for survival.

The recent White House Conference on Missing, Exploited, and Runaway Children helped to remind us of the fate of thousands of these children. Declaring November to be "National Runaway Prevention Month" would build on that reminder. Across our country, communities will undertake activities during November to increase public awareness of the circumstances facing many youth and the need for safe, healthy, and productive alternatives and resources for these children and their families. This resolution puts the United States Senate on record in support of National Runaway Prevention Month and its effort to promote family-based and community-based interventions that prevent young people from running away from home. I urge my colleagues to support our Nation's vulnerable youth by co-sponsoring this resolution and making an effort through their actions or their words to raise awareness of the tragedy of runaway youth.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 152—DESIGNATING AUGUST 7, 2003, AS "NATIONAL PURPLE HEART RECOGNITION DAY"

Mrs. CLINTON (for herself and Mr. HAGEL) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. CON. RES. 152

Whereas the Order of the Purple Heart for Military Merit, commonly known as the Purple Heart, is the oldest military decoration in the world in present use;

Whereas the Purple Heart is awarded in the name of the President of the United States to members of the Armed Forces who are wounded in conflict with an enemy force or while held by an enemy force as a prisoner of war, and posthumously to the next of kin of members of the Armed Forces who are killed in conflict with an enemy force or who die of a wound received in conflict with an enemy force;

Whereas the Purple Heart was established on August 7, 1782, during the Revolutionary War, when General George Washington issued an order establishing the Honorary Badge of Distinction, otherwise known as the Badge of Military Merit or the Decoration of the Purple Heart;

Whereas the award of the Purple Heart ceased with the end of the Revolutionary war, but was revived out of respect for the memory and military achievements of George Washington in 1932, the 200th anniversary of his birth; and

Whereas the designation of August 7, 2003, as "National Purple Heart Recognition Day" is a fitting tribute to General Washington and to the over 1,535,000 recipients of the Purple Heart Medal, approximately 550,000 of whom are still living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) designates August 7, 2003, as "National Purple Heart Recognition Day";

(2) encourages all Americans to learn about the history of the Order of the Purple Heart for Military Merit and to honor its recipients; and

(3) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to conduct appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs to demonstrate support for the Order of the Purple Heart for Military Merit.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 4871. Mr. SPECTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution S.J. Res. 45, to authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against Iraq; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Authorization for the Use of Force Against Iraq Resolution of 2002."

SEC. 2.

The Senate finds that under United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 (1991), which effected a formal cease-fire following the Persian Gulf War, Iraq agreed to destroy or dismantle, under international supervision, its nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons programs (hereinafter in this joint resolution referred to as Iraq's "weapons of mass destruction program"), as well as its program to develop or acquire ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometers (hereafter in this joint resolution referred to as Iraq's "prohibited ballistic missile program"), and undertook unconditionally not to develop any such weapons thereafter.

On numerous occasions since 1991, the United Nations Security Council has reaffirmed Resolution 687, most recently in Resolution 1284, which established a new weapons inspection regime to ensure Iraqi compliance with its obligations under Resolution 687;

On numerous occasions since 1991, the United States and the United Nations Security Council have condemned Iraq's failure to fulfill its obligations under Resolution 687 to destroy or dismantle its weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program;

Iraq under Saddam Hussein used chemical weapons in its war with Iran in the 1980s and against Kurdish population in northern Iraq in 1988;

Since 1990, the United States has considered Iraq to be a state sponsor of terrorism;

Iraq's failure to comply with its international obligations to destroy or dismantle its weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program, its record of using weapons of mass destruction, its record of using force against neighboring states, and its support for international terrorism require a strong diplomatic, and if necessary, military response by the international community, led by the United States.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION FOR THE USE OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES.

(a) AUTHORIZATION FOR THE USE OF FORCE.—The President, subject to subsection (b), is authorized to use United States Armed Forces—

(1) to enforce United Nations Security Council Resolution 687, and other resolutions approved by the Council which govern Iraqi compliance with Resolution 687, in order to secure the dismantlement or destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program; or

(2) in the exercise of individual or collective self-defense, to defend the United States or allied nations against a grave threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program.

(b) REQUIREMENT FOR DETERMINATION THAT USE OF FORCE IS NECESSARY.—Before exercising the authority granted by subsection (a), the President shall make available to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate his determination that—

(1) the United States has attempted to seek, through the United Nations Security Council, adoption of a resolution after September 12, 2002 under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter authorizing the action described in subsection (a)(1), and such resolution has been adopted; or

(2) that the threat to the United States or allied nations posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and prohibited ballistic missile program is grave that the use of force is necessary pursuant to subsection (a)(2), notwithstanding the failure of the Security Council to approve a resolution described in paragraph (1).

SEC. 3. CONSULTATION AND REPORTS.

(a) CONSULTATION.—The President shall keep Congress fully and currently informed on matters relevant to this joint resolution.

(b) INITIAL REPORT.—

(1) As soon as practicable, but not later than 30 days after exercising the authority under subsection 2(a), the President shall submit to Congress a report setting forth information—

(A) about the degree to which other nations will assist the United States in the use of force in Iraq;

(B) regarding measures the United States is taking, or preparing to take, to protect key allies in the region from armed attack by Iraq; and

(c) on planning to establish a secure environment in the immediate aftermath of the use of force (including estimated expenditures by the United States and allied nations), and, if necessary, prepare for the political and economic reconstruction of Iraq following the use of force.

(2) CLASSIFICATION OF REPORT.—The reported required by paragraph (1) may be submitted in classified form.

(c) SUBSEQUENT REPORTS.—Following transmittal of the report required by subsection (b), the President shall submit a report to Congress every 60 days thereafter on the status of United States diplomatic, military and reconstruction operations with respect to Iraq.

SEC. 4. WAR POWERS RESOLUTION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) SPECIFIC STATUTORY AUTHORIZATION.—Consistent with section 8(a)(1) of the War Powers Resolution, the Congress declares that section 2 is intended to constitute specific statutory authorization within the meaning of section 5(b) of the War Powers Resolution.

(b) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Nothing in this resolution supersedes any requirement of the War Powers Resolution.

SEC. 2.

The Senate finds that under United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 (1991), which effected a formal cease-fire following the Persian Gulf War, Iraq agreed to destroy or dismantle, under international supervision, its nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons programs (hereafter in this joint resolution referred to as Iraq's "weapons of mass destruction program"), as well as its program to develop or acquire ballistic missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometers (hereafter in this joint resolution referred to as Iraq's "prohibited ballistic missile program"), and undertook unconditionally not to develop any such weapons thereafter.

On numerous occasions since 1991, the United Nations Security Council has reaffirmed Resolution 687, most recently in Resolution 1284, which established a new weapons inspection regime to ensure Iraqi compliance with its obligations under Resolution 687;

On numerous occasions since 1991, the United States and the United Nations Security Council have condemned Iraq's failure to fulfill its obligations under Resolution 687 to destroy or dismantle its weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program;

Iraq under Saddam Hussein used chemical weapons in its war with Iran in the 1980s and against the Kurdish population in northern Iraq in 1988;

Since 1990, the United States has considered Iraq to be a state sponsor of terrorism.

Iraq's failure to comply with its international obligations to destroy or dismantle its weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program, its record of using weapons of mass destruction, its record of using force against neighboring states, and its support for international terrorism require a strong diplomatic, and if necessary, military response by the international community, led by the United States.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION FOR THE USE OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES.

(a) AUTHORIZATION FOR THE USE OF FORCE.—The President, subject to subsection (b), is authorized to use United States Armed Forces—

(1) to enforce United Nations Security Council Resolution 687, and other resolutions approved by the Council which govern Iraqi compliance with Resolution 687, in order to secure the dismantlement or destruction of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program; or

(2) in the exercise of individual or collective self-defense, to defend the United States or allied nations against a grave threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and its prohibited ballistic missile program.

(b) REQUIREMENT FOR DETERMINATION THAT USE OF FORCE IS NECESSARY.—Before exercising the authority granted by subsection (a), the President shall make available to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate his determination that—

(1) the United States has attempted to seek, through the United Nations Security Council, adoption of a resolution after September 12, 2002 under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter authorizing the action described in subsection (a)(1), and such resolution has been adopted; or

(2) That the threat to the United States or allied nations posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and prohibited ballistic missile program is so grave that the use of force is necessary pursuant to subsection (a)(2), notwithstanding the failure of the Security Council to approve a resolution described in paragraph (1).

SEC. 3. CONSULTATION AND REPORTS.

(a) CONSULTATION.—The President shall keep Congress fully and currently informed on matters relevant to this joint resolution.

(b) INITIAL REPORT.—

(1) As soon as practicable, but not later than 30 days after exercising the authority under subsection 2(a), the President shall submit to Congress a report setting forth information—

(A) about the degree to which other nations will assist the United States in the use of force in Iraq;

(B) regarding measures the United States is taking, or preparing to take, to protect key allies in the region from armed attack by Iraq; and

(C) on planning to establish a secure environment in the immediate aftermath of the use of force (including estimated expenditures by the United States and allied nations), and, if necessary, prepare for the political and economic reconstruction of Iraq following the use of force.

(2) CLASSIFICATION OF REPORT.—The report required by paragraph (1) may be submitted in classified form.

(c) SUBSEQUENT REPORTS.—Following transmittal of the report required by subsection (b), the President shall submit a report to Congress every 60 days thereafter on the status of United States diplomatic, military and reconstruction operations with respect to Iraq.

SEC. 4. WAR POWERS RESOLUTION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) SPECIFIC STATUTORY AUTHORIZATION.—Consistent with section 8(a)(1) of the War Powers Resolution, the Congress declares that section 2 is intended to constitute specific statutory authorization within the meaning of section 5(b) of the War Powers Resolution.

(b) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Nothing in this resolution supersedes any requirement of the War Powers Resolution.

SA 4875. Mr. SPECTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution S.J. Res. 45, to authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against Iraq; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

SA 4878. Mr. REID (for Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3389, to reauthorize the National Sea Grant College Program Act, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO FINDINGS.

Section 202(a)(6) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1121(a)(6)) is amended by striking the period at the end and inserting ", including strong collaborations between Administration scientists and scientists at academic institutions."

SEC. 3. REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO NATIONAL SEA GRANT COLLEGE PROGRAM.

(a) QUADRENNIAL STRATEGIC PLAN.—Section 204(c)(1) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(c)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the panel, sea grant colleges, and sea grant institutes, shall develop at least every 4 years a strategic plan that establishes priorities for the national sea grant college program, provides an appropriately balanced response to local, regional, and national needs, and is reflective of integration with the relevant portions of the strategic plans of the Department of Commerce and of the Administration."

(b) PROGRAM EVALUATION AND RATING.—

(1) EVALUATION AND RATING REQUIREMENT.—Section 204(d)(3)(A) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(d)(3)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

"(A)(i) evaluate the performance of the programs of sea grant colleges and sea grant institutes, using the priorities, guidelines, and qualifications established by the Secretary under subsection (c), and determine which of the programs are the best managed and carry out the highest quality research, education, extension, and training activities; and

"(ii) rate the programs according to their relative performance (as determined under clause (i)) into no less than 5 categories, with each of the 2 best-performing categories containing no more than 25 percent of the programs;"

(2) REVIEW OF EVALUATION AND RATING PROCESS.—(A) After 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere, shall contract with the National Academy of Sciences—

(i) to review the effectiveness of the evaluation and rating system under the amendment made by paragraph (1) in determining the relative performance of programs of sea grant colleges and sea grant institutes;

(ii) to evaluate whether the sea grant programs have improved as a result of the evaluation process; and

(iii) to make appropriate recommendations to improve the overall effectiveness of the evaluation process.

(B) The National Academy of Sciences shall submit a report to the Congress on the findings and recommendations of the panel under subparagraph (A) by not later than 4 years after the date of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) ALLOCATION OF FUNDING.—Section 204(d)(3)(B) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(d)(3)(B)) is amended by striking "and" after the semicolon at the end of clause (ii) and by adding at the end the following:

"(iv) encourage and promote coordination and cooperation between the research, education, and outreach programs of the Administration and those of academic institutions; and"

SEC. 4. COST SHARE.

Section 205(a) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1124(a)) is amended by striking "section 204(d)(6)" and inserting "section 204(c)(4)(F)".

SEC. 5. FELLOWSHIPS.

(a) ENSURING EQUAL ACCESS.—Section 208(a) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1127(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "The Secretary shall strive to ensure equal access for minority and economically disadvantaged students to the program carried out under this subsection. Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002, and every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress describing the efforts by the Secretary to ensure equal access for minority and economically disadvantaged students to the program carried out under this subsection, and the results of such efforts."

(b) POSTDOCTORAL FELLOWS.—Section 208(c) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1127(c)) is repealed.

SEC. 6. TERMS OF MEMBERSHIP FOR SEA GRANT REVIEW PANEL.

Section 209(c)(2) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1128(c)(2)) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following: "The term of office of a voting member of the panel shall be 3 years for a member appointed before the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002, and 4 years for a member appointed or reappointed after the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002. The Director may extend the term of office of a voting member of the panel appointed before the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002 by up to 1 year."

SEC. 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 212 of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1131) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this title—

"(A) $60,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;

"(B) $75,000,000 for fiscal year 2004;

"(C) $77,500,000 for fiscal year 2005;

"(D) $80,000,000 for fiscal year 2006;

"(E) $82,500,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

"(F) $85,000,000 for fiscal year 2008.

“(2) PRIORITY ACTIVITIES.—In addition to the amounts authorized under paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2008—

“(A) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on the biology and control of zebra mussels and other important aquatic nonnative species;

“(B) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on oyster diseases, oyster restoration, and oyster-related human health risks;

“(C) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on the biology, prevention, and forecasting of harmful algal blooms, including Pfiesteria piscicida; and

“(D) $3,000,000 for competitive grants for fishery extension activities conducted by sea grant colleges or sea grant institutes to enhance, and not supplant, existing core program funding.

“(b) LIMITATIONS.—

“(1) ADMINISTRATION.—There may not be used for administration of programs under this title in a fiscal year more than 5 percent of the lesser of—

“(A) the amount authorized to be appropriated under this title for the fiscal year; or

“(B) the amount appropriated under this title for the fiscal year.

“(2) USE FOR OTHER OFFICES OR PROGRAMS.—Sums appropriated under the authority of subsection (a)(2) shall not be available for administration of this title by the National Sea Grant Office, for any other Administration or department program, or for any other administrative expenses.

“(c) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—In any fiscal year in which the appropriations made under subsection (a)(1) exceed the amounts appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the purposes described in such subsection, the Secretary shall distribute any excess amounts (except amounts used for the administration of the sea grant program) to any combination of the following:

“(1) sea grant programs, according to their rating under section 204(d)(3)(A);

“(2) national strategic investments authorized under section 204(b)(4);

“(3) a college, university, institution, association, or alliance for activities that are necessary for it to be designated as a sea grant college or sea grant institute;

“(4) a sea grant college or sea grant institute designated after the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002 but not yet evaluated under section 204(d)(3)(A).”

SEC. 8. ANNUAL REPORT ON PROGRESS IN BECOMING DESIGNATED AS SEA GRANT COLLEGES AND SEA GRANT INSTITUTES.

Section 207 of the National Sea Grant college Program Act (16 U.S.C. 1126) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT ON PROGRESS.—

“(1) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall report annually to the Committee on Resources and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives, and to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, on efforts and progress made by colleges, universities, institutions, associations, and alliances to become designated under this section as sea grant colleges or sea grant institutes, including efforts and progress made by sea grant institutes in being designated as sea grant colleges.

“(2) TERRITORIES AND FREELY ASSOCIATED STATES.—The report shall include description of—

“(A) efforts made by colleges, universities, associations, institutions, and alliances in

United States territories and freely associated States to develop the expertise necessary to be designated as a sea grant institute or sea grant college;

“(B) the administrative, technical, and financial assistance provided by the Secretary to those entities seeking to be designated; and

“(C) the additional actions or activities necessary for those entities to meet the qualifications for such designation under subsection (a)(1).”

SEC. 9. COORDINATION.

Not later than February 15 of each year, the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere and the Director of the National Science Foundation shall jointly submit to the Committees on Resources and Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on how the oceans and coastal research activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, including the Coastal Ocean Program and the National Sea Grant College Program, and of the National Science Foundation will be coordinated during the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the report is submitted. The report shall describe in detail any overlapping ocean and coastal research interests between the agencies and specify how such research interests will be pursued by the programs in a complementary manner.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be read three times, passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the preamble be agreed to, and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 113) was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 5427

Mr. REID. Mr. President, H.R. 5427 is at the desk and due for its second reading; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask that H.R. 5427 be read a second time, but I also object to any further proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill by title for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5427) to designate the Federal building located at Fifth and Richardson Avenues in Roswell, New Mexico, as the "Joe Skeen Federal Building".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—H.R. 4968

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is my understanding that H.R. 4968, which has been received from the House, is now at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4968) to provide for the exchange of certain lands in Utah.

Mr. REID. I ask for its second reading but object to my own request on behalf of a number of my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will receive its second reading on the next legislative day.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 3099

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand S. 3099, introduced earlier today by Senator DASCHLE and others, is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3099) providing emergency disaster assistance to agricultural producers.

Mr. REID. I ask for its second reading, and I object to my own request on behalf of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The bill will be read for the second time on the next legislative day.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 3100

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand S. 3100, introduced earlier today by Senator FEINSTEIN and others, is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3100) to amend title 18, United States Code, to limit the misuse of social security numbers, to establish criminal penalties for such misuse, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. I now ask for its second reading, and I object to my own request on behalf of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

This bill will be read for the second time on the next legislative day.

REFERRAL OF S. 2018

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 637, S. 2018, a bill to establish the T'uf Shur Bien Preservation Trust Area, be referred to the Indian Affairs Committee for the sole purpose of the committee reporting the bill with amendments that were agreed upon by the committee, and the bill be returned to the calendar forthwith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 2003—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee on the conference on the bill (H.R. 5011), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5011), making appropriations for military construction, family housing, and base realignment and closure for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, having met, have agreed that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, signed by all of the conferees on the part of both Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 9, 2002.)

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring before the Senate the conference agreement on the fiscal year 2003 military construction appropriations bill.

While the United States is engaged in a war on terrorism, and Congress is debating whether to give the President the authority to attack Iraq, it is timely that we are also acting to provide the military with the resources it needs to carry out its missions. The military construction appropriations bill funds scores of mission critical and quality of life infrastructure projects that are essential to support the efforts of the military.

I am pleased that the Senate has moved quickly to take up this conference agreement. This bill provides nearly $10.5 billion in new budget authority, an amount only slightly below last year's funding. Given the many additional requirements being imposed on the military, particularly to meet new antiterrorism and force protection standards, additional funding would have been helpful. Still, within the funding constraints imposed on the bill, this measure does an excellent job of meeting the most critical infrastructure needs of the services.

Mr. President, the projects in this bill address military readiness, quality of life, and anti-terrorism/force protection requirements. The conference attempted to address as many of the services' priorities as possible, and I believe we have done a good job in that respect, particularly in light of the fact that the House and Senate bills had very significant differences between them.

The conference agreement provides nearly $4.9 billion for the active components of the military. It provides $688 million for the guard and reserve, more than double the President's budget request. Within these amounts is included $799 million for anti-terrorism/force protection enhancements for military facilities worldwide. This commitment to protect American military bases will help to ensure the security of military personnel and the families, as well as to protect the taxpayers' substantial investment in defense infrastructure.

The Conference Agreement also provides $1.2 billion for barracks, and $4.2 billion for military family housing, both of which are top quality of life priorities for military personnel and their families.

There are two other very important items that merit mention. The first is a $25 million initiative to accelerate the construction associated with the Army's Stryker Brigade combat teams.

The Stryker Brigades will offer the military fast, light-weight, air-mobile combat power—a far advanced system when compared to the restrictions with heavy armor.

An additional $25 million initiative will accelerate the Air Force's C-17 Air Mobility Program.

The C-17 initiative will provide the infrastructure needed to support and enhance the ability of one of the air force's most dependable aircraft, capable of transporting both troops and equipment. The C-17 program will help address the significant shortfall in Military airlift requirements.

The conference report also includes $20 million dollars for a BRAC Environmental cleanup initiative.

This initiative assists Military installations that have been closed as part of the base realignment and closure effort. This additional funding, in addition to the budget requested amount, is necessary to enable the military to honor its commitments to the people and the communities that have been affected by these last four rounds of base closure.

This is a start, but much more will be needed to complete the environmental clean up of BRAC sites across the nation in a reasonable period of time. This is certainly something that should be considered before the nation embarks on any future rounds of base closings.

Mr. President, I thank chairman BYRD, Senator STEVENS, and my ranking member on the subcommittee, Senator HUTCHISON, for their support and assistance in bringing this conference agreement to the Senate. I also thank the subcommittee staff, including Christina Evans and BG Wright of the majority staff; Sid Ashworth and Alycia Farrell of the minority staff; and Matt Miller of my staff, for their hard work on this measure.

Given the difficulties that have faced the appropriations process this year, I am pleased and grateful that the military construction bill will be sent to the President prior to the Senate's adjournment. I urge the President to sign this bill without delay.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring before the Senate the conference agreement on the fiscal year 2003 military construction appropriations bill and endorse those comments made by the Chairman, Senator FEINSTEIN.

I am gratified that the Congress was able to move forward on a military construction bill for fiscal year 2003. This is especially critical when the nation is considering military action to prevent the spread of terrorism and the potential use of weapons of mass destruction. Given the circumstances, this is a particularly timely, and time sensitive, Conference Report, and it is important that the Senate is moving quickly to pass it so that we can provide our military personnel the housing and facilities they need to perform their duties.

This is a good package that meets the most pressing needs of the military, both in terms of readiness and quality of life issues. It is not, of course, a perfect package. The Conference Report does not include everything that the Senate wanted; nor does it include everything that the House wanted. It does, however, address the priorities of the Department of Defense as well as both Houses of Congress. It is a carefully crafted compromise that is both balanced and bipartisan.

The Chairman highlighted several of the critical items contained in this bill, such as $1.2 billion for new barracks, $151 million for military hospitals and medical facilities, $688 million for new Guard and Reserve facilities, and $1.34 billion for new family housing for military personnel and their families.

These are important increases that signal a renewed commitment to upgrading and rebuilding the infrastructure that is truly the backbone of our Nation's military. I am proud to support funding for these important programs.

In recent years, we have made real progress in improving family housing for single service members and for families, as well as improving the workplaces for the men and women who serve America both at home and abroad. However, much remains to be done.

It is my hope that in future budgets, we will see sufficient resources to continue the Department of Defense's efforts to modernize, renovate and improve aging defense facilities and infrastructure, the effects of sustained and structural inattention by the Pentagon and the military services to basic infrastructure are apparent on nearly every military installation. This will continue to have long-term implications as facilities continue to age disproportionately without a sustained level of investment in maintenance and repair.

Mr. President, I want to thank Chairman BYRD, Senator STEVENS, and the Chairman of this subcommittee, Senator FEINSTEIN, for their unflagging support and assistance in bringing this conference agreement to the Senate. I also thank the subcommittee staff for their hard work on this measure.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements be printed in the RECORD with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

RECOGNIZING THE EXPLOITS OF THE OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE S.S. HENRY BACON

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. Con. Res. 411.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 411) recognizing the exploits of the officers and crew of the S.S. Henry Bacon, a United States Liberty ship that was sunk on February 23, 1945, in the waning days of World War II.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the resolution and preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and any statements regarding this resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 411) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

NATIONAL SEA GRANT COLLEGE PROGRAM ACT AMENDMENTS OF 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now proceed to H.R. 3389, Calendar No. 463.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3389) to reauthorize the National Sea Grant College Program Act, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. REID. Senator KERRY has an amendment at the desk. I ask unanimous consent the amendment be considered and agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, the bill as amended be read a third time, passed, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4878) was agreed to, as follows:

(Purpose: To reauthorize the National Sea Grant Program, and for other purposes)

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO FINDINGS.

Section 202(a)(6) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1121(a)(6)) is amended by striking the period at the end and inserting "including strong collaborations between Administration scientists and scientists at academic institutions."

SEC. 3. REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO NATIONAL SEA GRANT COLLEGE PROGRAM.

(a) QUADRENNIAL STRATEGIC PLAN.—Section 204 (c)(1) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(c)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the panel, sea grant colleges, and sea grant institutes, shall develop at least every 4 years a strategic plan that establishes priorities for the national sea grant college program, provides an appropriately balanced response to local, regional, and national needs, and is reflective of integration with the relevant portions of the strategic plans of the Department of Commerce and of the Administration.”.

(b) PROGRAM EVALUATION AND RATING.—

(1) EVALUATION AND RATING REQUIREMENT.—Section 204(d)(3)(A) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(d)(3)(A)) is amended to read as follows:

“(A)(i) evaluate the performance of the programs of sea grant colleges and sea grant institutes, using the priorities, guidelines, and qualifications established by the Secretary under subsection (c), and determine which of the programs are the best managed and carry out the highest quality research, education, extension, and training activities; and

“(ii) rate the programs according to their relative performance (as determined under clause (i)) into no less than 5 categories, with each of the 2 best-performing categories containing no more than 25 percent of the programs;”.

(2) REVIEW OF EVALUATION AND RATING PROCESS.—(A) After 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere, shall contract with the National Academy of Sciences—

(i) to review the effectiveness of the evaluation and rating system under the amendment made by paragraph (1) in determining the relative performance of programs of sea grant colleges and sea grant institutes;

(ii) to evaluate whether the sea grant programs have improved as a result of the evaluation process; and

(iii) to make appropriate recommendations to improve the overall effectiveness of the evaluation process.

(B) The National Academy of Sciences shall submit a report to the Congress on the findings and recommendations of the panel under subparagraph (A) by not later than 4 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) ALLOCATION OF FUNDING.—Section 204(d)(3)(B) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1123(d)(3)(B)) is amended by striking “and” after the semicolon at the end of clause (ii) and by adding at the end the following:

“(iv) encourage and promote coordination and cooperation between the research, education, and outreach programs of the Administration and those of academic institutions; and”.

SEC. 4. COST SHARE.

Section 205(a) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1124(a)) is amended by striking “section 204(d)(6)” and inserting “section 204(c)(4)(F)”.

SEC. 5. FELLOWSHIPS.

(a) ENSURING EQUAL ACCESS.—Section 208(a) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1127(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following: “The Secretary shall strive to ensure equal access for minority and economically disadvantaged students to the program carried out under this subsection. Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002, and every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress describing the efforts by the Secretary to ensure equal access for minority and economically disadvantaged students to the program carried out under this subsection, and the results of such efforts.”.

(b) POSTDOCTORAL FELLOWS.—Section 208(c) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1127(c)) is repealed.

SEC. 6. TERMS OF MEMBERSHIP FOR SEA GRANT REVIEW PANEL.

Section 209(c)(2) of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1128(c)(2)) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following: “The term of office of a voting member of the panel shall be 3 years for a member appointed before the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002, and 4 years for a member appointed or reappointed after the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002. The Director may extend the term of office of a voting member of the panel appointed before the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002 by up to 1 year.”.

SEC. 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 212 of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (33 U.S.C. 1131) are amended to read as follows:

“(a) AUTHORIZATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this title—

“(A) $60,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;

“(B) $75,000,000 for fiscal year 2004;

“(C) $77,500,000 for fiscal year 2005;

“(D) $80,000,000 for fiscal year 2006;

“(E) $82,500,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

“(F) $85,000,000 for fiscal year 2008.

“(2) PRIORITY ACTIVITIES.—In addition to the amounts authorized under paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2008—

“(A) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on the biology and control of zebra mussels and other important aquatic nonnative species;

“(B) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on oyster diseases, oyster restoration, and oyster-related human health risks;

“(C) $5,000,000 for competitive grants for university research on the biology, prevention, and forecasting of harmful algal blooms, including Pfiesteria piscicida; and

“(D) $3,000,000 for competitive grants for fishery extension activities conducted by sea grant colleges or sea grant institutes to enhance, and not supplant, existing core program funding.

“(b) LIMITATIONS.—

“(1) ADMINISTRATION.—There may not be used for administration of programs under this title in a fiscal year more than 5 percent of the lesser of—

“(A) the amount authorized to be appropriated under this title for the fiscal year; or

“(B) the amount appropriated under this title for the fiscal year.

“(2) USE FOR OTHER OFFICES OR PROGRAMS.—Sums appropriated under the authority of subsection (a)(2) shall not be available for administration of this title by the National Sea Grant Office, for any other Administration or department program, or for any other administrative expenses.

“(c) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—In any fiscal year in which the appropriations made under subsection (a)(1) exceed the amounts appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the purposes described in such subsection, the Secretary shall distribute any excess amounts (except amounts used for the administration of the sea grant program) to any combination of the following:

“(1) sea grant programs, according to their rating under section 204(d)(3)(A);

“(2) national strategic investments authorized under section 204(b)(4);

“(3) a college, university, institution, association, or alliance for activities that are necessary for it to be designated as a sea grant college or sea grant institute;

“(4) a sea grant college or sea grant institute designated after the date of enactment of the National Sea Grant College Program Act Amendments of 2002 but not yet evaluated under section 204(d)(3)(A).”.

SEC. 8. ANNUAL REPORT ON PROGRESS IN BECOMING DESIGNATED AS SEA GRANT COLLEGES AND SEA GRANT INSTITUTES.

Section 207 of the National Sea Grant College Program Act (16 U.S.C. 1126) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT ON PROGRESS.—

“(1) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall report annually to the Committee on Resources and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives, and to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, on efforts and progress made by colleges, universities, institutions, associations, and alliances to become designated under this section as sea grant colleges or sea grant institutes, including efforts and progress made by sea grant institutes in being designated as sea grant colleges.

“(2) TERRITORIES AND FREELY ASSOCIATED STATES.—The report shall include description of—

“(A) efforts made by colleges, universities, associations, institutions, and alliances in United States territories and freely associated States to develop the expertise necessary to be designated as a sea grant institute or sea grant college;

“(B) the administrative, technical, and financial assistance provided by the Secretary to those entities seeking to be designated; and

“(C) the additional actions or activities necessary for those entities to meet the qualifications for such designation under subsection (a)(1).”.

SEC. 9. COORDINATION.

Not later than February 15 of each year, the Under Secretary of Commerce for Oceans and Atmosphere and the Director of the National Science Foundation shall jointly submit to the Committees on Resources and Science of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a report on how the oceans and coastal research activities of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, including the Coastal Ocean Program and the National Sea Grant College Program, and of the National Science Foundation will be coordinated during the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the report is submitted. The report shall describe in detail any overlapping ocean and coastal research interests between the agencies and specify how much research interests will be pursued by the programs in a complementary manner:

The bill (H.R. 3389), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, October 11, 2002

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 11, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable DAN MILLER to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend W. Douglas Tanner, Jr., President, The Faith & Politics Institute, Washington, DC, offered the following prayer:

As a deer longs for running streams, our souls long for Thee, O God. You have sent rain to fall gently and steadily upon this city, and its streams indeed are running.

In this painfully momentous season, we dare to recall the words of the prophet Amos, when he speaks of Your desire for justice also to flow like water, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream.

Awaken us ever more fully, O Lord, to the streams of love, compassion, and courage that You continue to send as surely as the rain. Let those streams flow into us, among us and through us, that we may be the people—and the Nation—You would have us be.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, when the House adjourns today, it will adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday, October 15, 2002, for morning hour debates.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House stands adjourned until 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday next for morning hour debates.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 3 minutes a.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Tuesday, October 15, 2002, at 12:30 p.m., for morning hour debates.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

9633. A letter from the Secretary, Department of Agriculture, transmitting the annual animal welfare enforcement report for fiscal year 2001, pursuant to 7 U.S.C. 2155; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9634. A letter from the Under Secretary, Department of Defense, transmitting a FY 2002 report entitled, "Performance of Commercial Activities," pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 2461; to the Committee on Armed Services.

9635. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense, Health Affairs, Department of Defense, transmitting the Department's review on the operational use of mefloquine; to the Committee on Armed Services.

9636. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Cooperation Agency, transmitting notification concerning the Department of the Army's Proposed Letter(s) of Offer and Acceptance (LOA) to the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office in the United States (Transmittal No. 03-01), pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(b); to the Committee on International Relations.

9637. A letter from the Secretary, Federal Trade Commission, transmitting the Commission's Twenty-Fourth Annual Report to Congress pursuant to section 7A of the Clayton Act, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. 18a(j); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

9638. A letter from the Secretary, Department of Transportation, transmitting the Department's report entitled, "Local Officials' Participation in Transportation Planning and Programming," pursuant to Public Law 105-178, section 1204(i); to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. HANSEN: Committee on Resources. H.R. 2826. A bill to increase the waiver requirements for certain local matching requirements for grants provided to American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. 107-741). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

STATEMENT IN FAVOR OF H. CON.
RES. 451

SPEECH OF

HON. JUANITA MILLENDER-McDONALD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 1, 2002

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Madam Speaker, I want to speak out on behalf of H. Con. Res. 451, which would promote the teaching of U.S. history to our elementary and secondary students. As a former instructor, I know the importance of teaching students American history so that they will become informed citizens.

If we want the American public to become more enlightened and more engaged, let's start by promoting efforts to teach our young people about this country's great history, and its diversity that makes it the world leader and those nations who have contributed so greatly to our success.

APPLAUDING THE 4-H YOUTH DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

HON. JUANITA MILLENDER-McDONALD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 9, 2002

Ms. MILLER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I am here to applaud the long history of service provided by the 4-H Youth Development Program to young people all over the world. For over 100 years, 4-H has taught six million youth ages 5-19 the value of leadership, good citizenship and life skills.

In my home state of California, 4-H assists over 120,000 youth each year in urban, rural and suburban communities, and has a large volunteer network of more than 26,000 youth and adult volunteers.

Let's do all that we can to continue allotting resources to expand 4-H's positive influence on our young people nationwide.

RECOGNIZING THE ADOPTION OF THE SKI INDUSTRY CLIMATE CHANGE POLICY BY THE NA-TIONAL SKI AREAS ASSOCIATION
BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND COL-ORADO SKI COUNTRY USA

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize adoption of the Ski Industry Climate Change Policy by the National Ski Areas Association and Colorado Ski Country

USA, an organization in Colorado that represents Colorado's 25 ski and snowboard resorts. I am submitting the policy for the Record.

The climate change policy was developed over the last several months and was adopted by the National Ski Areas Association Board of Directors on September 18, 2002 under the auspices of Sustainable Slopes. This campaign has its origins in the Environmental Charter adopted in June 2000, which contains a sweeping set of voluntary principles for protecting the environment and formalizes the industry's commitment to environmental sustainability. More than 170 ski areas in 31 states, plus six resorts in Canada, have endorsed the Charter. The Colorado ski industry leads the nation in endorsing Sustainable Slopes, with all Colorado resorts except one endorsing.

Variability in climate is not good for skiers, the ski industry, or the environment. Given the ski industry's dependence on weather, climate changes that produce weather patterns of warmer temperatures or decreased snowfall could significantly impact the industry. The Union of Concerned Scientists reports that global warming may already be affecting the snow pack of the Sierra Mountains in California.

I'm pleased that the ski industry in general and Colorado Ski Country in particular has taken a leadership role in raising awareness and encouraging solutions on this important issue.

SKI INDUSTRY CLIMATE CHANGE POLICY

Ski areas across the country adopted an Environmental Charter in 2000 to address the environmental concerns of our industry. The Charter, commonly referred to as "Sustainable Slopes," identifies climate change as a potential threat to the environment and our business. Although we are not a major source of greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions, many resorts across the country already are taking steps to reduce their own, limited GHG emissions.

To collectively address the long-term challenges presented by climate change and continue our commitment to stewardship under the Sustainable Slopes program, we hereby adopt this climate change policy. Through this policy, we aim to raise awareness of the potential impacts of climate change on our weather-dependent business and the winter recreation experience; reduce our own greenhouse gas emissions; and encourage others to take action as well. We are committed to working toward solutions that will keep both the environment and economy healthy and preserve quality of life. To this end, we will take the following actions:

Educate the public and resort guests about the dependence of winter sports on natural ecosystems and the potential impacts of climate change on the winter recreation experience; educate guests on how they can help reduce GHG emissions.

Raise policy maker awareness of the dependence of winter sports on natural ecosystems and the potential impacts of climate change on the winter recreation experience.

Advocate the national reduction of GHG emissions through legislative, regulatory or voluntary measures.

Support sound, science-based solutions to climate change, including the use of renewable energy technologies.

Partner with appropriate organizations and agencies to assess opportunities to reduce resort emissions and increase energy efficiency; invest in new, more efficient products, practices and technologies; and measure our emission reductions.

75TH ANNIVERSARY OF COTTEY
COLLEGE AND THE P.E.O. SIS-TERHOOD

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, let me take this means to recognize the 75th anniversary of the forging of Cottey College in Nevada, MO, and the P.E.O. Sisterhood. Cottey College together with the P.E.O., have worked diligently together to provide higher education for women.

Cottey College was founded in 1884 by Virginia Alice Cottey Stockard who believed that women deserved the same educational opportunities as men. Late in her life, she became a member of P.E.O. and realized that the goals of her college and the P.E.O. paralleled.

Today, Cottey College is a well-established, financially stable college for women. Its mission remains true to the ideals and aspirations of Virginia Alice Cottey Stockard and those courageous P.E.O. members who voted in 1927 to accept the responsibility of owning this College.

Mr. Speaker, the P.E.O. Sisterhood and Cottey College can be proud of the 75 year history they have had together. I know the Members of the House will join me in congratulating the P.E.O. and Cottey College for 75 years of fine service.

POEMS BY GERALD GRIMM

HON. PATRICK J. TOOMEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share two patriotic poems with my colleagues entitled "A Veteran" and "Remember Me?" These poems were brought to my attention by a constituent of mine, Gerald Grimm of the Lehigh County Council of the American Legion.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

A VETERAN

What is a veteran, just look around
 Right where you've standing,
 He fought for that ground.
 A Vet is a person, who answered the call
 Who went into war, and gave it his all.
 He defended a way of life that we love,
 But much preferred peace,
 Like the way of the dove.
 He asked not the reason, as he stood in his trench
 He faltered not once, in the muck and the stench
 As soldiers in legions, they stood side by side,
 They knew some would fall, as many more died.
 They whispered their prayers, in a helmet of sweat, Shells bursting above, wouldn't let them forget.
 Tears in their eyes, as their friend lays so still,
 One hour ago, he was king of the hill.
 Many more wounded, spilling their life,
 When will it end, this battle of strife?
 For many, the battles, never will end,
 Now they're civilians, and find they can't blend.
 Some are disabled, and some are disturbed, After coming from hell, they find they've been curbed.

A veteran is special, to be not denied,
 He put it up front, he need never hide.
 Now is the time, to honor our vets,
 Remember their pain, don't ever forget.
 Remember them now, and give them their due,
 Stand by their side, cause they did it for you.

REMEMBER ME

Some people call me Old Glory, others call me the Star Spangled Banner, but whatever they call me, I am your Flag of the United States of America. Something has been bothering me, so I thought I might talk it over with you.

I remember some time ago people lined up on both sides of the street to watch the parade and naturally, I was leading every parade, proudly waving in the breeze.
 When your daddy saw me coming, he immediately removed his hat and placed it over his heart . . . remember? And you, I remember you. Standing there as straight as a soldier. You didn't have a hat but you were giving the right salute.
 Remember your little sister? Not to be outdone, she was saluting the same as you, with her right hand over her heart .
 . . remember?

What happened? I'm still the same old flag.
 Oh, I have a few more stars since you were a boy. A lot more blood has been shed since those parades of long ago.

But now I don't feel as proud as I used to be.
 When I come down the street, you just stand there with your hands in your pockets and I may get a small glance, then you look away. I see the children running around and shouting . . . they don't seem to know who I am . . . I saw one man take off his hat and then look around. He didn't see anybody else with theirs off so he quickly put his hat back on.

Is it a sin to be patriotic any more? Have you forgotten what I stand for and where I've been . . . Anzio, Korea, Guadalcanal, and Vietnam. Take a look at the Memorial Honor Rolls sometime, of those who never came back, to keep this Republic free . . . One Nation Under God . . . When you salute me, you are actually saluting them.

Well, it won't be long until I'll be coming down your street again. So, when you see me, stand straight, place your right hand over your heart . . . and I'll salute you, by waving back and I'll know that YOU REMEMBERED!!!

I want to thank Mr. Grimm for these poems and commend him for his dedication to God and country. Thank you.

IN HONOR OF MARÍA PESTANA

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor María Pestana for thirty years of service to Hudson United Bank (HUD) and communities throughout New Jersey. The Federation of Cuban Musicians is honoring
 Mrs. Pestana for her dedication to Hudson United Bank and the Hispanic community on Saturday, October 12, 2002, at Las Palmas
 Restaurant in West New York, New Jersey.

In 1957, as a young adult, Mrs. Pestana arrived in the United States from Cuba, initially devoting her time to the care of her family. As her children grew, Mrs. Pestana began a career at Hudson United Bank. She started at an entry-level position, but her enthusiasm and hard work quickly propelled her up the corporate ladder. Today, she is the well-regarded Executive Vice President of HUD and the General Manager of the Main Office.

For over thirty years, she has been a devoted employee, not only providing outstanding customer service, but also helping HUD become a fundamental fixture of the community. Her ability to rise to the occasion and attend to the needs of her customers and colleagues has gained her much respect and admiration.

Mrs. Pestana, and her husband, Francisco, have four children, Frank, Mary, Georgia and Jackie.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring María Pestana for her outstanding leadership and countless accomplishments.
 She is an important and integral part of the Hispanic community, and we are proud of her dedication and hard work on behalf of all New Jerseyans.

SENATE SHOULD ACT ON HOME-LAND SECURITY LEGISLATION

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the House has acted on the new Department of Homeland Security legislation; the Senate has not.

This bipartisan legislation will enable our government to coordinate its intelligence efforts and strengthen its defenses against terrorism.

Also, H.R. 3482, the Cybercrime Enhancement Act that I introduced, has been included as an amendment to the Senate homeland security legislation. H.R. 3482 passed the House by a vote of 385-3 and the Senate by unanimous consent.

Cyber terrorists do not have to sneak into our borders, they only have to hit a computer key to attack our homeland. We must improve our nation's cyber-security and strengthen our criminal laws to prevent, deter and respond to cyber attacks that could disable the economy or endanger lives.

It is urgent that the Senate act on the Homeland Security legislation.

RECOGNIZING THE 100TH BIRTH-DAY OF JESSIE FULLERTON BARRETT

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Jessie Barrett, the grandmother of my staff member Jennifer Barrett, on Jessie's 100th birthday. Jessie will turn 100 on November 5th. Jennifer's father (also Jessie's son) Peter came up with a few reflections on Jessie's life that I would like to submit for the RECORD. The way Jennifer describes her grandmother, it seems clear that Jessie is a strong woman who played a vital role in the family's development and progress over the years, through the hard times as well as the good times. I congratulate her on living such a full life and for the inspiration she has always been to her family and to everyone who has known her.

COMMENTS AND REFLECTIONS BY THE BARRETT FAMILY

Jessie was raised in Plainfield, New Jersey, where her father ran a business, the Watchung Stone Company. Neither of her parents attended college, but both believed in the importance of education. Jessie recalls the excitement in her town when Andrew Carnegie donated money for a library, and she also recalls that she and her brothers looked forward each week to spending most of Saturday in the library. Hard work in their studies and the family attitude about the importance of education determined her family's life paths. With a background of university studies and law school, her brother became President and CEO of Florida Power & Light Corporation, while Jessie gained teaching skills at Wheelock College in Boston. After meeting a special young man at Harvard, Hollis Barrett, she and her new husband set out for the wilds of California, where Hollis built a successful life as a real estate broker.

Jessie seems to have passed on her interest in teaching to her family; her daughter, Martha, taught students at both the elementary and high school levels, while her son, Peter, pursued a career in academic medicine at UCLA, which involved him in the training of medical students and internal medicine residents. Jessie has also taken great pride in the accomplishments of her five grandchildren. Following in his father's footsteps,

John is a physician; Anna, the youngest, is a project manager for a non-profit organization involved in health care access; and Jennifer is Rep. MARK UDALL's Deputy Legislative Director. Jessie's Texas granddaughters, Barbara and Nancy, are pursuing both careers and motherhood, and Jessie is now a great-grandmother for the two youngest members of the family, Audrey and Grace.

A few more words about Jessie will allow the reader to know something about her as a person, and perhaps to understand how she has been able to enjoy life for several decades longer than many of her friends. If only one word could be used to describe her, it would be "optimist." That point of view was reflected in her daily approach to life as well as in her general philosophy. Her optimism even extended to thunder storms, as she pointed out that "... if you can see enough blue sky to make a sailor a pair of pants, then you know the storm is clearing up." Consistent with her philosophy, no matter how hard it was raining, she was always able to see a patch of blue sky, even when no one else could see it. Importantly, she has shared this philosophy with the children she taught in school, and with her own family.

Jessie's life spanned most of the twentieth century. She saw both Halley's Comet and Mark Twain in 1910, waved goodbye to relatives as they sailed for France in World War I, manned a coastal watch tower in World War II, and watched Americans walk on the moon. The Great Depression had a great impact on the family and on their views about investments and savings.

She has dedicated her life to her family, and imbued them with a strong devotion to each other, a love of learning and education, and a strong sense of patriotism. And it should be noted that she loves all her grandchildren, even though some of them have joined the Democratic Party.

Jessie continues to enjoy life and looks forward to the family celebration on November 5th. The family will also remember to vote on that date, but the most important event of the day for them will be "Nana Jessie's" 100th birthday.

STATEMENT ON SECURING AMERICA'S FUTURE ENERGY ACT

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on September 19, 2002, I submitted a statement during the meeting of conferees for H.R. 4, the Securing America's Future Energy Act. During this session, House conferees approved a burdensome electricity title that could do irreparable harm to how rural Missourians receive power. Because this portion of the energy bill could have a significantly negative impact on rural America, let me take this means to share my statement with all members of the U.S. House of Representatives. Set forth text as follows:

I want to thank the leaders of the energy bill conference for holding this important meeting today. Although I have been appointed a conferee to this energy legislation because of its provisions related to the military, I come before you today to share my support for rural electric cooperatives and to express profound concerns about the possible inclusion of an onerous electricity title in the final energy bill.

Since the beginning months of the 107th Congress, Members from the House and Senate in both political parties have worked to draft energy legislation that is good for our Nation. In 2000, both presidential candidates developed plans for our future energy needs, and President Bush asked Congress to craft comprehensive energy policy legislation. We have done that. Each chamber has approved two distinct versions of an energy bill, and there are good and bad aspects to each of them. That is why we are here today and have been meeting in conference to iron out the differences between our respective bills.

As someone who is privileged to represent rural Missouri in the United States Congress, I am particularly mindful of rural American interests, including the electric cooperatives that power nearly all of the Fourth Congressional District. The version of the energy bill approved by the Senate includes a title dedicated to electricity. The Senate electricity provisions, which are supported by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, recognize the unique role electric cooperatives play in providing electric power to folks who live throughout the countryside.

The House-passed version of the energy bill does not include an electricity title. In fact, the House has been unable to develop a sufficient consensus to approve an electric utility restructuring bill during the 107th Congress. Such a measure failed to pass the Energy and Air Quality Subcommittee or the Energy and Commerce Committee. That is a good thing for rural electricity consumers because the House bill would not acknowledge the special private business characteristics and the unique demographics of electric cooperatives and their customers.

It has come to my attention that during the last meeting of the energy bill conference, members discussed several aspects of the House electricity reform bill, I am concerned that some members who have been long-time advocates of stringent House electricity legislation are attempting to use this conference committee to advocate their bill as the "House position" on electricity, even though the House has repeatedly been unable to find general agreement on this matter. Such action would be devastating to electric cooperatives and to the customers they serve.

Electric cooperatives have a long and distinguished history in our country. They provide private ownership to consumers of their electric utility and operate at cost. This type of ownership has been very successful in rural Missouri where population densities and revenues are low. It has also immunized electric cooperatives from the price gouging, market manipulation, and corporate malfeasance activities that have emerged in the electricity industry over the past year.

Any electricity provision approved by the conferees must carefully address the unique interests of rural America. If conferees proceed with approving the House Energy and Commerce Committee's electricity restructuring proposal as part of this energy bill, it will cause great heartburn for those of us who represent rural America. Although I have not made a determination on how I will vote on a final energy work product, the inclusion of this burdensome provision will make me think twice about supporting it. More importantly, it will lead to higher rates for rural Americans who rely on electric cooperatives for their energy needs.

LEHIGH VALLEY HERO—GRACE
HART O'BOYLE

HON. PATRICK J. TOOMEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to share my Report from Pennsylvania for my colleagues and the American people.

All across Pennsylvania's 15th Congressional District there are some amazing people who do good things to make our communities a better place. These are individuals of all ages who truly make a difference and help others. I like to call these individuals Lehigh Valley Heroes for their good deeds and efforts.

Today, I would like to recognize Mrs. Grace Hart O'Boyle of Bethlehem. Mrs. O'Boyle is a prime example of someone who has devoted her life to the betterment of our communities.

Mrs. O'Boyle served the Bethlehem City Schools as a teacher at Northeast Junior High and was an active participant in the city's summer school program for many decades. Despite commitments to Brownie troops and other youth organizations, Mrs. O'Boyle found time to raise a family and her strong commitment to education and the community is reflected in her own children's education-based careers.

While most would relax in their retirement, Mrs. O'Boyle saw her retirement only as an opportunity to help her community. She continued to substitute teach and was a member of Bethlehem's Professional Woman's Association, American Association of University Women, and served with various other Organizations.

Mrs. O'Boyle is marked by her humbleness and devotion, which she exhibited on her 80th birthday. Instead of accepting the flowers and gifts that usually mark such an occasion, Mrs. O'Boyle established a Scholarship fund to help bright, dedicated students at her local parish school.

Mrs. O'Boyle stands out as an example of the effect one person can have upon their community and for this she is a Lehigh Valley Hero in my book.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my Report from Pennsylvania.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JOSEPH RAFFERTY

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the accomplishments of my friend and brother in the labor movement, Mr. Joseph Rafferty. Mr. Rafferty has been honored by our fellow Philadelphians by receiving the 2002 Laborers' Local Union 332 Outstanding Labor Leader Award. He has earned that honor by providing guidance and direction to Steamfitters' Local 420, the Philadelphia Building and Construction Trade Council as well as other trade councils, the Philadelphia

AFL-CIO, and the entire Pennsylvania community.

In 1964, Mr. Rafferty entered Steamfitters' Local 420 for a five-year apprentice program. He went on to serve as the Assistant Business Manager, Business Agent, and is now the elected Business Manager. Under Mr. Rafferty's leadership, Local 420 actively aides the community by repairing and replacing piping, boilers, and refrigeration units for non-profit agencies. Local 420 has helped organizations such as the Ronald McDonald House, the Variety Club Camp, and the Scanlon Playground Ice Skating Rink.

Married to Frances, Joe's family includes his son Tom, his daughter Michele Quinn and his stepdaughters Eleanor and Aimee Troise. Mr. and Mrs. Rafferty have four grandchildren: Peter, Jake, Casey Leigh, and Chelsea. I am quite sure Joe's entire family is very proud of his numerous accomplishments.

It is a privilege to recognize a person whose leadership and commitment to community has enriched the lives of countless individuals. I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Mr. Rafferty for his lifetime of service and dedication to Pennsylvania's First Congressional District.

IN HONOR OF THE STATEWIDE HISPANIC CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF NEW JERSEY

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Statewide Hispanic Chamber of Commerce of New Jersey (SHCC), an organization whose efforts have contributed to the increased prosperity and achievement of Hispanics throughout the State. New Jersey's Hispanic Chamber of Commerce will be holding its 12th Annual Convention Expo and Career Fair at the Newark Airport Marriott in Newark, New Jersey, on October 11, 2002.

The Hispanic market represents the fastest growing demographic sector in the United States. The SHCC has contributed to this growth by forming new partnerships in Latin America, bringing products and jobs back to New Jersey, and creating further economic development and business opportunities throughout our region.

The general business community, government agencies and Hispanic entrepreneurs have all benefited from the many innovative events and networking opportunities of the SHCC.

At the Career Fair, the SHCC provides participating organizations with the chance to meet college students, professionals, and inner city residents to identify them for internships, full-time jobs, and career opportunities. SHCC considers employment to be an important factor in economic development of our communities and acts as a link between employers and career seekers.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the Statewide Hispanic Chamber of Commerce of New Jersey for its contributions to the economic development and empowerment of the Hispanic community throughout New Jersey.

INTRODUCTION OF THE PRIVATE PARTY JUDICIAL FAIRNESS ACT

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation to help private parties seek justice against the Federal Government. The Private Party Judicial Fairness Act allows for pre-judgment interest to accrue in cases where it is now prohibited. Interest will be paid from the date the action is filed in the United States Court of Federal Claims.

Upon receipt of a judgment against the United States, this legislation will allow private parties to receive the proper proceeds. It also will create an incentive for the government to process these suits at a reasonable pace.

Under current law, a narrow group of suits against the United States are ineligible for pre-judgment interest.

The lack of pre-judgment interest available in these cases encourages government lawyers to delay the ultimate resolution of the cases. Some of these cases have been pending before the Court for ten or more years. And even if the private parties win their cases and are awarded judgments, it is usually far less than what they deserve.

It is time to aid this small class of claimants and create an incentive for the prompt administration of justice.

A PROCLAMATION RECOGNIZING THE RETIREMENT OF TECHNICAL SERGEANT ALAN MONTE DE RAMOS

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, whereas, TSgt Alan Monte de Ramos is retiring from the United States Air Force after 21 years of service; and

Whereas, TSgt Alan Monte de Ramos married Cheryl in 1989 and they have a daughter, Rachel and a son Kyle; and

Whereas, TSgt Alan Monte de Ramos has received many recognitions including, the Air Force Commendation Medal First Oak Leaf Cluster and the Air Force Achievement Medal; and

Whereas, TSgt Alan Monte de Ramos is to be commended for serving his country with professionalism, dedication, passion, and integrity;

Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in celebrating TSgt Alan Monte de Ramos' retirement from the United States Air Force.

RECOGNIZING DAVID GREEN, JR., FOR HIS FUNDRAISING BIKE RIDE ACROSS AMERICA

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the selfless deeds of David Green, Jr., of Macon, GA. During this past summer, David spent six weeks riding his bicycle across our great nation from Seattle, Washington to Savannah, Georgia in order to raise money for the Methodist Home for Children and Youth's new Intergenerational Activity Center in Macon, GA.

With today's endless media stories depicting our nation's youth in a negative light, it is refreshing to see the giving attitude of this young man. To date, David has raised over $63,000 in gifts and pledges toward the new "Teen Center." The mission of the Methodist Home for Children and Youth is to provide a redemptive ministry in South Georgia of healing and nurturing to children, youth and their families in the most appropriate setting, enabling them to grow and become more productive in society. His selfless act will help provide opportunities for young individuals for many years to come.

David's record of community service is well established. His years of giving back include work with the Salvation Army, Habitat for Humanity, as well as the Big Brothers Big Sisters program. While in high school, David also served as a member of Students Against Drunk Driving as well as a member of Teen Advisors, pledging each year not to drink alcohol or smoke. A distinguished Boy Scout, he obtained scouting's highest honor, the rank of eagle. He has recently graduated from Stratford Academy in Macon, GA, and is currently attending the University of the South in Seawane, Tennessee, where he is a member of the Boys Varsity Soccer Team.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that David Green, Jr., will continue his service to others as he moves toward a higher education. It is comforting to know that tomorrow's leaders are already positively affecting our nation. I am truly proud to represent such an individual from the eighth district of Georgia. Today it is my pleasure to commend David for his ongoing efforts to better society.

TRIBUTE TO MR. BOUIE FISHER

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the accomplishments of Mr. Bouie Fisher, recipient of the 2002 Laborers' Local Union 332 Outstanding Community Leader Award. It is a privilege to recognize a person whose commitment to family and community has enriched the lives of countless individuals.

Mr. Fisher received his first union work permit with Laborers' Local #332 when he began his construction career at the age of 17 in 1944. In both construction and amateur boxing, Mr. Fisher became a mentor and supporter of his coworkers. His success in professional boxing and in labor was propelled by the belief that any good fighter is only as good as the people around him and that a strong team can make the difference between success and failure. Even after leaving the labor field, Bouie Fisher demonstrated loyalty to Local #332 by helping on picket lines and remaining available to assist the labor movement.

Mr. Fisher built a record of 13–5 fighting. The strength and support he received and imparted came largely from his wife of 55 years, Peggy, five daughters, three sons, and twelve grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, Bouie Fisher is a model citizen. I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Mr. Fisher for his lifetime of service and dedication to Laborers' Local #332 and Pennsylvania's First Congressional District.

HONORING RICHARD A. BOIARDO,
M.D.

HON. MICHAEL FERGUSON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Richard A. Boiardo, for his dedicated efforts in service to New Jersey through his work in the medical field. Dr. Boiardo has been a practicing orthopedic surgeon in New Jersey since 1986.

Dr. Boiardo graduated Phi Beta Kappa and summa cum laude from Georgetown University in 1974. He went on to study medicine at the New York Medical College in Valhalla, New York, and completed his residency in orthopedic surgery at Lenox Hill Hospital in New York City.

Currently, Dr. Boiardo serves as Chief of the Orthopedic Department at Saint Mary's Hospital, in Hoboken, New Jersey, and is on the orthopedic medical staff at several other hospitals in Passaic and Newark. He is a member of the Essex County Medical Society and the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons. And he is also the team surgeon for the Newark Bears, a minor league baseball team.

The Columbian Foundation, a non-profit organization of business and professional men of Italian descent, will recognize Dr. Boiardo with a Humanitarian and Achievement Award on October 12.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to honor Dr. Boiardo today for his good works and providing New Jersey with his talent and service.

U.S.-IRELAND BUSINESS SUMMIT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 9, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to join with my colleagues in voting unanimously on September 10, 2002, to pass H. Res. 513, a bipartisan recognition of the historical significance and timeliness of the 3-day U.S.-Ireland Business Summit. This gathering was held September 4–6, 2002 at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center in Washington, DC.

It was a great pleasure for me to participate in this first-ever Summit which was organized and chaired by a distinguished Irish-American leader, Susan Ann Davis. As members of this institution with an interest in the Irish isle know, Susan Davis is a great advocate for the peace process and for strengthening the bonds of friendship between the U.S. and the people of the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland. In addition to founding Susan Davis International, one of Washington, DC's most respected public affairs and communications firms, Susan serves as the President of the National Assembly of Irish American Republicans.

The U.S.-Ireland Business Summit brought together business leaders from the Republic of Ireland, Northern Ireland and the United States to discuss the importance and the advancement of our bilateral commercial ties across the Atlantic. The special relationship which America enjoys with Ireland is reflected in the increased trade between our two nations over the past decade. This has produced enormous benefits both for Ireland as well as for the United States, and continues to underscore our common values, our traditions and our commitment to free trade. Moreover, expanding international commercial links has underscored and reinforced the benefits of peace in Northern Ireland at a critical time.

It is clear that an environment free of violence and fear is vital to fostering a prosperous business community. Though, it is clear that the hard-won peace in Northern Ireland still remains fragile as we again see strains and developments that threaten the power sharing arrangement.

In fact, violence we saw this last summer in the interface areas of Northern Ireland demonstrates that there is much work to be done. Fortunately, as reflected by the coverage in the media, the U.S.-Ireland Business Summit has created a new momentum for peace and a sense of hope and optimism. I want to commend President Bush for his outlining the bold vision for strengthening the peace process that the Summit embodies and for ensuring that the Summit received strong support from across his Administration. In fact, a key to the Summit's success—and the success of initiatives announced and launched at its conclusion—were a result of the personal involvement and efforts of the Secretary of State, Mr. Powell, Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Evans, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Mr. Thompson, and the President's key advisor on the Irish peace process, Ambassador Richard Haass.

I look forward to continuing to work with the President, my colleagues, Susan Ann Davis and other concerned Irish-Americans in the private sector to complete the work begun at the U.S.-Ireland Business Summit.

RECOGNIZING THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE CU SOLAR DECATHLON TEAM

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of a talented group of students from the University of Colorado who designed and built the winning entry at the Department of Energy's Solar Decathlon. I am submitting for the RECORD a recent article from the Daily Camera describing the team's achievement.

The Solar Decathlon is a competition organized by the Department of Energy that gives college students an opportunity to demonstrate practical uses of solar power. This October, 14 university teams from around the country competed in the first-ever Solar Decathlon to build the most energy-efficient, solar-powered house. Each team was required to use solar energy to power the entire house, and was judged on how well its house was able to produce energy for heating, cooling, hot water, lighting, appliances, computers, and charging an electric car. The houses were also critiqued on their overall aesthetic design.

The students from the University of Colorado designed a building that demonstrates how clean, renewable, solar energy can practically and efficiently power a home. They focused on making the design of the house attractive and affordable to show that homeowners don't have to compromise style and convenience to live in a sustainable and environmentally friendly way.

These enterprising students from the University of Colorado had a challenge—to take advanced architectural and engineering concepts, put them together in a design, and build a house that could be a model of our energy future. These students met that challenge and met it better than any of the other teams. I'm proud of these students and I'm proud that the University of Colorado produced such a talented team. Most of all, I am proud to represent these young people who are working so hard to make our way of life a sustainable one.

CU WINS CONTEST FOR SOLAR HOUSE DESIGN

BUILDERS TRIUMPH OVER 13 OTHER COLLEGE TEAMS

(By Ryan Alessi)

WASHINGTON.—The bright sunny October morning proved an appropriate backdrop Saturday for the 14 Solar Decathlon teams to finish the last few tasks of the weeklong competition.

The 14 homes built on the National Mall by college teams from around the country and Puerto Rico had been probed, monitored, inspected and judged since last weekend. Architects and U.S. Department of Energy officials rated the teams in 10 categories ranging from the appearance of the homes to how much energy they saved. And of course, everything from the fridge to their electric buggy-mobles had to be powered by sunlight.

By Saturday morning, the University of Colorado sat atop the standings as the team to beat. Then, shortly after noon, video cameras, photographers and a crowd began gathering outside the CU team's house, leaving little doubt that they had, in fact, won.

At a brief ceremony, David Garman, assistant energy secretary for energy efficiency and renewable energy, presented a polished steel trophy to Michael Brandemuehl, the CU team's adviser and professor of civil, environmental and architectural engineering.

The University of Virginia, which started the day in third place, passed Auburn University for second place. "We were pretty confident," said Mike Renner, CU's engineering design leader. "All the other teams had pretty much decided they were going for second."

The judges scored the CU house among the top five in all the design-based categories. And the engineering spoke for itself as the team received the best marks in the competition for the amount of electricity it generated and how efficiently the home used the power.

"It's a well-oiled machine because of the team's all-around planning," said Sheila Hayter, one of the scoring officials from the National Renewable Energy Laboratory in Golden. She said the team's use of recycled materials also boosted the team's scores. "They put together a very environmentally conscious house." That also caught the attention of many of the estimated 75,000 visitors who have streamed through the solar village.

"I loved their efficient use of space and their overall design," said Elizabeth Ridgeway, visiting Washington from North Hollywood, Calif. She voted for CU's house in a separate People's Choice competition whose winner will be announced today. "And they used a lot of interesting materials," said Bill Lyon, also from Los Angeles. "I really liked to see so many students focusing on the environment."

After the Energy Department declared CU the winner, other onlookers couldn't wait to see the house, so a group rushed up to the porch and into the foyer before team members could stop them.

"Geez, they're practically breaking the doors down," Renner said. "Good thing we don't have any goal posts."

Team members said that type of public response has been the real trophy that they can take away from the competition, especially because this home was their second design. They opted to scrap their original design in January and start over.

The public response "was satisfying for us as individuals because the reason we changed our design was because we didn't agree that it was the direction we should go," said Adam Jackaway, a graduate student in charge of the home's lighting and the passive solar design. "And the direction we should go is targeting the homeowners who are looking for something right now that conforms to their aesthetic taste and what they can afford and what is easy to operate."

Jackaway said he wants to challenge the Department of Energy to hold this kind of a competition not only for college students, but for home builders, car manufacturers and energy companies, to see who can build the most self-sufficient neighborhoods, the most efficient vehicles and the cleanest energy.

The CU home—which cost about $200,000 for materials, construction and transportation to Washington—will return to campus for about a year. Then, team members say, they plan to sell the 800-square-foot house to make up some of the costs.

As for the competition, Richard King, the Solar Decathlon's founder and director, said the Department of Energy will begin focusing on the next decathlon for fall 2004.

He said future teams probably will study how the CU team wove engineering and architecture together to build a winning design.

Teams that didn't properly balance the two quickly fell from the top five. The University of Maryland, a team of all engineering students, built a plain, white, box-like house that "worked like a tank," King said. It scored high in engineering but low in design.

The Carnegie Mellon team of all design students had large windows, open ventilation systems and tons of recycled materials. "It looks great, but they couldn't get it to work," King said.

"So now the engineers will go back and say, 'Hey, we need to get some architects.' And the architects will go back and say, 'We need engineers,'" he said. "That's how it works in real life."

The team from CU used everything from compressed sunflower board to reclaimed bleacher seats for cabinet facing. Other "green" materials used included soy adhesives in the countertops and bamboo flooring.

To help make the home more energy-efficient, the team installed thermally insulated blinds and limited the highest ceiling to 18 feet.

About 100 students and faculty from engineering, architecture and design programs at CU have worked on the project for the past two years, said Matthew Henry, the team's construction manager and design leader.

Henry, 28, graduated from CU last spring with a degree in environmental design, but he said the project meant so much to him that he came back to help with the competition.

"The prize is going to be someone coming up and saying I want to build a whole community of these types of houses, I want to build better," he said.

For more information on the CU team's project, visit solar.colorado.edu.

BERNARD E. BEIDEL, DIRECTOR
OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES' OFFICE OF EMPLOYEE ASSISTANCE, HONORED
AS 2002 MEMBER OF THE YEAR

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, each year, the Employee Assistance Professionals Association (EAPA) selects one person who has consistently demonstrated outstanding service throughout their professional career in the field of employee assistance. It is with great honor that I am able to say that this year's recipient of the "2002 EAPA Member of the Year" award goes to one of our own, Bernard E. Beidel, Director of the House Office of Employee Assistance. Bern is being recognized for his commitment to the employee assistance field and the leadership he demonstrated most recently by providing assistance and support to the leaders of the House of Representatives, their staff, and their families following the difficult events of September 11th, 2001, and the House building evacuations due to anthrax.

When the House first implemented the Office of Employee Assistance in 1991, Bern was selected to head the program. Through his years with the House, he has helped many House employees, and managers, be at their best; both on the job and off. He has helped us expand this umbrella of care to also serve other employees of the House community to include the employees of the U.S. Capitol Police and the Congressional Budget Office and to guide us to a healthier workplace.

Bern came to the House with over fifteen years of experience in employee assistance and has continued to prove himself as a leader in the field. He has authored a number of book chapters and articles on various issues and best practices in the EA field and has been a presenter and guest faculty member at numerous EA institutes. His commitment to the field is evident in his professional work as well as his willingness to serve as a Chair for a wide variety of EAP organizations and task forces, including the committee that rewrote the professional standards for the employee assistance field. Last year, under his leadership, the House Office of Employee Assistance was awarded the EAP Digest/Employee Assistance Professionals Association's "2001 Quality Award for EAP Excellence."

On behalf of the U.S. House of Representatives, I join his staff at the employee assistance office; his wife, Donna; and daughters, Cindy and Jessica in recognizing Bern for this outstanding and well-deserved award, and, for his ongoing caring, commitment, and dedication to the House and the people who serve here. Thank you Bern, and keep up the great work!

TRIBUTE TO DON SCHNEIDER

HON. THOMAS E. PETRI

OF WISCONSIN

HON. MARK GREEN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, we want to pay tribute today to Don Schneider, who has recently assumed the position of Chairman of the Board of Schneider National Inc., based in Green Bay, Wisconsin. Don becomes Chairman after serving as President and CEO of the company since 1974.

Don is one of the most innovative and creative businessmen we know—not only in the State of Wisconsin, but in the entire country. Upon meeting Don, one is immediately struck by his tremendous energy, drive and the commitment he has for his company and for the transportation and logistics business. Indeed, that is why he has been so successful. The enjoyment he takes in tackling problems and finding solutions is infectious and motivates all those around him. He is a forward-thinker who literally has revolutionized the transportation industry. For example, Don has been a leader in the use of technology, and his company was the first to adopt satellite-based communications and positioning in its trucks—which many years later is now considered standard in the transportation industry.

The Transportation and Infrastructure Committee of the House has called on Don several times to present testimony regarding emerging infrastructure and transportation issues. His presentations on the role of a well-performing transportation network in spurring economic growth and of reducing logistic costs—which can be as much as 11 percent of product costs—for greater product supply chain efficiency has been critical to the understanding of the Committee and the Congress as we consider related legislation.

Schneider National was founded by Don's father back in 1935. During his high school years, Don worked as a mechanic's helper and then a driver, which he continued to do while attending college. In 1961, he joined the company as a manager and succeeded his father as President and CEO in 1974. During his years at the helm of the company, he has built it into a $2.4 billion business that is now the largest truckload carrier in the country. In 1993, Don founded Schneider Logistics as a wholly owned subsidiary. Again, with its focus on technology, Schneider Logistics guides its Fortune 1000 customers in efficiently managing and moving their goods.

Don has always been charitable with his time out of the office and is actively involved in a number of organizations. He is Chairman of the Business Advisory Committee for Northwestern University's Transportation Center and is a member of the Advisory Board for the Kellogg Graduate School of Management. Don also is a member of the board and executive committee of the Green Bay Packers football team and a former director of the Federal Reserve Board.

It is heartening these days to see a businessman who is humble, who treats his employees with respect, and who truly believes in the value of his work. The accolades and awards he has received as an outstanding entrepreneur are too numerous to mention.

So we, too, want to recognize Don and his accomplishments, and wish him all the best in this new phase of his life. We have no doubt that he will continue to make valuable contributions to our community and to the transportation industry.

HONORING MIAMI-DADE FIREFIGHTER LINDA HERNANDEZ

HON. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the lives of America's fallen heroes. This past weekend, Washington, D.C. was the host of this year's National Fallen Firefighters Memorial Ceremony. Following the attacks of September 11, 2001, this year's ceremony held a higher importance as it honored the 343 brave men and women firefighters who died in the terrorist attacks over a year ago. The courage shown by these firefighters embodies the values that we as a society find all too often in our heroes. While these men and women will always be remembered, we must not forget the many other American firefighters who died in the line of duty over the past year.

One such person is Linda Hernandez, a Miami-Dade County firefighter who died September 18, 2001. While attending the firefighting college in Miami, she strived to excel in her duties. While she impressed the other trainees and instructors, Mrs. Hernandez earned the respect of her colleagues when she routinely helped other women through the rigorous physical and mental tests. Mary Giles, a friend of Linda's and a fellow Miami firefighter summed her feelings in the following words. "There were times when we wanted to throw in the towel. But Linda was always there for us. And we became determined that nothing would beat us."

Mrs. Hernandez's life was tragically cut short, just one week after the horrible terrorist attacks on America. Her health problem began on March 28, 1999. In her capacity as a Miami-Dade County firefighter, Mrs. Hernandez had become an expert using the K-12, which is a special saw used to ventilate buildings during a fire. On March 28, 1999, she was using the machinery she had used so many times before when she was enveloped in smoke and left without the use of her oxygen tank. That day she was treated for smoke inhalation and lung damage and given medication to combat the damage. Unfortunately, the medication had the opposite effect, destroying her liver, and necessitating a transplant in June of 2000. However, after a year, her body rejected the transplant and sadly Mrs. Hernandez died of her illness.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Hernandez is one of 446 brave firefighters who died while protecting our families and communities this past year. While we have had time since September 11, 2001 to realize the importance of public servants and the outstanding jobs they often perform, we sometimes forget that these men and women risk their lives every day to make sure we are safe. Mrs. Hernandez left behind her husband, Miami-Dade police Sergeant Paul Hernandez, and four children. While we join to mourn their loss, we must rejoice in the positive impact that Miami-Dade firefighter Linda Hernandez had on the Miami-Dade community.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MARY BONO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mrs. BONO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to clarify that had I not been unavoidably detained yesterday, October 9, 2002, I would have voted "aye" on the following rollcall votes: rollcall No. 448, rollcall No. 449, rollcall No. 450, and rollcall No. 451.

TRIBUTE TO FRED BAKI

HON. CLIFF STEARNS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call my colleagues attention to a remarkable constituent of mine. He is an immigrant from Turkey, who, forty years ago, came to the U.S., became a naturalized citizen and spent many years working in the import/export business. He retired in Florida and now resides in the 6th district. He is one of the Points of Light appointees by President Bush, Senior. His name is Fred Baki.

After retirement, Fred formed a not-for-profit organization to teach adults reading, writing and arithmetic. Since 1989, he and his thirty-three volunteers have been serving U.S. citizens in the educational field.

Several years ago, he and the volunteers developed a system by which long distance instruction could be provided over the telephone. This unusual teaching system is offered to all citizens, wherever they may reside, free of charge.

Three telephone lines are open twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year, including weekends and holidays. Now named Cottage Education Corporation, the effort is offering its services to public schools at no cost to the school system.

I think Mr. Baki's long distance teaching and tutoring system is worthy of exploration to be implemented on a larger scale. Should this program prove valuable, it could possibly be implemented throughout the country.

The system includes ten disciplines including addition, subtraction, multiplication, division, science, civics, history, geography and biology. It contains a database with one thousand questions and answers. All of the subjects are presently taught in our public schools from the grade school to high school.

HONORING COMMANDER ROBERT
R. DAVIS

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, our country has lost a great American. My good friend, retired U.S. Navy Commander Robert R. Davis, passed away on Oct. 1, 2002, and he will be greatly missed by all who knew him.

It was very much a privilege for me to have known Commander Davis for many years. I had the privilege of being with him on several special occasions including the Georgia Pearl Harbor Survivors Association on December 7, 2001 when he kindly asked me to address the survivors on the 60th anniversary of the infamous attacks on our country.

Then on July 19, 2002, I was so proud to have Commander Davis as my special guest when Vice President DICK CHENEY came to Georgia.

The last time I saw Commander Davis was on September 7 of this year when he and his son Jim were hunting in Georgia on the opening day of dove season. On many other memorable occasions he and I were together as friends. He loved his country and strongly supported its military. I always appreciated his wise counsel on defense and other issues.

Robert Roscoe Davis was born on December 16, 1914, in Jacksonville, in Telfair County, Georgia. He joined the United States Navy at age 17, enlisting as a seaman, and made the Navy his career for 28 years. On December 7, 1941, Bob Davis was assigned to the Minesweeper U.S.S. Ogloia at Pearl Harbor. He was not aboard when the Japanese attack came and the ship was sunk, but later put on a diving suit and went down to try to raise it. He was later commissioned as an officer, rose to the rank of Commander, and was the commanding officer of the USS Washoe County, LST 1165. He had assignments all over the world and was commander of the Naval Reserve Training Center on Riverside Drive in Macon when he retired.

Upon his retirement from the United States Navy Commander Davis entered the real estate business and was active in the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association, the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 658, and the Macon Exchange Club. His friends and family used the term "Commander" to respectfully address him for the rest of his life.

On Saturday, October 5, 2002, Commander Davis was given a distinguished funeral and a graveside ceremony at Riverside Cemetery in Macon, Georgia, with military honors including a Navy Honor Guard, bugler, and bagpipe player.

Mr. Speaker, my wife Julianne and I express our sadness over the passing of Commander Robert Davis and we send our sincere condolences and best wishes to his loyal family. He was a great American and he will be missed so very much. I think it is most appropriate that I close this tribute to Commander Robert R. Davis with the first verse of the "Navy Hymn."

Eternal Father strong to save, Whose arm hath bound the restless wave,
Who bid'st the mighty ocean deep Its own appointed limits keep;
O hear us when we cry to thee, for those in peril on the sea.

HONORING THE 91ST NATIONAL DAY OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA ON TAIWAN

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize and congratulate the Republic of China on Taiwan on the occasion of its 91st National Day on October 10, 2002.

Those of us from New York City are mindful that President Chen Shui-bian lost no time in condemning the horrific attacks of September 11, 2001 and in offering his country's unequivocal and generous support. Following the attacks, President Chen immediately acted to: (1) reinforce protection for U.S. personnel and facilities in Taiwan; (2) heighten security at airports and harbors; (3) provide government and private Taiwanese donations of approximately $20,000,000 for relief funds to New York City; (4) initiate a plan to prevent money laundering schemes that could benefit terrorists; and (5) increase the exchange of intelligence with the U.S.

New York City and the surrounding metropolitan area are home to hundreds of thousands of Americans of Taiwanese descent. We are very proud of the Taiwanese heritage of so many of our citizens. Their many contributions have made our community a better place in which to live.

Taiwan is also an economic powerhouse with the 12th largest economy in the world and the seventh largest U.S. trading partner. U.S. exports to Taiwan make it one of the largest export markets for many states including New York.

The 23 million people of Taiwan enjoy a vibrant democracy and human rights. With more than 90 political parties, elections at all levels of government are hotly contested through free and fair means. In fact, President Chen is a former political dissident himself. Taiwan's constitution guarantees its citizens extensive political, personal and religious freedoms. Further, President Chen has committed Taiwan to many international human rights treaties.

Finally, as we know from this country's generosity to New York City, Taiwan has always been as Secretary Colin Powell noted recently "a generous contributor to the international community." Over the years, it has sent 10,000 experts to train technicians in developing countries. It also has provided direct financial assistance to Kosovo and Afghan refugees to name a few.

October 10 is a time to celebrate a great friend of our country—one that shares in our ideals and freedoms. Let us hope that the cooperation between our two nations continues to grow even stronger and that we will continue to support efforts to bring Taiwan further into the community of nations worldwide.

CONGRATULATIONS TO NOTRE DAME ACADEMY AND OTTAWA HILLS HIGH SCHOOL

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, Notre Dame Academy and Ottawa Hills High School were recently awarded the Blue Ribbon School Award for the 2001–2002 school year. I was pleased to congratulate each school at receptions in their honor held in Washington, DC, October 3–4, 2002.

For the past 19 years, the U.S. Department of Education has honored schools that have demonstrated excellence through leadership, teaching, curriculum, student achievement, and parental involvement. Upon receiving the Blue Ribbon School of Excellence Award, Notre Dame Academy and Ottawa Hills High School have joined a select group of outstanding schools throughout America.

The human mind is our most valuable resource, and education equips young people to function in a free society, keep America competitive in the world economy, and enjoy all the resources and opportunities our country has to offer. Upon receiving this recognition, Notre Dame Academy and Ottawa Hills High School will continue to be viewed with high esteem by educators, teachers and parents in the state of Ohio and across the country. These schools truly have elevated the citizens of our great community, and join the ranks of previous local awardees, each superb local school, offering our students the finest quality education.

I commend the Notre Dame community—administrators, teachers, support personnel, parents and students and alumni—for their hard work and unwavering commitment to educational quality. Likewise, Ottawa Hills High School will continue to be viewed with high esteem by educators, teachers and parents in the state of Ohio and across the country. Onward!

HONORING DR. VERNON SMITH,
RECIPIENT OF 2002 NOBEL PRIZE IN ECONOMIC SCIENCES

HON. TOM DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Vernon Smith, the recipient of the 2002 Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences.

A professor at George Mason University, in Fairfax, Virginia, Dr. Smith has laid the foundation for the field of experimental economics by pioneering the use of laboratory experiments in evaluating the performance and function of markets. He has demonstrated the importance of alternative market institutions, such as how the revenue expected by a seller depends on the choice of auction method. Smith has also spearheaded "wind-tunnel tests", where trials of alternative market designs, when deregulating electricity markets, are carried out in the lab before being implemented in practice.

As a result of Dr. Smith's compelling research, experimental techniques have been applied by economic scholars worldwide. They have given economists a deeper understanding of the actual workings of the real-world markets and institutions and have helped guide public policy in electric power, water markets and in the design and testing of a pollution permit trading system. His ability to test economic theory has shed new insight into how goods are bought and sold, how airlines price their tickets, how pollution could be reduced, how stock trading could be less volatile, how state and federal regulations are developed, how states structure electric power industries, and how companies manage their employees.

Dr. Smith is a faculty member at the George Mason University School of Law and the Department of Economics, and leads a team of economists at the Interdisciplinary Center for Economic Science. He came to George Mason thanks in part to a $3 million grant from the Charles G. Koch Charitable Foundation. Dr. Smith is the second George Mason scholar to receive the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Sciences; economics professor James Buchanan received the award in 1986 for his groundbreaking work on public choice theory.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, it gives me great pleasure to extend my warmest congratulations to Dr. Smith on his 2002 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Sciences. His achievements and contribution to the field will be priceless to Virginia and the world as a whole. Virginia is proud to have such a distinguished citizen in its professional and social community. Once again, Mr. Speaker, Northern Virginia has proven to be a hotbed of cutting-edge, influential scientific process. I call upon my colleagues to join me in applauding this remarkable achievement.

HONORING WAYNE J. POSITAN, ESQ.

HON. MICHAEL FERGUSON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a friend, Wayne J. Positan, Esquire for his outstanding contributions to the people of New Jersey through his expertise in law. Wayne has practiced law in New Jersey for nearly 30 years.

Wayne is an active member of the New Jersey State Bar Association and has been a member of the Essex County Bar Association throughout his career. He is also the Editor-in-Chief of the book "New Jersey Labor and Employment Law."

He is widely respected within his profession. He is listed in "Best Lawyers in America" for labor and employment law. He was inducted as a Fellow of the American Bar Foundation in 2002, was the 2001 recipient of the Professional Achievement Award of the Essex County Bar Association and was the 2002 recipient of the Professional Lawyers of the Year Award from the New Jersey Commission on Professionalism.

In addition to his extensive professional career, Wayne makes significant contributions to his community. Most notably, Governor Whitman appointed him to the Board of Trustees of Montclair State University in 1999, where he has served in a number of different capacities.

The Columbian Foundation, a non-profit organization of business and professional men of Italian descent, will recognize Wayne with a Humanitarian and Achievement Award on October 12.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to honor Wayne J. Positan today for his good works and providing New Jersey with his talent and service.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

RECOGNIZING OCTOBER 10, 2002 AS
THE 91ST NATIONAL DAY OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

HON. ADAM H. PUTNAM

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Speaker, On the occasion of Republic of China's 91st National Day, I wish to express my best wishes and congratulations to the leaders and people of Taiwan. While I regret that our government does not have formal relations with Taiwan, we do enjoy a flourishing relationship with Taiwan. I have met with President Chen Shui-bian, and others members of the Government of the Republic of China on Taiwan, and congratulate them on their commitment to maintaining Taiwan as a vibrant democracy and a free market economy.

Indeed, through the free market system Taiwan's economy has grown spectacularly. In terms of Taiwan's trade with us, Taiwan is our eighth largest trading partner and seventh-largest export market. Our exports to Taiwan in 2001 totaled US$18.2 billion and Taiwan exported $27.7 billion of goods to us. Taiwan's importance as a world economy can be witnessed in Taiwan's accession into the World Trade Organization (WTO) earlier this year, the culmination of twelve years of collaborative efforts with the government of the United States. Due to its strong free market economy Taiwan is a likely candidate for future free trade negotiations with the United States. The signing of such an agreement could promote even stronger bilateral economic relations.

It is now universally acknowledged that Taiwan is a vibrant democracy and Taiwan should be accorded a proper place in the family of nations. It has been unproductive to keep Taiwan out of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and other major international organizations. Over the past decade, Taiwan has become a successful model of rapid political reform. Taiwan is today home to more than 90 political parties and virtually every political office is hotly contested through free and fair elections. And just two years ago, Mr. Chen Shui-bian, a former political dissident, was elected the tenth president of the Republic of China. Democracy is doing very well in Taiwan.

It is my pleasure to extend my congratulations to the people of Taiwan as they celebrate their National Day this October 10th. It is my hope that our relations with Taiwan will continue to be maintained in friendship, based on the mutual commitment of our peoples to free enterprise, democratic values and respect for individual liberty.

COMMENDING THE DISTINGUISHED SERVICE OF COLONEL WILLIAM H. PETTY

HON. TERRY EVERETT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the distinguished career of Colonel William H. Petty of the Alabama National Guard who prepares for retirement in the coming months. Colonel Petty has distinguished himself through more than twenty-nine years of service in the United States Armed Forces.

Colonel Petty is best known for his outstanding performance as the director of human resources for the Alabama National Guard. As the human resources officer, his command presence and superb situational awareness helped to ensure all units within the Alabama National Guard, both Army and Air, exceeded personnel standards.

Colonel Petty developed, implemented, and coordinated the State's first reduction-in-force of full-time personnel for both Army and Air AGR programs. Thanks to his efforts, no full-time AGR soldier lost his or her job. His superior application of technical, tactical and leadership abilities earned him the respect and admiration of all soldiers assigned to the command.

In his current assignment as director of human resources, Colonel Petty has fully demonstrated his desire and ability to lead soldiers by example and prepare them for possible mobilization and deployment.

Colonel Petty is a tough, standards oriented officer who always extracts the very best performance from soldiers assigned to his command. Colonel Petty is the epitome of the core Army values and proudly serves his nation, the State of Alabama, and the local community in an unwavering manner.

Colonel Petty's numerous achievements and outstanding dedication to duty are in keeping with the highest traditions of military service and reflect great credit on himself, the Alabama National Guard, and the United States armed forces.

U.S.-U.K. COOPERATION ON GULF WAR SYNDROME RESEARCH

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring attention to recent developments in the Government Reform Subcommittee of National Security, Veterans, Affairs, and International Relations.

I would like to commend my colleagues, Mr. SANDERS, Mr. PUTNAM and Mr. SHAYS, on their trip to London in June, where they met with Lord Alfred Morris of Manchester as well as veterans, parliamentarians and researchers from the United Kingdom. The purpose of the meeting was to examine the status of international cooperation with regard to epidemiological and clinical research into illnesses reported by the United Kingdom Veterans of the Persian Gulf War.

This meeting followed a hearing held by Chairman SHAY's subcommittee last January that examined Allied research into Gulf War Illnesses and recent progress in that field.

It is only fitting that the United States and Great Britain should pool their respective resources in unraveling the mysteries of Gulf War Syndrome and fight together in learning more about it and how to combat it.

I strongly support the efforts of our British Ally to make the results of their research available to the Congress and to the Department of Veterans, Affairs Research Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans Illnesses.

Later tonight, the House will vote on a resolution authorizing the President to use force in Iraq. American and British troops may soon face the prospects of fighting on the potentially toxic battlefields of Iraq. It is therefore of the utmost importance that we continue in our struggle to understand Gulf War Syndrome's causation and cures. We must not withhold information from our allies which might help us to reach these goals, and the level of cooperation between Mr. SHAYS, Mr. PUTNAM, Mr. SANDERS and our British Allies, during their meeting in June was very much in the spirit of this idea.

RECOGNIZING THE MOST REVEREND WILTON D. GREGORY AND THE RED MASS

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to submit the homily given by the Most Reverend Wilton D. Gregory at the Red Mass to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Bishop Gregory is a constituent of mine from Belleville, Illinois and serves as the President of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. He delivered the Red Mass homily on October 6 at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C.

The Red Mass is sponsored by the John Carroll Society. This group was created in 1951 to encourage educational, religious and charitable activities in the community. To achieve this, the organization is involved with many projects in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area, including the Red Mass.

The Red Mass was first introduced in the United States in 1928 at Saint Andrew's Church in New York City. Since 1953, the John Carroll Society has sponsored the Red Mass annually in Washington D.C. This mass takes place on the Sunday before the first Monday in October, just before the Supreme Court begins its new term to bless those that administer justice in our society.

Bishop Gregory's homily was an eloquent message about the importance of responsibility and fairness in the administration of justice. Furthermore, while some believe there have been signs of darkness in our society in the past year, Bishop Gregory reminds us that we cannot afford to give up our hope and our faith.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Bishop Gregory and to commend him for his message of hope and his dedicated leadership.

HOMILY OF BISHOP WILTON GREGORY, RED MASS, SUNDAY 6 OCTOBER, 2002

It is a pleasure and an honor to be able to add to the words of greeting of Cardinal McCarrick, my own personal recognition to all of the dignitaries who have gathered to pray with us this Sunday morning. You are here, as are we all, to invoke God's blessings upon all those responsible for the administration of justice and upon all our public officials. In doing so, we are recognizing that the exercise of civic authority, the responsibility for the well-being of our citizens, and often of many who are not our citizens, is not merely a work of our own human resources. Rather, it is a cooperative venture with the plan and the will of God Himself.

Everyone who holds a title of civil office is not simply the beneficiary of honor or privilege, although that may accompany the office. More importantly, they carry the responsibility to exercise wisely, fairly, and in a personally disinterested fashion the call for justice and solidarity that God intends for us during our lives on this earth. Indeed, Christ Himself, in His hour of trial reminded His earthly judge that the power, which was given to be exercised over Him, had been given by Heaven itself. For that reason, it is indeed good that we gather at this year's Red Mass to offer our prayers that God give to every civic and public official the wisdom to recognize His influence in their lives and the grace to carry out well the obligations they have accepted.

The Second Vatican Council, which is one of the essential guides for our Catholic thought at this turn of the millennium, has reminded us to "read the signs of the times" (GS, 4) so that we might seek to carry out God's plan in the circumstances in which we find ourselves. As we read the signs of our times, we cannot fail to see how demanding they are, to us as individuals and to those who lead us. In fact, in our time these signs have raised questions about our leadership itself, in many aspects of society.

We are all living daily with the memory of 9/11 as well as with the future responses to that attack. Questions are rightly raised about changes in our personal lives, and about how to react as a people in a manner that is just and moral. We continue, almost on a daily basis, to read the signs about leadership in business and our County's economy. What is the meaning of the failures of leadership summed up by names like Enron and World Com? And I would be injudicious if I did not mention the doubts about leadership that have arisen in our country as a result of the sex abuse scandal that has plagued the Catholic Church in the United States in recent months, and the terrible personal suffering which it has exposed. From a certain point of view, many of the signs of this time in which we live seem to be those of darkness, like endless clouds from storms that seem unwilling to pass.

But we cannot allow matters to remain that way. It is neither our history as Americans, nor our nature as men and women of faith, to give in to pessimism or resignation, somehow burying our heads in the sand, wringing our hands, or doubting the power of God to guide us as we respond to the world in which we live. Because we are people of faith, we must also live as people of hope. We trust that God is not somehow looking away but even in our difficult moments, He is the reason we look confidently to the future.

Do not the signs of this time call for us proudly to acknowledge our roots in faith and to renew our commitment to God in a moment of trial? Moreover, in so doing, we fulfill not only our own personal quest for faith, but we are consistent with the very values upon which this beloved nation was founded. In fact, from the very beginning of our democratic experiment, it was understood that justice, morality and good governance, indeed the essence of leadership, are not the arbitrary re-creations of each generation. Rather they are based in the will of God Himself.

George Washington, in his farewell address, described his Presidency as a time of "passions, agitated in every direction, . . . liable to mislead; appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, [and] situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism". Yet following this somber description, which could easily be applied to our own day, Washington observed that in leading the nation through these obstacles, his path had been lighted by the twin torches of religious faith and moral convictions stating: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. . . . Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of . . . justice?"

Our first great President continued, "And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education, . . . reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

It is the world's experience that true greatness in leadership, be it religious or secular, is a rare commodity. The combination of spirit, intellect, courage and the gift of being able to motivate fellow travelers in this world are often diminished by sin and the human limitations that each of us knows only too well, both in ourselves and in others.

It is for that reason that we are gathered here today, and gathered in hope as we pray for our public officials and administrators of justice. We do so at this Mass in which we call upon the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God Himself, and we ask that that Spirit be given to those entrusted with our welfare to strengthen them, purify their vision and guide them. Moreover, that Holy Spirit is ready to help us both to understand and to respond to the signs of our times.

As Isaiah tells us in the reading this morning, this Spirit of the Lord is "a spirit of wisdom and understanding". He therefore assists those who must wrestle with the most complex and conflicting legal arguments and proofs, helping them not to be misled by what is superficial, beguiling or false. Isaiah tells us that this is "a spirit of counsel and of strength", guiding the vision of legislators and administrators to look to the greater good, not responsive merely to momentary influences or transient majorities, but seeking to make us a people in solidarity, brought together by the values and the bonds of truth which God has written on the heart of each one of us. This is, as Isaiah says, "a spirit of knowledge and of fear of the Lord. And that Spirit "shall judge the poor with justice and decide aright for the land's afflicted. He shall strike the ruthless with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked."

We must not forget that the Spirit of the Lord for whose presence we pray this morning, that same Spirit, was given to Christ, as we read in the Gospel. And that Spirit brings about a special care, attention and love for those who are in need among us. Christ told His listeners that in their hearing was fulfilled His anointing with the Spirit, so that He might "bring glad tidings to the poor ...

proclaim liberty to captives ... recovery of sight to the blind ... and let the oppressed go free". obviously no small agenda, but it is one that we too must embrace as part of the work of our time. And we should not be bashful in proclaiming from the housetops, that in many places, and under many circumstances, it is precisely churches, synagogues, mosques and temples, in short it is religious faith, that has answered the cry of those who are most in need.

While there is much more still to do, we can be justly proud of the way religion has shaped our response as individuals and as a society in the United States when confronting the needs of the poor. We also know of the importance of members of different religions developing deeper respect for one another, so as to collaborate in shaping the common good. And as President of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, while apologizing once more for the cleansing needed within our own house, I would argue most powerfully that those scandals must not silence nor limit the excellent influence that religious voices have in the formation of our governmental and societal policies, whether they be war and peace, the death penalty, stem cell research or questions of poverty. The truth that underlies faith is not diminished because its messengers are human beings with all their faults and failings. The miracle of faith is that truth is proclaimed in spite of ourselves.

All too often in recent years, it has been a sign of our time that some urge that the role of religion in public life be marginalized and even suppressed. And too frequently, men and women of faith have not challenged the assertion that religion is a strictly private matter and that faith in God, and its accompanying moral and social values, have no role to play in our national life. We are even told that our children should not utter God's name when reciting the Pledge of Allegiance, as if that would do them harm or make them less fully Americans. Instead of accepting this claim, our faith in God leads us to another conclusion. As we face the signs of our times—the moral decline in society, the threats against life both from abroad and from within, and the lack of trust in our leaders—we recognize that this time, our time, is a time for religious renewal. It is a time for us to recover our sense of God, of the sacredness of human life and of doing what is right, whatever the cost and whatever the circumstance. It is a time for us to be not more reticent, but more courageous in professing our faith in God and acting upon it.

Pope John Paul II, the outstanding religious and moral leader in the world today, had this to say to visiting Bishops from the United States in 1998, "The survival of a . . . democracy depends not only on its institutions, but to an even greater extent on the spirit which inspires and permeates its procedures for legislating, administering, and judging. The future of democracy, in fact, depends on a culture capable of forming men and women who are prepared to defend certain truths and values. It is imperiled when politics and law are sundered from any connection to the moral law written on the human heart."—(Address of Pope John Paul II to the Bishops of Region X, June 27, 1998).

In gathering today and offering Mass to invoke the Holy Spirit upon those public servants who bear responsibility for the health and well being of our nation, we are inspired by St. Paul who told Timothy that he urged "supplications, prayer, intercessions and thanksgivings . . . for kings and all who are in high positions so that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and dignity" (I Tim. 2:1). In doing so, let us highlight one thing more: our gratitude.

The burden of public service, when rightly lived, is indeed a heavy burden. Not all agree to take it up. We need to pray for the Holy Spirit's guidance for our judges, administrators and governmental officials. But as well, we must pray in gratitude for those who have given a life of service to us. That service is a sacred trust and no small contribution to our ability to live the quiet and peaceable life that St. Paul mentioned.

In gathering this morning for this sacrifice of the Mass, as we place before the altar our very selves, our many needs and our petitions, we must also thank God. We thank Him especially for His providence in the history of our country, raising up in difficult moments leaders, such as Presidents Washington and Lincoln, to help us through our trials. Moreover, we thank God for the leaders and public servants of our own time, who truly strive to protect our country's justice and peace, ensure for us the opportunity to work for the fulfillment of God's plan in our lives and in society.

TRANSATLANTIC SECURITY AND NATO ENHANCEMENT RESOLUTION OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 7, 2002

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 468 which expresses the House's support for the further enlargement of NATO at the upcoming Prague summit. I believe that such an expansion would further U.S. foreign policy interests by ensuring peace and stability in Central Europe.

As during the first round of enlargement in 1999, countries joining NATO must support and implement the democratic principles that serve as the foundation of the countries that established the alliance. It is essential to the continued viability of NATO that new members fully abide by Western values, including respect for religious and national minority rights.

Mr. Speaker, over 2,000,000 Hungarians live as minorities in Romania and Slovakia as a result of borders being drawn without the affected populations allowed to express their views through plebiscites. These minority communities had their religious, educational and community properties confiscated by the Communist regimes. Following the historic changes of the early 1990s, laws had been passed in these countries providing for the restitution of or compensation for these confiscated properties. However, the implementation has been extremely slow, especially when it comes to the return of the properties of Hungarian religious and educational institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is essential that countries seeking to join the alliance of free and democratic countries represented by NATO make significant strides to protect religious and minority rights and expeditiously restore or compensate the minority communities for the illegally confiscated properties. The stability of the region and indeed of NATO requires that the member countries take all measures necessary to ensure ethnic and religious harmony within their borders. Therefore, it is critical that the governments of Romania and Slovakia take immediate measures to ensure religious and minority rights and fully implement the laws designed to restore properties confiscated from the Hungarian and other minorities. NATO members must adhere to these minimum requirements of free democratic societies that the alliance and the United States represent.

INTRODUCTION OF THE HOUSE DEMOCRATS' EARNED LEGALIZA- TION AND FAMILY UNIFICATION LEGISLATION

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, before September 11, 2001, our country's leaders from the Executive Branch to the Congress were actively engaged in exploring a fundamental re-crafting and rewriting of our immigration policies. Due to the horrific events of September 11, 2001, that agenda had to be delayed as our country struggled to find ways to ensure our security, while still respecting the civil rights and essential dignity of the immigrants within our country.

Since September 11, Congress has taken important steps to secure our borders and enhance our nation's security against the terrorist threat. The sound policy rationales that were propelling us to re-craft our immigration laws before September 11 continue to exist today and are even more urgent. To the core values of family unity, fundamental fairness and economic opportunity that we articulated in the Democratic Statement of Principles on Immigration a year ago, we now add a pressing concern—the need to bring the undocumented population out of the shadows and into the light of greater accountability so that they too can aid in effectively securing our great nation. The need for comprehensive immigration reform has not abated, and our resolve to move forward in this effort remains.

EARNED LEGALIZATION AND FAMILY UNIFICATION

Today, Democrats are introducing legislation that will take the first step toward comprehensive immigration reform that will recognize immigrants who have been working and contributing to this country while also increasing our security. Our earned legalization legislation will ensure that hard-working, tax-paying immigrants will be able to adjust their status and live legally if they have resided in the United States for at least five years, have a work history of at least two years and are able to pass a background check.

Our legislation will benefit both America and an immigrant population that has embraced the American Dream. It will streamline the enforcement of our immigration laws and allow us to shift important enforcement resources to tracking down those who have come to the US to do us harm. Reducing the number of undocumented immigrants in the US will enable us to better focus on individuals who pose a real terrorist threat. At the same time, our legislation rewards work by ensuring that qualifying immigrants can move on with their lives free of the fear that one day they or members of their family may be sent away from their adopted country forever.

Our legislation will also speed the reunification of families, so that our immigration system will not force families to choose between long years of separation and undocumented immigration. We value family-based immigration because it solidifies important family ties and creates stronger communities. Yet, our current immigration system puts extreme stress on families, forcing them to wait many years before they can be reunited. We believe it is not in the best interest of our communities to force such long separations.

We must recognize, however, that this is but a first step, and that much more remains to be done. There has been much debate about the need for new and expanded temporary worker programs. Even as we debate the merits of legalizing the hard-working population already in the United States, we acknowledge that a comprehensive immigration policy debate must address future flows of immigrants and their impact on the US labor force. Indeed, President Fox of Mexico continues to press the Bush Administration for movement in this area. We must consider reasonable policy options for regulating, limiting and controlling this future flow of immigrants in a way consistent with our nation's highest values.

As Presidents Bush and Fox resume bilateral migration discussions, and we encourage their efforts, we note that immigrants come from many different countries which highlights the importance of having broad and expansive discussions of the myriad issues presented by immigration trends. As the discussion continues, it is vital that the issues we set forth below are thoughtfully and effectively addressed and are key elements to any future legislative or administrative efforts.

ADJUSTED STATUS FOR WORKERS CURRENTLY IN THE UNITED STATES AND TOWARDS REGULARIZING THE STATUS OF FUTURE IMMIGRANTS

Consistent with our original Democratic Statement of Principles on Immigration, we recognize that to achieve the comprehensive immigration reform that we outlined, the status adjustment of undocumented immigrants currently residing in the United States who do not otherwise qualify for our earned legalization proposal must be addressed. We should find a way to place these undocumented workers and their families on the same path to legalization as those who qualify for our earned legalization proposal.

In addition, we must seek to regularize the flow of immigrants who cross our border. By seeking regularization, a legal mechanism could be provided for recent arrivals to the US to work while not undermining the wages, benefits standards and legal protections of US workers and local labor markets. Such an effort should include the following essential elements: (1) a thorough and accurate methodology for determining the need for foreign workers and the application of the most reliable labor market tests; (2) accurate wage determinations based on relevant wage information, union contracts and benefits and the development of new formulas that reflect industry standards; (3) equitable labor protections for foreign and US workers, including the right to organize—foreign temporary workers should not be used to undermine union organizing efforts; and (4) the Department of Labor must be given the necessary enforcement resources and procedures to ensure full compliance and temporary foreign workers must be provided a private right of action to ensure full compliance.

As we move forward in the development of any new efforts, we also recognize the necessity of avoiding the failures of past guest-worker programs. We must ensure that existing visa programs are reformed to function properly and as intended, and we must direct the necessary resources to training for US workers and better link such training to available jobs.

CONCLUSION

We enter this debate recognizing that immigration reform can be a complex issue; indeed, previous immigration reforms have failed to meet the high standards that we establish for ourselves in this debate. For precisely this reason, we intend to lead a comprehensive immigration reform debate that unflinchingly addresses the difficult questions that are critical to any serious policy discussion. We look forward to the challenges ahead and to reshaping our immigration policy to strengthen America's control over its borders and to reflect the American values of hard work and family.

U.S.-INDIA RELATIONS

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about one of America's key foreign policy priorities in this new era—our relationship with India, a democracy with more than one billion people. U.S.-India relations continue to expand and to grow deeper in many areas, from economic and trade relations, to political and diplomatic ties; from the promotion of democracy internationally, to cooperation in such areas as environmental protection, health care, the exploration of outer space and the development of information technologies. Two areas in which our bilateral relationship has made particular progress are security cooperation and partnership in the international campaign against terrorism.

One tangible example of this newfound cooperation is taking place right now in Alaska. The second Indo-U.S. Joint Military Exercise began September 19 and will continue until October 11. The aim of the joint exercise is to learn from each other's experience and procedures towards achieving interoperability. Troops from the two countries are carrying out para-drops, scouting/airborne assault missions and progressed with various levels of joint firing exercises. The first joint airborne military exercise between the two countries was held at Agra, India in May of this year. I'm pleased to report that the distinguished Indian Ambassador to the U.S., Mr. Lalit Mansingh, traveled to Alaska on October 7, to witness the exercises. The Ambassador met Brigadier General John M. Brown III, Commander of the U.S. Army Alaska at Fort Richardson, who expressed his appreciation of the professionalism, discipline and adaptability of the Indian armed forces.

Defense cooperation between our two countries has emerged as one of the most important dimensions of the overall U.S.-Indian bilateral relations. A major joint naval exercise, named "Malabar IV" was successfully completed in the Indian Ocean last week. The Executive Steering Groups of all the three defense services are scheduled to meet again later this year to develop plans for additional joint exercises, training and other areas of cooperation.

Another recent example of our joint commitment for a more stable and secure world was the U.S.-India Security and Non-Proliferation Dialogue held in New Delhi September 23-24. India continues to make substantial progress in meeting U.S. non-proliferation goals and is also committed to vigorously enforcing stringent export controls on dual-use technologies.

Mr. Speaker, since last September 11, the struggle against the international terrorist threat has been an overriding priority in all of our international relations. As President Bush told the world with admirable clarity, "Either you're with us or you're with the terrorists." India has clearly risen to the occasion and made it clear that it stands with us and against the terrorists—without any ambiguity.

In the year since September 11, 2001, India and the U.S. have forged an ever-closer partnership in the struggle against international terrorism—a partnership that had actually began in January 2000 with the establishment of the U.S.-India Joint Working Group on Counterterrorism. The Commission has met five times since, and high-level consultations between key officials are ongoing.

Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the Bush Administration's recognition of the importance of India as a growing ally of the United States. The pace of bilateral engagement since President Bush took office has been unprecedented. The National Security Strategy of the United States, transmitted by President Bush to Congress in early September as a declaration of the Administration's policy, calls India "a growing world power with which we have common strategic interests." The report further states: "The Administration sees India's potential to become one of the great democratic powers of the twenty-first century and has worked hard to transform our relationship accordingly."

Our President and Prime Minister Vajpayee of India have established a strong working relationship, which symbolizes the friendship and partnership between our countries. We welcomed Prime Minister Vajpayee's visit to the United States last month for the U.N. General Assembly meeting. During his stay in New York, the Prime Minister met with President Bush, and also attended commemoration ceremonies for 9/11—a further indication of the deep sympathy and strong sense of solidarity that the Indian government and people feel regarding the attacks on America.

At their November 2001 meeting, President Bush and Prime Minister Vajpayee issued a joint statement outlining the broad scope of bilateral relations. The statement affirmed their commitment to complete the process of qualitatively transforming bilateral relations in pursuit of their many common goals in Asia and beyond. In addition to the increasing exchanges and technical cooperation in the defense and security areas, the President and Prime Minister also stressed the importance of policies to enhance the economic and commercial ties between our nations, and agreed to dialogue and cooperation in the areas of energy, the environment, health, space, export controls, science and technology, including biotechnology and information technology.

A major part of the human dimension to our bilateral relationship is the Indian-American community. Numbering more than 1.7 million, the community has played a leading role in bringing together our two great democracies. The community has also worked to educate us, the elected Representatives of the United States, about the importance of U.S.-India relations to build the security and prosperity that will benefit both of our peoples and create a more stable world.

HONORING THE DISTINGUISHED MILITARY SERVICE OF REGGIE FARMER

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the courageous service that Rutherford County Sheriff's Deputy and Air National Guardsman Reggie Farmer has given to his Middle Tennessee community and his grateful country.

Reggie has been serving active duty in the Air National Guard for the past year in the nation's ongoing war against terrorism. In fact, he just recently returned from Afghanistan where our brave military men and women have been fighting terrorists and restoring order in the war-torn country.

In his civilian life, Reggie serves Rutherford County citizens as a sheriff's deputy and Kittrell Elementary School students as a school resource officer. Reggie resumes his duties at Kittrell Elementary School on Tuesday, October 15, the day he officially retires from the military.

Reggie began his military career in April 1978 after enlisting in the United States Air Force. After leaving active duty in the Air Force, Reggie enlisted in the Air National Guard where he has been deployed all over the world. I congratulate Reggie on a long and honorable military career and join the rest of the citizens of Rutherford County in welcoming back home a true American hero.

TRIBUTE TO ELSIE BAILEY, NEW NATIONAL PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am proud to rise today to pay tribute to Elsie Bailey, a constituent of mine from Whiting, New Jersey, who was recently elected President of the American Legion Auxiliary.

Mr. Speaker, on August 28th, in Charlotte, North Carolina, Elsie Bailey was sworn in as President at the American Legion Auxiliary's 82nd National Convention. The American Legion Auxiliary is the world's largest women's patriotic service organization, with more than 10,500 units in every state and some foreign countries.

Founded in 1919, the Auxiliary consists of women whose husbands or other male relatives are members of the American Legion. The Auxiliary has over a million members today, including more than 15,000 in New Jersey, and operates hundreds of volunteer programs. Their dedicated and generous members provide thousands of hours of service to our Nation's veterans and to the communities in which they live. Through their efforts, millions of dollars have been raised to support veterans programs, as well as to support both national and local charities.

Mr. Speaker, I am especially proud of the fact that Elsie Bailey is the first woman from New Jersey in more than 75 years to serve as President of the Auxiliary. And the American Legion Auxiliary could not have found a more caring, compassionate and capable woman to lead them.

Elsie Bailey was born in Hillsborough, New Jersey, later lived in both Somerville and Bridgewater, and is now a resident of Whiting, in the heart of my congressional district. She worked for 23 years at the Somerset Medical Center, retiring as personnel director.

Throughout her life, Elsie has been active in her communities, having served on the Somerset County Teacher Credit Union, the Parent Teachers Association and the Employees Activities Committee. She is currently a volunteer mentor, a member of the Whiting Rescue Squad Auxiliary, and a parishioner of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Catholic Church. But perhaps her proudest accomplishments are her two children and four grandchildren.

In 1961, Elsie Bailey joined the Stevenson-D'Alessio Auxiliary Unit 12 in Somerville, quickly becoming secretary of that unit. She has continued to serve in leadership roles at the unit, department and national levels, including serving as state President for New Jersey and as National Vice President.

Now as National President, Elsie has already begun implementing an ambitious agenda for the Auxiliary. She plans to travel across the country to every state and perhaps even to some foreign countries, in an effort to boost the Auxiliary's already impressive membership rolls. A lover of country music, Elsie has established a membership theme called "Country Hearts in Celebration," which she intends to use to recruit new members.

She has also taken on a special project called "Veteran's Pot of Gold" designed to raise funds to assist homeless veterans, an issue that has been a large part of my agenda as Chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I look forward to working with Elsie in this most noble mission to help the estimated 275,000 veterans who are homeless today.

Mr. Speaker, as our Nation fights a war on terrorism to keep America free and secure, it is comforting to know that there are people like Elsie Bailey supporting our veterans and our communities. I am confident Elsie Bailey will serve as new National President of the American Legion Auxiliary with the same distinction she has demonstrated her entire life. Through her service to our veterans, our communities and our Nation, Elsie Bailey has earned our respect and I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to her today.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE SISTERS OF CHARITY AND GOOD SAMARITAN HOSPITAL EMPLOYEES ON THE 150TH BIRTHDAY OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN HOSPITAL

HON. ROB PORTMAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Sisters of Charity and the employees, physicians, and volunteers of the Good Samaritan Hospital, which will celebrate its 150th birthday on November 2, 2002.

Good Samaritan Hospital was founded by the Sisters of Charity in 1852. It was Cincinnati's first private general hospital. The 21-bed hospital was located downtown and, back then, was known as St. John's Hotel for Invalids. For over 100 years, the Sisters of Charity was intimately involved with the running of the hospital and, early on, Cincinnati quickly came to trust and depend on the care of the Sisters. By 1856, the hospital's size tripled. Shortly thereafter, business leaders were so impressed with St. John's philanthropic leadership that two of them bought a 95-bed hospital downtown and renamed it the Hospital of the Good Samaritan in honor of the Sisters of Charity. In 1915, the hospital was so popular that it moved to larger quarters in Clifton—where it is today—and opened 400 beds. Today, Good Samaritan Hospital cares for more inpatients than any other hospital in Southwestern Ohio.

Good Samaritan Hospital is known for its high level of patient care and its nursing care. In recent years, it has been ranked among the top 50 hospitals in the United States for its cardiology/heart surgery, endocrinology, neurology/neurosurgery, and urology services, and among the top 100 for its orthopedic services and coronary artery bypass surgery.

The vision of the Sisters of Charity, the devotion and hard work of the Good Samaritan medical staff, employees, and volunteers and Catholic Health Initiatives, which the Sisters of Charity helped found in 1996, have made Good Samaritan Hospital a great success.

All of us in Greater Cincinnati recognize the Sisters of Charity and the Good Samaritan Hospital medical staff, employees, and volunteers on its 150th birthday.

FLOOR STATEMENT ON TAIWAN'S
91ST NATIONAL DAYHON. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, today I have the great pleasure of sending my congratulations to the people of Taiwan on the 91st anniversary of Double Ten National Day.

Ninety-one years ago today, forces loyal to Sun Yat-sen led the Wuch'ang uprising and paved the way for the rise of a new political experiment in democracy for the people of China—the establishment of the Republic of China, Asia's first republic. This was a turning point not only in the history of the East but in the history of the world.

In 1911, Dr. Sun envisioned a China that was nationalist, democratic, and dedicated to the social well-being of its citizens. While his Republic's political control on the mainland of China was short-lived, its impact in the minds of the people of China is eternal.

After more than 50 years of sound economic and political development, the Republic of China on Taiwan has proven to the world that not only the citizens of Taiwan, but all of the people of China can govern themselves in a system that is—as Dr. Sun Yat-sen envisioned—Chinese, democratic, and prosperous. The significance of this experiment is especially meaningful to us now because Taiwan has attained such a full measure of economic and political freedom.

And in that fifty year history, Taiwan has proven to be one of America's most loyal friends. It is my deepest hope that we continue to recognize Taiwan's great achievements, loyal friendship, and sustained progress by continuing to promote Taiwan's participation in the World Trade Organization and such global bodies as the World Health Organization. We must also continue to provide Taiwan the defensive arms it requires to maintain peace on the Taiwan Strait.

I am very happy to join with the citizens of Taiwan to celebrate Double Ten National Day 2002.

ACKNOWLEDGING WORLD SIGHT
DAYHON. JOHN BOOZMAN

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the optometry community for over 24 years, I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge World Sight Day.

Today, the National Eye Institute, the Lions Club International, Lighthouse International, and the International Agency for the Prevention of Blindness will host World Sight Day this year with the Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Library. Here in the Nation's Capital there will be adult and children's programs educating this community about the importance to understanding and preventing blindness and what they can do to help.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

While working as an optometrist in Northwest Arkansas with groups such as the Lions Club and others which provide eye care for those unable to afford it, I saw first hand how important education and availability of services are to preventing blindness. Dealing with blindness is a serious challenge to the individual, and their families. Today sheds light on what people can do within their communities to end preventable blindness and provide the facilities needed to deal with blindness. Every volunteer in these programs has the potential to change lives.

All too often, we take for granted how precious our senses are to our daily lives. I commend these organizations in declaring October 10th, 2002 as World Sight Day and in promoting the importance of vision throughout America's communities.

IN HONOR OF TED MALIARIS

HON. JIM DAVIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. JIM DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Ted Maliaris, a devoted American who is following his heart and sharing his love for our Nation through his passionate music. Through his "A Tribute to America Tour," Ted is lifting the spirits of Americans across the nation while teaching children the importance of American values.

Ted was born in South Florida, and thanks to the encouragement of his grandparents, who were both musicians, Ted soon discovered his true love for music. During his years working on the family farm, Ted honed his musical talents and soon decided to follow his dream of sharing his music with others. He recently recorded his first album with the London Symphony Orchestra, where he honored the immigrant farm laborers who worked along side him during his career on the farm.

After the tragic events of September 11, Ted's mother, Ann S. Miller composed "A Tribute to America—A 21st Century Anthem" to honor the men and women in the Armed Forces. The song inspired Ted to organize the "Tribute to America Tour," which features his performance of his mother's song and performances by various children's groups around the country. Hoping to show children the patriotism and pride that lies in our country, America's Life Line Association is planning a special recording of 50,000 children singing the Anthem together.

On behalf of the people of Tampa Bay, I would like to extend my gratitude to Ted for his dedication to our country and this important cause.

INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEKHON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, today Representative JOHN PETERSON and I are introducing a bill to establish an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations Week in honor of the army of health care heroes who, every day, comfort, care for, and assist our loved ones. Modern society takes for granted the need for nursing as an indispensable component of our public health system, but this was not always the case. The very concept of a visiting nurse can be traced to the pioneering work of Florence Nightingale. She reformed British military hospitals in the Crimean War through an expose in the British press. She professionalized nursing and made it an acceptable profession for educated women, devoted the rest of her life to building on her experiences, setting standards and writing books, until the mission of nursing had gained the respect of the world.

October 11, 2002

When Henry Wadsworth Longfellow read of the work of Florence Nightingale, he penned a poem, Santa Filomena, that spoke of the deep appreciation owed by all of us to those dedicated to service in the ultimate caring profession. He wrote:

Whene'er a noble deed is wrought,
Whene'er is spoken a noble thought,
Our hearts, in clad surprise,
To higher levels rise.
The tidal wave of deeper souls
Into our inmost being rolls,
And lifts us unawares
Out of all meaner cares.

The Visiting Nurse Associations of today are founded on the principle that the sick, the disabled, and the elderly benefit most from healthcare when it is offered in their own homes. They are non-profit home health agencies that provide cost-effective and compassionate home and community-based health care to individuals, regardless of their condition or ability to pay for services. Through these exceptional organizations, 90,000 clinicians dedicate their lives to bringing healthcare into the homes of over 4 million Americans every year. In the face of rising costs and drastic changes in our health care system, Visiting Nurse Associations have continued to deliver high quality health services for over 120 years.

It is time for Congress to recognize the vital services that visiting nurses provide their patients. Moreover, visiting nurses also are an indispensable lifeline for families. The comfort and quality care that visiting nurses provide can help family members cope with the difficulties of a loved one's illness.

I am proud to be introducing this important legislation with my colleague Representative PETERSON and urge my colleagues to join us in supporting National Visiting Nurse Associations Week.

DANIEL PEARL MUSIC DAY

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join musicians, artists and performers across America and around the world in saluting the life of Daniel Pearl and recognizing October 10, 2002—the day he would have celebrated his 39th birthday—as Daniel Pearl Music Day.

Musicians worldwide, including Itzhak Perlman; the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra; Junoon, the number one rock band from Pakistan, and numerous others have joined this tribute, which will use the universal language of music to spread a message of tolerance, humanity, friendship and global cooperation. Communities from Los Angeles, Hong Kong, Washington, Paris, and Tel Aviv to Mumbai, Goa, Bangkok and Beijing will all celebrate Daniel Pearl's message of world harmony.

Daniel, a talented violinist, fiddler and mandolin player, joined a band, orchestra or chamber group in every community in which he lived. Through music, he made friends out of strangers of all cultures.

A Princeton, New Jersey native, Daniel Pearl graduated from Stanford University with a BA in Communications. He began his career in journalism in the late 1980's and won an American Planning Association Award for a five-part series on land use. He joined the Wall Street Journal as a reporter in 1990 in Atlanta and moved to Washington, DC. He then moved to London, then to Paris and finally to Bombay where he was named South Asia bureau chief. He was an accomplished journalist with an uncanny ability to uncover wrongdoing while never losing sight of the humanity behind the news.

The extraordinary life of Daniel Pearl, a devoted son, a loving husband, a caring father and a loyal friend was tragically interrupted when he was kidnapped and brutally murdered by Islamic extremists in Pakistan while investigating a story for the Wall Street Journal.

In the spirit of Daniel Pearl's love of music and commitment to dialogue, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing October 10, 2002 as Daniel Pearl Music Day.

INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

HON. JOHN E. PETERSON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to introduce to my colleagues a resolution establishing a National Visiting Nurse Associations Week. Serving communities around the country for over 120 years, congressional recognition and gratitude for these nonprofit home health agencies is long over due. Currently, they are composed of 500 different associations and care for over 4,000,000 patients each year, many of whom are chronically ill and unable to pay medical expenses.

In a country crippled with staggering health care and medical costs, the Visiting Nurse Association continually and successfully works to achieve its mission of cost-effective and compassionate home and community-based health care to individuals, regardless of the individuals' condition or ability to pay for services. They are a leading provider of mass immunizations in the Medicare program and constitute over 50 percent of all Medicaid home health admissions. The association relies heavily upon volunteer nurses and reinvests any budget surplus into charity care, adult day care centers, wellness clinics, Meals-on-Wheels, and immunization programs.

This resolution would establish an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations Week in order to increase public awareness of the charity-based organization. They unquestionably deserve recognition for their noble services and by establishing this resolution Congress would support the continuation of their mission.

I am proud to recognize these invaluable contributions of our VNAs by cosponsoring this legislation.

IN HONOR OF RICHARD MUSELLA

HON. JANE HARMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Richard Musella on the occasion of his retirement as the Executive Director of the Westchester/LAX-Marina del Rey Chamber of Commerce.

Rich has been an active member of the greater Westchester community, for more than three decades. As Executive Director, a position he held for seven years, Rich oversaw the daily operations of the more than 650-member chamber, one of the largest in Los Angeles county. Among his many accomplishments is the implementation of the consolidation of the Westchester/LAX Chamber and the Marina del Rey Area Chamber to create the Westchester/LAX-Marina del Rey Chamber of Commerce in 1998. Rich has served on the board of the Westside Council of Chambers of Commerce and the South Bay Association of Chambers of Commerce.

In addition to his Chamber work, Rich has also made other important contributions to his community, serving on the boards of the Westchester Vitalization Corporation and the Flight Path Learning Center of Southern California, and as treasurer of the Rotary Club of Westchester. He has also served as the chair of the LAX Area Advisory Committee, president of the Marina del Rey Area Chamber of Commerce, and president of the Westchester Association.

On a personal note, Rich was instrumental in working with me and my staff to arrange important community meetings, including several forums related to homeland security in the wake of the September 11 attacks. He also helped host a highly successful small business forum which attracted more than 100 business owners from the area. Most notably, Rich was instrumental in bringing the community together for a 1997 event with then-U.S. Secretary of Defense William Cohen.

I want to thank Rich for his years of dedicated service to the greater Westchester community and his personal commitment to improving the quality of life in his hometown of Westchester and throughout the South Bay.

CONGRATULATING THE FRESNO AREA TAIWANESE ASSOCIATION

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Fresno Area Taiwanese Association on the occasion of celebrating the 91st Anniversary of the National Day of the Republic of China on Taiwan. The Fresno Area Taiwanese Association will be holding a flag raising ceremony in the Peace Garden at California State University, Fresno at 11:00 a.m. on Sunday, October 13th to commemorate this day.

In 1911, the Wuchang Uprising brought an end to dynastic rule in China and led to the re-establishment of the first republic in Asia. Dr. Sun Yat-Sen was the leader of this uprising and helped to found this new nation. Today, the people of Taiwan and throughout the nation celebrate this historic event with as much fervor as they had on the day of the uprising. Since its establishment, the Republic of China has made countless contributions to the world especially in the areas of economic and social development, science, and technology. Today, Taiwan continues to be one of the cornerstone democracies in Southwest Asia and I will certainly continue to support this thriving country.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to congratulate the Fresno Area Taiwanese Association on the occasion of the 91st National Day of the Republic of China on Taiwan. The cultural richness of Fresno is a direct result of an active and involved Chinese community and this has helped to strengthen and enhance the relationships in our Valley. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing the Fresno Area of Taiwanese Association many more years of continued success.

RECOGNITION OF STAFF SGT. DAVID LYNCH

HON. MAC COLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, 19-year-old Adam Gresham was swimming in the hotel pool at the Lafayette Garden Inn, in LaGrange, Georgia. Young Adam drowned in that pool, his breathing and pulse both stopped.

Not far from the hotel is the LaGrange-Callaway Airport, where spectators were enjoying an air show as part of the Delta Airlines Flyin and Airfest. Staff Sergeant Jason Lynch, is a U.S. Air Force A-10 mechanic with the 23rd Fighter Group at Pope Air Force Base, North Carolina, which was part of a demonstration team for the air show. SSgt. Lynch was staying at the hotel when he heard screams coming from the pool area. He immediately dropped what he was doing and responded. When he arrived, guests Barry Stetson and Neil Gray of Wanchese, N.C. and Roger Melville, of Stanley, N.C. were lifting the lifeless body of Adam from the pool. Calmly, Staff Sergeant Lynch asked onlookers to call 911 and began Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation on Adam, which he continued until emergency medical services arrived.

According to the Institute of Critical Medicine, the average survival rate for those receiving CPR is about three percent. That means that only 3 out of every 100 people needing CPR survive.

I am pleased to say that Adam Gresham is one of those lucky few.

Because of Staff Sergeant Lynch's quick thinking and level head, Adam Gresham, although still listed in critical condition at Western Georgia Medical Center, is alive today.

I would like to commend Staff Sergeant Lynch and the others for their heroic act and to encourage those hearing these comments to make the effort to learn this vital life-saving skill which saves thousands of lives each year.

TRIBUTE TO ANNETTE LEAHY

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Annette Leahy for her four years of outstanding service to Marlborough Hospital and the Marlborough Community.

Mrs. Leahy has been an active member of the community going above and beyond what her job required her to do. She served as a member of the Regional Chamber of Commerce, the Tri-Country United Way, the Marlborough Rotary Club, and the Boys and Girls Club. Additionally, Mrs. Leahy has volunteered at the local food pantry.

Mrs. Leahy holds degrees from Central Connecticut State University, University of Hartford and the Hartford Graduate Center. Her professional career brought her to Rockville General Hospital, where she served as Vice President for Planning and Administration, Chief Operating Officer, and Senior Vice President of Integrated Health Services.

Since 1998, Mrs. Leahy has been President of the Marlborough Hospital where she oversaw major renovations and expansions, allowing for expanded community outreach programs. In her honor, Marlborough Hospital has named a former lobby the "Annette Leahy Conference Room" to commemorate her achievements.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the entire U.S. House of Representatives joins me in congratulating Mrs. Annette Leahy for her stellar work at Marlborough Hospital, and wishes her best of luck as her career continues beyond Marlborough Hospital.

LIGHTS ON AFTERSCHOOL DAY 2002

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, October 10, in communities throughout the nation, Lights On Afterschool Events will be taking place. At schools, 4-H Clubs, Police Athletic clubs, YWCAs, in Mayor's offices and in state capitols, activities are planned that highlight the importance of providing safe, enriching environments for young people before and after school hours. These programs are important for working families, help improve academic outcomes for kids and help strengthen the fabric of community life. In my own state of Michigan over 200 events are planned on October 10 to educate families about available programs. America's children are our most precious resource. Their health, their safety, the quality of their education—these are responsibilities we all share. We have an obligation to ensure that every child has a genuine opportunity to succeed. The availability of Afterschool programs moves us toward that goal.

The 21st Century Community Learning Centers Program—by no means the only source of support for Afterschool programs—is a critical resource for all states. The No Child Left Behind Act—signed into law last January by President Bush—promises communities that need this help most, the funds necessary to sustain and develop high-quality Afterschool programs. Unfortunately, in many locations across America millions of children are left home alone, unsupervised, during the hours immediately after the school day ends. For too many of our children these hours are full of squandered opportunities for tutoring, mentoring, academic challenges, and physical, social and cultural development. Not surprisingly, this is a time of day when most juvenile crimes are committed and when more youth are vulnerable to drugs and teenage pregnancy. Lights On Afterschool is an opportunity to showcase the programs that do exist and build support for their expansion. Through the generous support of J.C. Penney, the Afterschool Alliance has nurtured the growth of the Lights on Afterschool campaign—this year events are taking place in 422 congressional districts. By next year that number will grow to 100%.

We all have a responsibility where the nation's young people are concerned—parents, educators, business leaders, community and faith-based organizations and legislators. Providing for the health and welfare of America's children is too big and too important a job to tackle alone. Afterschool programs offer the chance to improve academic achievement. They provide children with the opportunity to benefit from the mentoring of a role model. They help young students tackle the challenges and learn the value of reading at an early age. They ensure that youth have access to safe and anti-substance abuse activities. And for America's working parents they provide the confidence that their children are well cared for once the school day ends.

Beyond funding for the 21st Century Learning Centers Program, the No Child Left Behind Act, makes available federal Title I funds that can be used to provide supplemental educational services through afterschool programs. The Child Care Development Block Grant is another important resource to assist parents in obtaining high quality afterschool childcare.

I urge my colleagues to visit afterschool programs in your district, encourage local businesses to help sustain and expand these programs and fight for increased federal investment in the 21st Century Learning Center Program, Title I, and the CCDBG. Congratulations to the Afterschool Alliance, the Charles Stewart Mott Foundation, and J.C. Penney, the National Sponsor, and their partners: 4-H, Boys and Girls Clubs of America, Junior Achievement and the YMCA of the USA on their third successful Lights on Afterschool national awareness campaign.

TRIBUTE TO FRANCESC DE PAULA SOLER

HON. JOSÉ E. SERRANO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I welcome, once again, Mr. Francesc de Paula Soler, the gifted and prolific guitarist who played for us last fall at the Library of Congress. He is a world-renowned instrumentalist who will grace the Library of Congress for the second time on October 29, 2002.

Last year's concert soothed and lifted the spirits of those who attended, and this one will no doubt have the same effects. We learned first-hand why de Paula Soler is known throughout the world as the "Poet of the Guitar."

Born in Spain, to a family of artists, Francesc de Paula Soler grew up with the guitar. He received a rigorous and intense training with the classical instrument. As the student of two legendary guitarists, Andes Segovia and Narciso Yepes, de Paula Soler has become a legend in his own right.

He has played music halls and auditoriums throughout the United States and Europe, mesmerizing audiences of all ages and from all walks of life. Francesc de Paula Soler has been hard at work on his second album and CD called "El Polifemo de Oro," which is dedicated entirely to Spanish music for guitar. The musician has also been working on his next book "Guitar Technique Manual," because he takes his role as a mentor and teacher as seriously as his role as a guitarist. Amazingly, Mr. Soler has managed to work on his album and book while filling a busy tour schedule. He also instructs students in Master Classes and Seminars that he offers in the "Ctedra Ferran Sors" and in the "Escola Catalana de Guitarra."

I am grateful that Francese de Paula Soler has returned to Washington, DC to play for us again and urge all of my colleagues to come and enjoy an afternoon of his enchanted melodies.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF CARL THOMPSON

HON. TAMMY BALDWIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of Carl Thompson, who served as an advocate for Progressive values in the Wisconsin State Legislature for 32 years.

Mr. Thompson was the youngest delegate to the 1934 founding convention of the Progressive Party, and eventually led the Wisconsin Progressive Party into the newly reformed modern Democratic Party. After the Progressives took over the Democratic Party, they chose Carl as their first candidate for governor in 1948, and again in 1950. As a proponent of public financing of campaigns and keeping money out of politics, he ran for governor with only $10,000. His opponent spent 16 times as much, but Carl still received 45 percent of the vote.

As a State Legislator from Stoughton, he was a crusader for Progressive ideals. I admire his tireless efforts fighting for civil rights, women's rights, and for speaking for those who so often are not heard. Many of Wisconsin's laws we take for granted today, Carl brought to the attention of the State Legislature, even though they may have been unpopular at the time. His colleagues will tell you that they have considerable respect for him because he was not afraid to challenge the establishment.

Carl's leadership in the State Assembly and State Senate from 1952-1984 has left Wisconsin with a strong Progressive tradition. While his contemporaries left Wisconsin to go to Washington as Senators and Congressmen, he felt it was important to stay at home to fight for his causes in the conservative State Senate. He should be remembered for the positive impact he had as a founder of the modern Democratic Party of Wisconsin and the legacy that he has left for the people of Wisconsin.

TAIWAN CELEBRATES 91ST NATIONAL DAY

HON. STEVEN R. ROTHMAN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, as leaders and people on Taiwan celebrate their 91st National Day on October 10, 2002, I offer them my congratulations and wish them many more happy National Days in the future.

Much has been said about Taiwan's political achievements. It has a former political dissident as its tenth president, and people of Taiwan enjoy numerous political freedoms and protection of human rights. As political reforms are continuing, Taiwan will soon complete its total democratization.

In terms of economic achievements, Taiwan is one of the world's major economies. Our trade with Taiwan totaled $51.5 billion in 2001. We exported electrical machinery, optical instruments and parts, aircrafts, aircraft parts, organic chemicals, corn, and soybeans to Taiwan. Taiwan represents the 7th largest market for U.S. exports worldwide.

In other non-economic areas, I believe we must continue to supply Taiwan with defensive arms—to help Taiwan maintain peace in the Taiwan Strait. Also, the U.S. must take an active role in helping Taiwan join many important international organizations such as the United Nations and the World Health Organization.

The U.S. is also grateful for Taiwan's assistance in the fight against global terrorism. Immediately after September 11, Taiwan President Chen Shui-bian lost no time in condemning the brutal act against American civilians and offered resolute support of America's anti-terrorism campaign. Taiwan has also taken concrete actions. For instance, Taiwan has shared intelligence information with the United States, security at Taiwan airports has been heightened, legislative bills have been passed to stop money laundering which could aid terrorists, and humanitarian assistance has been provided to Afghan refugees. We appreciate Taiwan's help in combating global terrorism.

Again, congratulations to our good friends on Taiwan on their National Day.

RECOGNIZING THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA (TAIWAN)

HON. PETE SESSIONS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, this October 10th marks the 91st National Day of the Republic of China (Taiwan). On this important occasion, I wish to congratulate the leaders and the people of Taiwan.

Taiwan and the United States have a very productive relationship despite the lack of official relations. Taiwan has always been supportive of U.S. policies and actions. Last year, Taiwan was one of the first countries to come to our aid in our campaign against worldwide terrorism.

Taiwan's leaders have pledged whatever assistance we need, such as intelligence gathering, in our continuing war against terrorists. Apart from Taiwan's support of us in combating terrorism, Taiwan maintains close cooperation with us in many areas such as economics, politics, immigration, culture and education, science and technology, human rights, and environmental protection.

On the occasion of ROC's National Day, I urge all Americans to continue to lend their support to Taiwan.

America must continue to help Taiwan and the PRC resume dialogue, continue to supply Taiwan with the means to defend themselves, and ease unnecessary restrictions we have imposed upon Taiwan's representative offices in the United States and our "unofficial" official offices in Taiwan.

I am certain that relations between America and Taiwan will continue to grow. Taiwan is a free, democratic, and open society and shares the same ideals as we do.

On a foundation of mutual confidence and mutual benefit, bilateral relations between the United States and Taiwan will continue to grow.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ON SECTION 1032

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I am re-introducing a modest bill to remove incentives for corporations to bet on their own stock. In recent weeks, the Wall Street Journal has reported on the downside risk of this behavior, with several well-known and otherwise successful U.S. corporations forced to recognize hundreds of millions of dollars in losses when a stock price dramatically decreased. What was a successful game during the bull market, has turned into a risky venture in the bear market with corporations forced to buy back stock at prices greatly in excess of market value. A more pernicious aspect of this transaction is that some corporations take the 'best of both worlds.' If they bet right and the price rises, they will pay no tax on the gain; if they bet wrong and it declines, they will simply deduct the loss.

This legislation would apply Internal Revenue Code section 1032 to all derivative contracts. The impact of this change is to prohibit corporations from recognizing gain or loss in derivative transactions to the extent the derivative purchased by the corporation involves its own stock.

Section 1032 states that a corporation generally does not recognize gain or loss on the receipt of money or other property in exchange for its own stock. In addition, a corporation does not recognize gain or loss when it redeems its own stock for cash. Section 1032, as originally enacted in 1954, simply recognized that there was no true economic gain or loss in these transactions.

However, the 1984 Deficit Reduction Act extended this policy to option contracts, recognizing the potential for tax avoidance inherent in these contracts. Since that time, the financial industry has developed a number of new types of derivative products. My legislation merely updates current law to include in section 1032 current and future forms of these new types of financial instruments.

On June 16, 1999, the Tax Section of the New York State Bar Association issued a report on section 1032 which recommended the changes discussed above. In addition, building on the work of the Treasury Department's budget recommendation, the Bar Association also recommended that Congress require a corporation that retires its stock and "substantially contemporaneously" enters into a contract to sell its stock forward at a fixed price, to recognize as income a time-value element. In effect, these two transactions provide a corporation with income that is economically similar to interest income but is tax-free. This legislation includes a provision that recognizes a time-value element, i.e., the version recommended by the Bar Association. The effective date of this legislation is for transactions entered into after date of enactment.

The problem identified in 1984 and in 1999 by the Department of the Treasury is best described in the New York State Bar Association Report. The report states, "We are concerned that all the inconsistencies described above (both in the general scope of section 1032 and in its treatment of retirements combined with forward sales) present whipsaw and abuse potential; the government faces the risk that income from some transactions will not be recognized even though those transactions are economically equivalent to taxable transactions. In addition, the government faces the risk that deductions are allowed for losses from transactions that are equivalent in substance to transactions that would produce nontaxable income, or—because taxpayers may take different positions under current law—even in the same form as such transactions. To avoid these inconsistencies, we believe it is necessary to amend section 1032.”

Mr. Speaker, I consider the legislation I am introducing today to be a normal house-keeping chore, something the Committee on Ways and Means has done many times in the past and hopefully will do so in the near future in order to preserve the original intent of the law. As such, I hope it will be seen both in Congress and in the industry as relatively non-controversial, and that it can be added to an appropriate tax bill early in the next Congress. Despite the disappointing record this Congress has compiled to address the fallout from Enron, WorldCom, Tyco and other recent corporate failures, I am hopeful that the next Congress will quickly respond to eliminate provisions in our tax law encouraging such risky behavior by corporations.

TRIBUTE TO REGINA FISHER ORIOLO

HON. TOM UDALL
OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Regina Fisher Oriol, who died in May of this year. She was a loving and caring wife and mother and a tireless champion in the fight to eliminate drunk-driving.

Born into a military family, Regina's primary home was Kentucky, where her Army career father was stationed at Fort Knox. Upon graduating from high school, she became a welder, a rare profession for a woman, and rose to the top of her field. Sadly, she was exposed to poor working conditions and developed “metal fume fever,” which left her lungs permanently damaged. Deciding to end her career, which now included college welding instruction in western New Mexico, Regina became a full-time wife to husband, John, and a stay-at-home mom to son, Raymond, and daughter, Margaret.

In 1996, Regina's retired father, Franklin, was tragically killed by a drunk driver and, soon after, five others, from one family, were killed in the same manner in the Four Corners area of northwestern New Mexico. Determined to make a difference in the state's DWI fatality rate, Regina created the DWI “Victims' Remembrance Wall,” which displayed photographs and stories of victims of drunk drivers, and she was instrumental in the Wall becoming ing a traveling exhibit that raised public awareness. The display was placed on view several times in the state Capitol Rotunda in Santa Fe, drawing the attention of the governor, other state officials, and state legislators.

Regina's DWI eradication efforts continued. Because of assistance from her and many others, drive-up liquor windows were closed during my tenure as New Mexico's Attorney General. Regina also worked with state officials in implementing a state highway sign program to remind motorists not to drive while drinking. Over 130 signs now stand in various areas of New Mexico that both warn drivers of DWI and offer tribute to specific victims. The same program has been adopted in other states. Regina was subsequently named the first “Traffic Safety Ambassador of New Mexico” by the New Mexico Department of Transportation.

Regina's dedication was not limited to DWI-related events. She became a public servant volunteer with the local Child Support Division of state government, where she offered remedies to problems related to child support collection and distribution. Regina's efforts helped to increase funding for staff increases, procedure updates, and security enhancements.

Tragedy again struck Regina and her husband, John, in 1999 when both their son, Raymond, two days short of 17, and daughter Margaret, 11, were killed by an inattentive driver while passengers in a friend's car. Even though devastation and a broken heart were now constant companions, Regina continued to work faithfully on the causes in which she so passionately believed.

Regina Fisher Oriol was a generous, compassionate and remarkable individual, whose humanitarian efforts will never be forgotten. I ask my colleagues to join me today in recognizing the life of this extraordinary woman.

IN RECOGNITION OF REVEREND C.C. CAMPBELL GILLON

HON. KEN BENTSEN
OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Reverend C.C. Campbell Gillon, on the occasion of his retirement from his pastoral duties at the Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown located in Washington, D.C., where he has faithfully served his congregation for more than 23 years. His retirement comes at the end of fifty years in the ministry.

The Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown has over two hundred years of distinguished history, beginning in 1780, under the eminent Stephen Bloomer Balch, pupil of religious leader John Witherspoon and soldier of the Revolution. The church serves as the first Presbyterian Church in what was to become modern-day Washington, D.C., and the oldest church of any denomination with an unbroken ministry. A rare charter, still in effect, was granted in 1806 to “the Presbyterian Congregation in George Town” by an act of Congress signed by President Thomas Jefferson. The Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown, pioneered in both the religious and cultural life of the community, has served as a cornerstone of faith in our nation's capital, attracting a wide variety of worshipers from political leaders to those seeking spiritual direction.

Rev. Campbell Gillon was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, into a family immersed in the Christian spirit. Both his father and uncles preceded him as ministers of the Church of Scotland. After three years of Army service at the end of World War II, he graduated with a Master of Arts degree from the University of Glasgow before studying theology at Trinity College, Glasgow, under the tutelage of Professor William Barclay, the noted Scottish New Testament scholar. In 1952, Rev. Gillon began an exceptional career that has spanned 50 years, with his first appointment to the historic Buittle Parish in southwest Scotland. The rest of his 27-year ministry in the Church of Scotland was spent in Glasgow, where he presided over the Milton Saint Stephen's Church. Under his extraordinary leadership, Rev. Gillon's beloved church was united with the noted Renfield Church Center, and was expanded to include a public restaurant, concert hall, and other community oriented facilities. In 1978, Rev. Gillon and his wife Audrey visited the Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown on a six-week work exchange, not knowing how their lives would forever be changed. Soon after his short stay, he returned to his 800-year old parish, the prestigious Cathcart Old Parish, only to receive a call from the Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown with an offer to join their church family as the senior minister.

Rev. Gillon has earned a reputation of being one of the most thoughtful and provocative interpreters of Christian experience, and has shared his insight and experiences with those who seek knowledge and guidance. He has published, Words of Trust, a book of sermons produced in both the United States and the United Kingdom. As a testament to his leadership and wisdom, excerpts from Rev. Gillon's sermons have been featured in newspapers, magazines, and Christian publications around the world.

While Rev. Gillon's religious and spiritual obligations to his growing congregation have always been paramount, as a community leader, he has shared his faith and free time as Chaplain of the Saint Andrew's Society of Washington, D.C., a charitable and social organization of men of Scottish birth or ancestry.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when our nation and many across the world were seeking explanations and direction following the horrific attacks of September 11th, terrorism, and war, Rev. Gillon provided comfort after the storm with his prayer before the House of Representatives and a moving sermon before his congregation. He reminded us that suffering is only temporary, and God's love is forever. Deeply rooted in the traditions of Scotland and the Scottish preachers that preceded him, Rev. Gillon has dedicated himself to the principles of the Presbyterian faith, his congregation and his family.

In his own words, Rev. Gillon captured the sentiments of the entire congregation, “never does the heart wish a good relationship to end.” I want to thank Campbell for his leadership, spiritual guidance and devotion to the Presbyterian Congregation in Georgetown, the Washington, D.C. community, and the many lives he and his wife Audrey have touched throughout his career. He leaves a legacy of good work and grace that will be missed.

RECOGNIZING NATIONAL BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

HON. MICHAEL E. CAPUANO

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the month of October as National Breast Cancer Awareness Month. As we acknowledge the progress that has been made toward finding a cure for this deadly disease, let us also place a special emphasis on the importance of continued research, mammography coverage and treatment options.

All women are at risk for breast cancer. The causes of this disease are not fully understood and researchers are still unsure how to prevent it. This year alone, an estimated 203,000 American women will be diagnosed with breast cancer, and almost 40,000 will die as a result of their illness. The good news however, is there are steps every woman can take that will make developing breast cancer less likely. These include a healthy diet, exercising regularly, limiting alcohol intake and an annual mammogram. Regular screenings remain the most effective way to identify breast cancer in its earliest and most treatable stages. For women 40 and over, having mammograms every 1 to 2 years can significantly reduce the risk of dying from breast cancer.

To prevent breast cancer, we must increase awareness of its risk factors and causes. Age and genetic factors have been shown to increase risk, and researchers are now exploring how diet and hormonal factors are linked to possible causes. This information will help women and their doctors make more informed health care choices. Although mammography use has risen, many women are still not making mammography screening part of their routine health care.

Women age 65 and older are less likely to get mammograms than younger women, even though breast cancer risk increases dramatically with age. In addition, Hispanic women have fewer mammograms than Caucasian women and African American women. While mammography rates are increasing for women with health insurance, they have remained low for women without coverage, according to the Commonwealth Fund Surveys of Women's Health. Women below poverty level are less likely to have had a mammogram within the past two years. New efforts are needed to reach older women, racial and ethnic minorities, and women of low income.

Chances of survival are greater if the disease is detected early. In fact, when breast cancer is confined to the breast, the 5-year survival rate is over 95 percent. Researchers and physicians have made tremendous progress in understanding this disease and working toward a cure, but much remains to be done. We must still focus on risk factors, prevention, early detection, diagnosing and staging, treatment, and support care. As we recognize National Breast Cancer Awareness Month let us remember all of those who have lost loved ones to this disease and let us also dedicate this month to all the victims, survivors, volunteers and professionals who combat breast cancer each day.

RECOGNIZING RICHARD LIPPE

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Richard Lippe, one of New York's most outstanding attorneys. Mr. Lippe has received the Distinguished Leadership Award 2002 from the Coalition on Child Abuse and Neglect. This organization honors individuals who have made lasting contributions in communities.

Mr. Lippe is the leader of the Corporate and Technology Law Group at Meltzer, Lippe, Goldstein & Schlissel, LLP. In 2001, the Long Island Business News named him one of the top 30 attorneys on Long Island. In June of 2002, Governor Pataki appointed Mr. Lippe to the New York State Science, Technology and Academic Research Advisory Council for a second term.

Along with his many professional contributions, he is also very involved in the community. Richard Lippe is a founder, general counsel and member of the Board of Directors of the Long Island Software and Technology Network. He also serves as general counsel and member of the Board of Directors of the Long Island Life Services Initiative. Mr. Lippe is a member of the Board of Trustees of Huntington Hospital, the Nassau County Museum of Fine Art, and the Stony Brook Foundation.

In addition to Mr. Lippe's professional accomplishments and community involvement, he and his wife Camila are the proud parents of three children (two grown), Wendy, David and Michael. It is with great enthusiasm that I congratulate the Lippe family on this wonderful honor.

NATIONAL CRANBERRY MONTH

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that Secretary of Agriculture Veneman has proclaimed October of this year National Cranberry Month. The district I have the privilege of representing is one of the most productive in our country in the growing of cranberries, and of course, given that cranberries are native to the U.S., this means Southeastern Massachusetts is one of the most important cranberry growing areas in the world. Cranberry growers have been strong contributors to the economy of Massachusetts, to the protection of open space and other environmental values, and to the addition of nutritious fruit to the American diet. I appreciate Secretary Veneman's proclamation underlining the importance of the growth and processing of cranberries in so many ways and I ask that this proclamation be printed here.

NATIONAL CRANBERRY MONTH, OCTOBER 2002 A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the cranberry has had a long tradition in North America, first used by Native Americans to make pemmican, a convenience food that kept for long periods of time, as an ingredient in medicine, as a natural dye of clothing, as a symbol of peace, and later as a source of sustenance for the Pilgrims;

Whereas during the early days of this country's history, when wooden ships sailed the seven seas, American vessels carried cranberries across the globe in wooden barrels knowing that eating this fruit help prevent scurvy, long before medical science discovered cranberries are a valuable source of vitamin C;

Whereas cranberries are now one of three native fruits still commercially produced today;

Whereas cranberry growers have shown their commitment to environmental stewardship by using integrated pest management to reduce pesticide use, practicing water conservation and preserving, protecting, and creating wetlands and open space which provide habitat for a diversity of wildlife, including many threatened or endangered species;

Whereas the annual production of cranberries has increased from 300,000 pounds a century ago to over 600,000,000 pounds today as consumers worldwide discover the many uses of this healthy fruit;

Whereas multiple clinical trials and related scientific studies have conclusively documented the unique ability of the cranberry to help maintain urinary tract health, due to the variety and level of its natural components;

Whereas the cranberry has long played an important role in American food, culture, and tradition, including the celebration of our Thanksgiving;

Therefore in proclaiming October "National Cranberry Month" I urge all citizens of the United States of America to join with our cranberry farmers to recognize and celebrate the cranberry, a healthy, colorful, and truly American fruit.

INTRODUCTION OF STOP ENABLERS OF FRAUD ACT

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Stop Enablers of Fraud Act, which eliminates the exemption that shields accounting firms, investment banks, and other professional services firms from liability in private suits when they assist their clients to commit securities fraud. This exemption was created as a result of the Supreme Court's 1994 decision in Central Bank of Denver v. First Interstate Bank of Denver, which precluded private parties from recovering damages from those who assist in the perpetration of fraudulent activities. Congressional action reaffirmed the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) to bring cases against aiders and abettors of securities fraud, but the SEC's limited resources and heavy workload have prevented it from pursuing every meritorious case against firms that help their clients engage in fraud.

Recent results of the Commission's pursuit of aiders and abettors have been disappointing for investors defrauded with the assistance of professional services firms that possess the specialized expertise required to construct elaborate securities schemes. According to the SEC, between August 2001 and May 2002, the Commission filed or instituted 40 initial actions for aiding and abetting violations of the federal securities laws. For the 22 matters that had been concluded as of May 2002, 4 included orders of disgorgement of ill-gotten gains. The total amount ordered disgorged by the SEC in the four actions was a mere $321,368.87. With an estimated $3 billion in losses suffered by state pension systems as a result of the Enron debacle alone and investors nationwide facing unlikely prospects of recovery due to the insolvency of the alleged primary violator, the bar against private parties seeking damages from the aiders and abettors of fraud should be lifted. Disgorgement of individual profits can never amount to more than a trifle compared to investors' losses on the open market. Disgorgement applies only to forfeiture of the ill-gotten profits reaped from the fraud, which typically represents only a fraction of what investors actually lost from the securities scheme. The ability to recover damages from aiders and abettors in private securities suits would compensate investors for their actual losses, not merely force defendants to surrender profits from their securities violations. As a result of Central Bank, defrauded investors are short-changed, forced to settle for a fraction of their actual losses, if they are able to recover any funds at all.

The Stop Enablers of Fraud Act responds to the series of corporate scandals that have illuminated the integral, albeit supporting, role that professional services firms sometimes play in the design, implementation and validation of fraudulent activities conducted by their clients. In their responses to the consolidated complaint in the pending Enron litigation, professional services firms frequently have cited the Central Bank precedent as they seek to have the charges against them dismissed, arguing that aiders and abettors are immune from liability for fraud alleged in private suits. For example, Merrill Lynch's motion to dismiss states, in relevant part:

[I]n recent years two developments have effected tectonic shifts in the law governing federal securities fraud actions, especially those pled not against the issuer of the securities in question but rather against the peripheral professional organizations who provided services to the issuer. Those two developments were (a) the enactment of the Private Litigation Securities Reform Act (sic) . . . and (b) the Supreme Court's decision in Central Bank of Denver N.A. v. First Interstate Bank of Denver . . . The Section 10(b) claims alleged against Merrill Lynch must be dismissed . . . [because] plaintiffs' principal theory of liability against Merrill Lynch . . . is precluded by the Supreme Court's holding in Central Bank.

While it remains to be seen whether such arguments will prove decisive in the Enron case, Central Bank nevertheless poses a significant risk to investors who, defrauded by a firm that subsequently became insolvent, may be deprived of recovering losses from the remaining entities that helped to enable the fraud to occur in the first place. It is clear from last week's Justice Department criminal complaint against Enron's former Chief Financial Officer Andrew Fastow that Mr. Fastow did not act alone. The Justice Department's complaint states "Enron at least once enlisted a major financial institution to assist in its financial statement manipulation." During Senate hearings held in July, the financial institution was identified as Merrill Lynch.

The Stop Enablers of Fraud Act overturns the Supreme Court's decision in Central Bank and restores the ability of individuals to bring private suits against those who aid and abet a securities fraud. For decades prior to the Court's decision, firms that assisted their clients to perpetrate fraud had been held accountable for their role in fraudulent activities. Individuals who have been defrauded as a result of the machinations of Mr. Fastow and those who aided and abetting Enron's frauds should not be blocked from pursuing private suits to recover their losses. Empowering individuals to hold accountable the enablers of securities fraud will compel accountants, securities firms, and attorneys to consider the potential litigation risks before they help their clients commit fraud. The exposure of aiders and abettors to liability in private suits is in the best interest of investors and the marketplace. The Stop Enablers of Fraud Act also serves as an important deterrent effect for those who, tempted by the pursuit of profit, may reconsider becoming an accomplice to the type of securities frauds that have so damaged the financial health of Americans across the country.

CELEBRATING TAIWAN'S
NATIONAL DAY: OCTOBER 10, 2002

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extend my best wishes and congratulations to the leaders and citizens of Taiwan as they celebrate their 91st National Day.

Despite our lack of formal relations with the Republic of China on Taiwan, we enjoy a flourishing relationship. Speaking in New York, Secretary of State Colin Powell recently called Taiwan a "success story" and noted that Taiwan has become a resilient economy, a vibrant democracy and a generous contributor to the international community.

Indeed, Taiwan's economy has grown tremendously in recent decades. Taiwan is the United States' eighth-largest trading partner and seventh-largest export market. Our exports to Taiwan in 2001 totaled $18.2 billion. Taiwan's importance as a world economy was evidenced by its accession to the World Trade Organization earlier this year, the culmination of twelve years of collaborative efforts with the U.S.

Over the past several decades, Taiwan has also become a successful model of rapid political reform. Taiwan today is home to more than ninety political parties, and virtually every political office is hotly contested through free and fair elections. Just two years ago, Mr. Chen Shui-bian, a former political dissident, was elected the tenth president of the Republic of China.

Taiwan is making significant contributions to the international community, and I know that our bilateral relations will only grow stronger in the coming years. Mr. Speaker, I know you and all our colleagues join me in sending congratulations to the people of Taiwan on this special day.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Oakland City Councilman, Dick Spees, for a remarkable 24-year career in public service.

Dick Spees has represented Oakland's District 4 since 1979. He was elected to fill an unexpired term and was reelected in 1981, 1985, 1990, 1994 and 1998. He served as Vice Mayor of Oakland in 1983 and 1984 and again in 1994 and presently serves on four of the Oakland City Council's committees.

When Councilman Spees is not meeting with residents, participating in City Council meetings, attending community events or working diligently as founder of the Chabot Space and Science Center, you will probably find him at a meeting with one of the many boards and committees dedicated to developing Oakland. These boards and committees include: Governing Board, Oakland Base Reuse Authority; Co-Chair, BART-Airport Connector Stakeholders Committee; Executive Board, Association of Bay Area Governments; Member, Regional Airport Planning Committee; Executive Committee Chair, Chabot Observatory & Science Center; Vice Chair, Bay Area World Trade Center; Founder and Vice Chair, Oakland-Sharing the Vision, the Strategic Plan for Oakland; Member, Oakland Education Cabinet.

Dick Spees is not only an exemplary member of the Oakland City Council, but he goes far beyond the call of duty which is demonstrated through his work and dedication to many projects. For example, he spends many hours developing the District's neighborhood groups, developing and marketing the Chabot Space and Science Center, completing funding for a BART-Oakland Airport Connector, and advocating in Washington and Sacramento for various Oakland programs. He loves and cares for the people and the City of Oakland, California.

The City of Oakland has benefitted tremendously from the leadership and commitment of this remarkable public servant. I am proud to call Dick my friend and colleague. I ask Congress to join me and the constituents of California's Ninth Congressional District as we bid farewell and wish Councilman Dick Spees a long and happy retirement.

IN RECOGNITION OF EDWIN "MAX"
KURLAND

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate my friend and very first coach, Edwin "Max" Kurland, on being awarded the Saint Patrick Academy Crystal Shamrock Award for his dedication as a coach and teacher, his loyalty to his many friends, and his devotion to the Christian Brothers ministry. Max is truly the heart of the St. Patrick Academy Community.

Edwin "Max" Kurland was born and raised the youngest of three children on the west side of Chicago. He attended Blessed Sacrament Elementary School and the Quigley Seminary before receiving a sociology degree from Loyola University in 1954. After a tour in the United States Army, he began his career at Blessed Sacrament.

I first met Max in 1951 when I was in seventh grade at Blessed Sacrament School. That was the year I was selected by Max to play on the "Blessed Sacrament 16" Softball team. He was a great coach and teacher, not only for sports, but also for everyday living.

Affectionately nicknamed "Max," he joined the St. Patrick faculty in 1954 as an assistant to Coach Dick Triptow. When Triptow left in 1959, Max began his career as head basketball coach that would span over thirty-five years.

With 653 wins, he ranks as one of the top ten coaches in Illinois history. Max was named East Suburban Catholic Conference Coach of the Year three times while winning ten conference championships, eleven State Regional titles, and one Sectional championship. His teams also won fourteen Thanksgiving Tournaments, two Chicagoland Prep Tournaments and six Christmas Tournament titles. Max was inducted into the Illinois Basketball Hall of Fame in 1980 as well as the Chicago Catholic League Coaches Hall of Fame in 1994. To top off his prestigious career, Coach Kurland became a charter member of the Shamrock Hall of Fame in 1995.

Outside of basketball, Max has been recognized by the Christian Brothers, receiving the LaSallian Award in 1982 and the Signum Fidei Award in 1994.

Mr. Speaker, Max Kurland has been a devoted coach and teacher and he continues to serve the community through his leadership. I would ask that my colleagues join me in honoring this truly dedicated and courageous man.

A TRIBUTE TO THE ST. LOUIS
GATEWAY CLASSIC SPORTS FOUNDATION

HON. WM. LACY CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today in tribute to the St. Louis

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Gateway Classic Sports Foundation and its president, Earl Wilson, Jr. On Sunday, September 29, 2002, the Sports Foundation hosted the grand opening of its new 15,000-square-foot, $2.7 million headquarters. The building, located at 202 Dr. Martin Luther King Drive in St. Louis, Missouri, will house office space, a computer lab, gymnasium, auditorium, state-of-the-art boxing area, banquet facilities and classrooms. In addition a "Walk of Fame," which lined the sidewalk outside the new building was unveiled. The "Walk" honors African-Americans from Missouri who have made a positive impact on the St. Louis community and the nation.

As the Representative of the 1st Congressional District in Missouri, I was proud to participate in the opening of the new facility. Since its founding in 1994, the Gateway Classic Foundation has sent a strong message to our young people that someone cares about them, that someone will invest in their skills and talents and provide positive alternatives to negative influences. The Foundation's community outreach has increasingly emphasized the importance of building a better future for the youth in St. Louis, through programs that target their educational, health, intellectual, physical, social, and spiritual development.

Every year, the Foundation stages the Gateway Classic college football game and hosts other sporting events such as high school basketball tournaments, track and field competitions and boxing matches. In nine years, the Foundation has donated more than $2.9 million to local charitable organizations and has awarded 35 full, 4-year scholarships to students to attend Historically Black Colleges and Universities.

The 17 "Walk of Fame" inductees are true heroes, not just to the black community, but to our nation as a whole. In sports and entertainment, the inductees were: Jackie Joyner Kersee, Elston Howard, Dick Gregory, and members of the 5th Dimension.

In government, the inductees were: Congresswoman MAXINE WATERS, former St. Louis Mayor Freeman Bosley, Jr., U.S. Army General Roscoe Robinson, Jr., U.S. Army Air Corps officer Wendell Pruitt, former St. Louis Alderman Wayman Smith, Jr., and former Congressman William L. Clay, Sr.

Other inductees were: Reverend James E. Cook, Dr. Julia Davis, Civil Rights activist Percy Green, Nanny Turner Mitchell, Homer G. Phillips, Margaret Bush Wilson, and Nathan B. Young.

All of these inductees are priceless assets to the St. Louis Community and the nation. I salute them for their achievements and commend the Foundation for seeking to honor these individuals.

The Foundation also recognized and presented special awards to its minority contractors for their part in the construction of the new headquarters. The minority owned component included; Interface Construction Company, contractor; Fleming Corporation, architect, and Kwame Building Group, construction manager.

In closing, I would like to extend "Birthday Greetings" to Earl Wilson, Jr., who celebrated his 70th Birthday yesterday. On behalf of his family and many friends in the 1st Congressional District, I wish him good health, continued success and many more birthday celebrations!

ACTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT OF KAZAKHSTAN

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to a news report concerning the ongoing undemocratic actions of the President of Kazakhstan. In the Wall Street Journal report that I would ask to insert into the RECORD today, the correspondent Steve LeVine detailed a series of bizarre actions by President Nazarbayev to silence his critics from within the government, to silence any opposition from the news media and to further consolidate his power. I believe it is important for members of this body to pay closer attention to developments in the former Soviet Republics in central Asia, particularly as some drift quickly away from democratic rule.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 12, 2002]

CASPIAN INTRIGUE: ODD FAMILY DRAMA IN KAZAKHSTAN DIMS DEMOCRATIC HOPES — PETROLEUM-RICH LAND'S RULER SMACKS DOWN SON-IN-LAW AND SUNDRY CHALLENGERS — OIL COMPANIES FEEL HEAT, TOO

(By Steve LeVine)

ALMATY, Kazakhstan.—In three frenzied days last November, government troops raided a television station, offices and homes and took up positions at the airport. Their target: anything connected to a powerful son-in-law of Kazakhstan's long-ruling president, Nursultan Nazarbayev.

"Karavan newspaper has been closed, KTK-TV has been closed and censorship has been imposed in the country," read a message greeting viewers tuned to the TV station, which, like the newspaper, belonged to the family of the son-in-law, Rakhat Aliyev. He, meanwhile, played a cat-and-mouse game with his father-in-law, stealing in and out of Western embassies and hinting that he might like political protection abroad.

So began a bizarre drama in this oil-rich Central Asian land while the world's eyes were riveted on a war just to its south, in Afghanistan. It is a drama that does nothing to encourage those hoping for a softening of authoritarian rule in the region.

The events include the sidelining not only of Mr. Aliyev but of nearly all other potential challengers to the Kazakh president. One politician who proposed limits on presidential power has just drawn a seven-year prison term. Eight journalists or news organizations that criticized members of the Kazakhstan first family have faced harassment, one paper finding a headless dog on the doorstep.

The crackdown reflects a broad trend in a region about which the U.S. had high hopes. Since the early 1990s, former Soviet republics in Central Asia and the Caucasus have drawn intense interest from the U.S. America has been eager to tap into these countries' energy reserves—of which Kazakhstan's are by far the richest—and to see them establish open economies and democratic rule.

And in the past year, the U.S. has developed another vital interest in this region:

military alliances for the war on terrorism. As U.S. forces moved into Afghanistan last fall, the U.S. established military arrangements with six former Soviet republics. Mr. Nazarbayev has wholeheartedly supported the war on terrorism and permitted the U.S. to use Kazakhstan airfields for emergency landings.

Though the Central Asian countries initially encouraged hopes for democratic rule, they have veered further and further from the democratic path. Uzbekistan, for instance, tolerates no political dissent, despite the destruction in Afghanistan last year of its exiled Islamic opposition. Turkmenistan's president, Saparmurat Niyazov, has just renamed the days of the week and the months of the year in honor of himself and matters dear to his heart.

Mr. Nazarbayev's crackdown has been especially dispiriting, because the 62-year-old Kazakh president has been considered one of the region's more tolerant leaders. Day-to-day life in Kazakhstan, with busy Internet cafes and vibrant shopping, is open and relaxed. But this doesn't include venturing into politics without the president's blessing. His reassertion of power leaves another of the world's major oil-producing nations under authoritarian rule.

A U.S. State Department spokesman, Phil Recker, said last month: "The U.S. believes that recent developments in Kazakhstan, such as the new restrictive legislation regarding political parties and the ongoing harassment of opposition figures and the independent media, pose a serious threat to the country's democratic process." Mr. Nazarbayev and others in his government declined repeated requests for comment.

Politics isn't the only arena feeling the Kazakh government's new assertiveness. The government is pressuring some Western companies operating here to renegotiate long-signed contracts. For instance, the government has fined Chevron Texaco Corp. $73 million for storing sulfur. Chevron says its contract permits this and is fighting the fine. Washington has protested the recent business interference.

These are the latest trials for a land that has seen many, including great tragedies. In the 1930s, Stalin forced the nomadic Kazakhs, accustomed to wandering the steppes with sheep and camels, to settle down and learn to raise crops. An estimated 1.5 million people died of starvation during this period. Stalin also used Kazakhstan, a sprawling land of temperature extremes, as a kind of western Siberia. He exiled hundreds of thousands here—including the whole population of Chechnya, relocated en masse in 1944. The Soviets also did their nuclear testing in one corner of Kazakhstan.

Mr. Nazarbayev, a former steelworker who rose through Communist Party ranks, has ruled Kazakhstan since 1989 through a simple lever: the power to name and shuffle virtually every minister, governor and judge. Early on, he appointed enough young, reform-minded officials to fuel the optimism of those who hoped for a democratic future. But in the mid-1990s, he began moving relatives into powerful positions. Then three years ago, he grew more self-protective after coming under suspicion of stowing funds in Swiss bank accounts.

Mr. Nazarbayev named his eldest son-in-law, Mr. Aliyev, now 39, to senior positions first in the Tax Police and then the security agency KNB, local successor to the KGB. Another son-in-law, Timur Kulibayev, 35, was put in charge of oil-and-gas transportation and now is deputy chief of an agency that oversees most oil industry.

Both became powerful in business as well. Mr. Aliyev grew rich through sugar trading and other enterprises. Members of his family bought control of three TV stations, a bank called Nurbank, a regional carrier called Atyrau Airlines and the largest-circulation newspaper, Karavan.

The other son-in-law, Mr. Kulibayev, gained control of another bank, oil-field interests and a caviar-trading monopoly, say people familiar with the deals. In one instance, a government company Mr. Kulibayev headed did a $150 million Eurobond financing to help build an export pipeline to an oil field called Alibekmola—a field in which, say people familiar with the matter, Mr. Kulibayev himself owns a 17.5% stake.

Mr. Kulibayev declined to be interviewed. Mr. Aliyev, in interviews before his clash with the president, said his own business dealings were appropriate. President Nazarbayev has said it is fine for his relatives to be in business and government simultaneously so long as they don't break the law.

In recent years, new laws have tightened Mr. Nazarbayev's grip on power. One passed in 1998 barred anyone convicted of a legal infraction from running for election—a potent tool, since among illegal acts here is any criticism that "insults the honor and dignity of the president."

In 1999, a Swiss judge, suspecting money laundering, froze about 11 Swiss bank accounts that he said appeared to belong to Mr. Nazarbayev or other leading Kazakhs. The U.S. Justice Department joined the probe in 2000. It empaneled a grand jury to hear allegations that $35 million of oil-company money had been funneled to Swiss accounts appearing to belong to Kazakhstan political figures. The U.S. probe advanced a bit this week as a federal judge in New York endorsed the grand jury's right to see certain documents.

In Kazakhstan, however, it was Mr. Aliyev, the oldest son-in-law of the president, who was becoming the lightning rod. As head of the Tax Police, he raised hackles by moving about Almaty with hulking policemen trained in martial arts, staging televised raids on suspected tax-dodgers, terrorists and narcotics traders. Business rivals and political opponents saw his tactics as intimidation.

Mr. Aliyev dismissed his critics as people who thought they were above the law. "To force someone to abide by the law is difficult, and nobody likes it when discipline and order are demanded of them," he said in an interview a year ago.

But last fall, two prominent Kazakhs—a provincial governor and a tycoon—launched a campaign against Mr. Aliyev. Their allies stood up in parliament to accuse him of demanding "tribute" from businessmen. The critics also suggested Mr. Aliyev was disloyal to the president.

One critic, Galimzhan Zhakianov, the provincial governor, linked Mr. Aliyev to a Web site that had carried allegations of bribe-taking by the president. (Mr. Aliyev denied the link.)

A newspaper owned by the other critic, media and banking tycoon Mukhtar Ablyazov, stated that Mr. Aliyev was "pushing to become the top leader of the country. The President is in danger. . . . It's his time to act!"

As rumors grew that Mr. Aliyev was plotting a coup, the campaign against him found allies among top aides to his father-in-law, the president. One presidential aide demanded Mr. Aliyev's resignation. Mr. Aliyev said he would quit only at the president's personal request. And in a veiled threat to reveal corruption, he warned the aide there would be "big, big problems" if anything happened to him.

Mr. Aliyev then vanished. The next day, Nov. 16, armed troops staged their sweep through Almaty in search of him. Mr. Aliyev slipped into the U.S. and French embassies, hinting that he might exchange sensational revelations in return for protection, according to one diplomat.

The strange standoff ended on the third day, as President Nazarbayev and Mr. Aliyev made a joint television appearance. The president said his son-in-law would now serve on his personal guard, which was a big demotion from his previous role. Mr. Aliyev said he was the victim of "slandorous" talk, and was just fighting the "scum that [blocks] healthy forces in society."

But Mr. Aliyev's demotion had emboldened his critics—and they now overplayed their hand. The two main critics made plans to release documents concerning Kazakh-owned Swiss bank accounts, according to their political associates. They also announced a new political party, in league with certain reform-minded businessmen and members of the government.

The president asked them one by one what they wanted. They pressed him to loosen his grip on power, strengthen Parliament and allow the election of local leaders. Mr. Zhakianov, in particular, may have gone too far. He warned the president that he risked a fate like that of Indonesia's Suharto, who was forced ignominiously from office.

Mr. Nazarbayev seemed taken aback. Mr. Zhakianov said in an interview last December. "He was shocked over what happened with Rakhat [Aliyev]. . . . He was in shock over what happened with us because young people working under him were talking about political reform and the need to change the system." Still, the reformers were convinced Mr. Nazarbayev would meet at least a few of their demands.

Instead, three days later, he fired all the political appointees in the group—Mr. Zhakianov, a minister and three deputy ministers. Later, he branded the critics "Bolsheviks," likening their call for greater parliamentary authority to an early Communist refrain.

Then followed a series of unexplained assaults on the Kazakh news media. The body of a headless dog was found in front of a weekly paper called the Republic, and the dog's head outside the editor's apartment. Four journalists were seriously beaten.

Shortly after a journalist named Lira Baisetova wrote a story critical of Mr. Nazarbayev, her 25-year-old daughter, Leyla, vanished, then died. The authorities said she hanged herself while in police custody. Human Rights Watch in New York and the Paris-based Journalists Without Borders raised questions about how she died, after opposition figures claimed she had been beaten. The government said it had nothing to do with her death or with any of the attacks on the news media.

In March, the government arrested one of the leading governmental critics, Mr. Ablyazov, the publishing and banking tycoon.

Now it was the turn of Mr. Zhakianov, the reform-minded provincial governor, to find himself on the run and in hiding. Police raided a hotel, searching room to room for him. He was there, but eluded the troops, and then slipped away to a scheduled meeting at the French embassy.

Police learned of the meeting and encircled the embassy. They pried off manhole covers to make sure their quarry didn't escape through the sewers. Supported by British, German and French diplomats who all had offices in the building, Mr. Zhakianov holed up for six days, until Kazakh authorities and the diplomats reached an agreement: Mr. Zhakianov would be held in his own Almaty home and the diplomats would have access to him. But a few weeks later, Kazakh officials flew Mr. Zhakianov 620 miles north to confinement in the city of Pavlodar.

On the day he was arrested, the government acknowledged the existence of one Swiss bank account—containing $1.2 billion. It said this was government cash from oil deals and was used by Mr. Nazarbayev as a rainy-day fund to help the country weather crises.

The two leading critics went on trial. Mr. Abyazov, the tycoon, was convicted of embezzling $3.6 million from the state and sentenced in July to six years in prison. Mr. Zhakianov, the former provincial governor, was convicted last month of selling state enterprises at illegitimately low prices. He got seven years in prison.

And Mr. Aliyev, the ambitious son-in-law? In a time-honored form of banishment for out-of-favor officials here, he was sent off to be an ambassador, in this case to Austria. "In the end," says one local participant in the political maneuvering, "the president simply took power back into his own hands."

HONORING THE LIFE OF ROBERT ANTHONY FAUST

HON. GENE GREEN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and profound sadness that I rise to honor the life of Robert Anthony Faust. After living a remarkably accomplished life, Mr. Faust, president of Faust Distributing Company, lost a courageous battle with pancreatic cancer on Friday, October 4, 2002. He was an active and integral part of our community, and he will be missed.

Mr. Faust first joined Faust Distributing in the late 1950s when he worked during the summers while attending La Marque High School. In 1980, he began working for the company full time as a warehouse worker. He was later promoted to a driver/salesman position and then as market manager.

He had a vast knowledge of the operations of Faust Distributing and his versatile and multifaceted experience led him to become vice president and director of sales. In 1992, he became president of the company.

Robert Faust was committed to the company and to the industry. He was an active member of the National Beer Wholesaler Association, the Greater Houston Partnership, the Forum Club of Houston and the Lions Club.

It has been said that the ultimate measure of a person's life is the extent to which they made the world a better place. If this is the measure of worth in life, Robert Faust's friends and family can attest to the success of the life he led.

Robert Anthony Faust is survived by his wife, Debbie Faust, two daughters, Marney

Jones and Lori Longbotham, his mother, Beth Faust, a sister, Polly Horany, two brothers, Dr. Harry Faust and Dan Faust, and four grandchildren.

I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in celebrating the life of Robert Faust. He touched many lives, and he will be greatly missed.

HONORING MILDRED JEFFREY

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, October 15, the Michigan's Women's Foundation is honoring a phenomenal woman and I would like to take a moment to also pay tribute to her. Mildred Jeffrey is a dear friend and a wonderful example to us all. I thank her for all her hard work and her drive to make the world a better place over the years.

Millie, now 90, was born before women could even vote. Throughout her life she has fought successfully for a number of causes which workers in our community, and around the world, have benefited from.

Millie began her career with the UAW, another engine of social change. She became Walter P. Reuther's assistant and protege, eventually assuming the role of Director of the UAW's Women's Department. It was through the UAW that Millie traveled the globe organizing exchange programs among international labor women.

It goes without saying that Millie's fight led her into the realm of politics. In 1960 she co-chaired the Michigan Campaign Committee for John F. Kennedy, she is founder and President of the National Women's Political Caucus and has been involved in numerous local and state campaigns. President Kennedy appointed Millie to the Youth Employment Commission, and President Carter appointed her to the International Year of the Woman Commission. Just two years ago, Millie was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor, by President Bill Clinton.

Mr. Speaker, the things I have mentioned barely scrape the surface of Millie's extraordinary life. She is a role model for all Americans and I would ask my colleagues to take a moment to salute Mildred Jeffrey.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE SOUTHLAKE CENTER FOR MENTAL HEALTH

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct pleasure to congratulate the Southlake Center for Mental Health located in Lake County, Indiana as it celebrates its 25 anniversary this month. The Southlake Center for Mental Health will commemorate its 25 years of dedicated service to the communities of Northwest Indiana at a gala celebration to be held at Villa Cesare in Schererville, Indiana. The celebration will serve as an opportunity for the Southlake Center for Mental Health to reaffirm its commitment to excellence in mental health services to every individual in Merrillville, Hobart, Crown Point and the surrounding communities.

The Southlake Center for Mental Health was conceived early in 1975. In July, 1977, the Southlake Center began operations, initially offering outpatient, consultation and education services in leased facilities. By working together with community leaders and educating the public about community mental health care, the main center at 8555 Taft Street opened in Merrillville in 1979 on a 10-acre tract of land.

During the past two decades, the Southlake Center for Mental Health has continued to grow and change, reflecting the needs of the communities while remaining committed to the highest caliber of mental health care. To those in need of mental health care, there is nothing more precious. During the past 25 years, the Southlake Center for Mental Health has been a beacon of hope in Northwest Indiana, providing community based mental health and addiction treatment services to more than 40,000 individuals.

In its 25 years of existence, the Southlake Center for Mental Health has had the support of several residents and leaders in the community. One such tireless leader and advocate for mental health care is Lee Strawhun. Lee is a dreamer, a visionary and a hard working realist. His involvement in the lives of the people of Northwest Indiana is genuine, compassionate and committed. As the President and CEO of the Southlake Center for Mental Health, Lee has steered the center through obstacles, growth and so much more. In addition to Lee's devotion, the members of the Southlake Center for Mental Health Board of Directors have played a vital role in assuring that the organization is one of the best community based behavioral healthcare organization in the state. Members of the Board of Directors include: Ronald Borto, Chairman; Mary Beth Bonaventura; Harold Foster; Drew Furuness; Edmund Gunn; Charles Kleinschmidt; Donald Levinson; James McShane, III; C. Robert Onda; Patricia Schaad; and Larry Shaver. Additionally, this 25th anniversary celebration would not be possible without the continued dedication of the entire staff at the center, specifically, Dr. Cheryl Morgavan, Dr. Les Schiller and Valerie Madvek, who are also celebrating 25 years with the Southlake Center.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending the administrators, health care professionals, and other individuals who, over the years, have contributed to the Southlake Center for Mental Health's success in achieving its standard of excellence. Their hard work has improved the quality of life for everyone in Indiana's First Congressional District.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MIKE PENCE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained on Monday, October 7, 2002 and was unable to cast my vote on H.R. 5531, the Sudan Peace Act. Had I been here, I would have voted aye, in support of final passage of this bill. I believe this bill provides a solid framework for addressing the conflict in Sudan and the negotiations between warring parties.

In whatever manner we are able with our own modest efforts in this institution, we must steer the policies of the United States of America with a bright and moral compass, a compass that affirms human dignity and affirms human freedom; principles that are in the very heart of the American people.

 TRIBUTE TO CORPORAL TOBY BETHEL
HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with earnest respect that I recognize Police Corporal Toby Bethel of Florence, Colorado for his outstanding courage and resolve during a period of unimaginable hardship. On September 28, 2001, Corporal Bethel was wounded in the line of duty and over the past year has overcome incredible challenges and obstacles on his road to recovery. In recognition of his courageous actions on September 28 and his astounding determination throughout his recovery process, I would like to pay tribute to Corporal Bethel before this body of Congress. —

On September 28, 2001, Corporal Bethel was searching for two armed fugitives who had recently shot and killed a Fremont County Sheriff's Deputy. In pursuit of the fugitives, Bethel was shot four times in his police car, lost control of his vehicle and suffered a serious automobile accident. As a result of the wounds inflicted by the encounter, Toby suffered extensive injuries that have proven to be very demanding. Corporal Bethel's recovery has been slowed by his frequent hospitalizations over the past year, postponing his ability to regain his normal weight and vitality.

Even in the face of such disheartening circumstances, Corporal Bethel remains optimistic and is committed to a full recovery from his injuries. He has been constantly working out to regain the weight, strength, and energy that was lost during his recovery and surgeries. He submits himself to a rigorous physical therapy program four days a week and lifts weights between sessions. Corporal Bethel is fully determined not to let his present situation deter his resolve; this test proves his strength and composure in a trying period and serves as a testimony to his character. Throughout this trying ordeal, his wife Misty has been a devoted and caring partner, inspiring Toby to give his all to his recovery efforts.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great admiration that I recognize Corporal Toby Bethel before this body of Congress and this nation for his courage and character in the face of adversity. His brave conduct on the night of September 28, 2001, and his unwavering spirit throughout his recovery process, is truly a story of heroic proportions. The overwhelming burdens Corporal Bethel has had to bear over the past year, his undying hope and ceaseless optimism serve as an inspiration to us all. I believe we could all take a page from his book on determination. On behalf of the citizens of Colorado and citizens across the nation, I commend Corporal Toby Bethel for the sacrifice he has made to his country in the pursuit of justice and the security for his fellow citizens and wish him the best in his ongoing recovery.

 TRIBUTE TO CHARLES ROONEY
MILLER
HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a fellow South Carolinian and college classmate, Charles Rooney Miller, a good friend, a master teacher, and a survivor of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

Mr. Miller was born on August 11, 1939 in Clover, South Carolina in York County. He was the first of two children born to Andrew Charles Miller and Emily Lee (Allison) Miller. After his parents separated, he lived with his grandmother, aunts, uncles and other relatives—he was truly a community-raised child in a Christian environment. From a young age, he attended Clover Chapel Methodist Church Sunday Bible School and later joined Flat Rock Baptist Church where he was baptized. At the age of 11, he became the Sunday School Teacher for his age group.

Mr. Miller was an excellent student throughout grammar school and high school. He graduated from Roosevelt High School in May of 1956 as Valedictorian of his class. From there he went to South Carolina State College (now University), where I had the pleasure of meeting him and beginning a life-long friendship. We were both active in the civil rights activities on campus and participated in a number of marches and other activities. Rooney graduated from SC State in 1962 and moved to Stamford, Connecticut where he was later joined by his wife and children.

In Connecticut, Mr. Miller worked two jobs to support his family; at Chemtross, a film developing business, and at Stamford Chemicals, a dry cleaning production business, where his work is associated with the invention of a number of products that are still used in today's dry cleaning industry. Mr. Miller later became a teacher and worked for a short time in South Carolina, Stamford, and in the Norwalk, Connecticut Public School Systems.

In 1968, Mr. Miller began a career with the New York City Department of Social Services and worked there until 1994 when he retired as a Supervisor with the Bureau of Social Services For Children. His retirement was not long and he returned to work in 1997 as a consultant with PSI International in Fairfax, Virginia and was assigned as a Conversion Specialist for his old office, the New York City Department of Social Services. He worked there until September 11, 2001.

On the morning of September 11th, Mr. Miller arrived at work early and spoke to several colleagues on his floor. He thought about how much he enjoyed his post-retirement work as a consultant and his ability to set his own schedule. In the midst of his musings, he heard a loud noise but first thought the sound came from normal truck traffic outside. But this window-rattling occurrence was different. He was astonished when he went to the window and saw the World Trade Center tower on fire and a trail of fluid pouring down the side of the building with fire leaping behind it. He heard other loud explosions and co-workers on his floor began to scream, cry and pray. The radios began broadcasting reports of the fire but no one was sure what was happening. As Mr. Miller and his co-workers continued to watch the building burn he saw people jumping from the windows, some holding hands. They watched as the second plane crashed into the other tower. They knew then they were in the midst of a planned attack, and pandemonium broke out. Finally, they received instructions to leave their building and head down to the South Street Seaport where they thought it would be safer by the water. They were given surgical masks to cover their noses and mouths and instructed to put a moist towel under the mask to help prevent inhalation of smoke, chemicals and other foreign particles. They left the darkened building with smoke and objects flying through the air.

As people were screaming and running out of the building, Miller was knocked to the ground and run over by several people before he could get back to his feet. He thought he would be okay once he caught his breath. He was eventually assisted by a worker from a nearby polling place and taken to a triage location. The medics realized that Miller was suffering from a heart attack and he was then rushed by ambulance to New York Hospital's downtown emergency room. He was hospitalized for five days and unable to contact his family. After subsequent angioplasty surgery and treatments for the back injury he received, he is now mending well.

He's still active in his church, Cathedral Baptist, where he serves as Chairman of the Deacon's Board, Chairman of the Men's Department, Vice President of the Board of Directors, a teacher in the Bible Institute and the Adult Sunday School Class. He is also a member of South Carolina State University Alumni Chapter of New York.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me in honoring Charles Rooney Miller, a man whose contributions to his community, his friends, and his family will leave lasting impressions on the numerous lives he has touched. As the Homecoming celebrations begin at our alma mater, South Carolina State University, I wish him continued success and Godspeed.

TRIBUTE TO HUNGARIAN WRITER
IMRE KERTÉSZ, RECIPIENT OF THE NOBEL PRIZE IN LIT-ERATURE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to recognize and commend Mr. Imre Kertész, on being the first Hungarian to win a Nobel Prize for Literature. Although he is the first Hungarian to receive the Prize for Literature, Mr. Kertész joins twelve other distinguished Hungarians who have been awarded the Nobel Prize in other fields.

Mr. Kertész is a celebrated author whose stories have brought to life the atrocities of the Holocaust, and have shared with the world the difficult choices people were forced to make when their lives were torn apart by Nazi occupation.

Imre Kertész was born in Budapest, Hungary in 1929. At the age of 14 the Nazis invaded his country, and he, along with hundreds of thousands of other Hungarian Jews were deported to suffer the unspeakable horrors of Auschwitz and other camps. After a short time Mr. Kertész was transported to Buchenwald, another camp, from which he was liberated in 1945.

Upon his return to Hungary he worked for a Budapest newspaper, but was dismissed in 1951, when it was taken over by the Communist Party. After two years of military service he supported himself as an independent writer and translator of German authors including Nietzsche, Hofmannsthal, Schnitzler, Freud, Roth, Wittgenstein and Canetti, all of whom have had significance for his own writing.

Mr. Kertész's first novel, "Fateless," was completed in 1965, but was not published for another ten years. It was this novel that the Swedish Academy singled out in awarding Mr. Kertész the 2002 Nobel Prize for Literature. This extraordinary novel is the semi-autobiographical tale utilizing Kertész's alter ego György Köves, a 15 year-old Jewish boy who has been arrested and sent to a concentration camp. Once there he becomes intimately aware of the horrors of the death camp, but he learns to survive.

"Fateless," was the first part of the trilogy that included the outstanding novels "Fiasco," published in 1988, and "Kaddish for a Child Not Born," published in 1990. Both books continue to use György Köves as the voice for Imre Kertész. In addition, Mr. Kertész's published works include "Galley Diary," "Chronicle of a Metamorphosis," "The Holocaust as Culture," "Moments of Silence While the Execution Squad Reloads," and "The Exiled Language," as well as a collections of lectures and essays.

Mr. Speaker, despite having been a published author for more than 30 years, Imre Kertész was not widely recognized internationally until the early 1990's, and his is not even a household name in Hungary today. Mr. Kertész believes that this lack of recognition is a result of a lack of awareness about the Holocaust in Hungary. As he told reporters after the announcement on October 10, 2002, "People [in Hungary] have not faced up to the Holocaust. I hope that in light of this recognition, they will face up to it more than they have until now."

Mr. Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to join me in congratulating Imre Kertész for receiving the Nobel Prize in Literature. His writing shares the fragile experience of the individual against the barbaric arbitrariness of history with stirring stories that have drawn in and captivated readers around the world.

SUDAN PEACE ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. LEE TERRY

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 7, 2002

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5531, the Sudan Peace Act.

Sudan is a nation ravaged by 19 years of vicious civil war. Over 2 million Sudanese have been killed, and thousands more are starving from war-induced famine. According to the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, the Khartoum government of Sudan continues to murder, rape, and torture citizens who refuse to convert to the state-sponsored version of Islam. Villages have been burned and looted, women and children enslaved, hospitals and relief camps bombed, and civilians arrested or killed for refusing to betray their personal religious convictions. Most recently, the Khartoum government walked away from promising peace negotiations and banned international relief flights for the delivery of humanitarian aid.

I have personally listened to the heart-rending stories of Sudanese refugees who escaped the brutality by settling in the United States. Many of them were tortured, and saw their loved ones beaten, executed, or sold into slavery. The United States Congress must not stand idly by while these human rights abuses continue; we must take action to help end the bloodshed.

H.R. 5531 would begin an important policy shift in how our government deals with the horrors in Sudan. It sets a six-month deadline for the Khartoum government to take effective and measurable steps towards peace and an end to the violence. If this deadline is not met, our President would broaden sanctions against the Khartoum government, and take measures such as petitioning the United Nations Security Council for an embargo on oil and arms in Sudan. The President will also have the authority to redirect humanitarian aid to ensure it reaches the people it is intended to help, regardless of the Khartoum government's conscienceless dictate.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5531 to help bring peace, hope and relief to the war-torn Sudanese people.

TRIBUTE TO BOB PAGANO

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I take this opportunity to recognize the life of Mr. Bob Pagano of Pueblo, Colorado. Mr. Pagano recently passed away this September from complications during surgery and, as his family mourns their loss, I would like to pay tribute to his life and the exceptional way in which he lived.

Mr. Pagano grew up in Pueblo, Colorado and graduated from South High School in 1975. He is perhaps best known for his ability as a cook and, as a consequence, he owned several restaurants throughout Pueblo and Colorado Springs. Following a rich family tradition, the Pagano family began cooking sausage grinders about 53 years ago, with Bob assisting the family by peeling vegetables. Over the years, Mr. Pagano began to develop what would become a lifelong passion for cooking and qualified himself as a master of many types of popular cuisines. As an adult, he began to use his culinary expertise and his natural talent for business to expand the family's Pass Key restaurant to five locations in Pueblo, Pueblo West, and Colorado Springs.

Mr. Pagano was famous throughout Southern Colorado for his cooking ability, but even more so for his friendly and outgoing personality. Bob was always kind and generous to his staff and co-workers felt as if they were a part of the Pagano family. Customers who frequented the restaurants would often mention the warm and cordial service they received along with their meals as one of the distinctive qualities separating Mr. Pagano's restaurants from all the others.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I recognize Bob Pagano before this body of Congress and this nation for the countless contributions he has made toward the betterment of Pueblo and the surrounding communities. I extend my sincere condolences to his wife Karen, his parents Mary Jo and John, and his children Justin, Andrew, Brian and Candice. Mr. Pagano was a truly kind and generous individual and his presence will be deeply missed throughout the entire community, although, the spirit with which he lived life will continue in his family and friends and all the lives he touched.

ANTHONY BIANCO HONORED AS 2002 PERSON OF THE YEAR

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the attention of the House of Representatives to the long record of service to the community of Anthony A. Bianco, who will be honored as "2002 Person of the Year" at the October 13, 2002, banquet of the Luzerne County Italian American Association. He has served as Sergeant-at-Arms for the last three years and on the board of directors of the Association.

Anthony is the son of the late August and Lucille Serignese Bianco. He is a graduate of the Pittston High School Class of 1954.

Over the years, he has participated in numerous civic and religious organizations. He is a lifelong member of the Holy Name Society of Mount Carmel Church, Pittston, where he is a volunteer assistant at all functions. He is also a member and volunteer of the American Red Cross, where he has participated for more than 21 years in community blood drives, which resulted in the Red Cross presenting him with the "21 Year Pin" recently.

He has also represented the Italian American Association at the Pittston Tomato Festival Parade and serves as a volunteer for the groundskeeping work at the Columbus statue in Pittston throughout the year. He has represented the 7th Ward, 3rd District in the City of Pittston as the Democratic Committeeman for more than 25 years and also serves as Judge of Elections for that ward.

Anthony has worked for the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation and for the past 32 years, he has been employed at the Luzerne County Veterans Affairs Bureau, where he has been responsible for delivering veterans' stone markers and flags to all cemeteries in Luzerne and adjacent counties of his jurisdiction.

He is a lifelong resident of Pittston. His family includes a brother, the late Philip Bianco, and a sister, Grace Bianco Nolan. He has three nieces and a nephew, along with several great-nieces and great-nephews.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I am pleased to call to the attention of the House of Representatives the well-deserved honor being accorded to Anthony Bianco, and I wish him all the best.

TRIBUTE TO MARY ANN SOLBERG

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my friend Mary Ann Solberg of Troy, Michigan for her outstanding commitment to public service. On October 23, 2002, Leadership Troy will name her this year's Distinguished Citizen.

Mary Ann Solberg has become the leader in community anti-drug coalitions, not only in Michigan, but throughout the country. She served as Executive Director of the Troy Community Coalition for twelve years and also created and served as Executive Director of the Coalition of Healthy Communities—a consortium of community anti-drug coalitions in Michigan. Earlier this year, she was sworn in as Deputy Director for the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

During Mary Ann's tenure as Executive Director, the Troy Coalition grew from a group of concerned community members meeting around a kitchen table into one of the most respected anti-drug coalitions in the country—earning the "Best Coalition" designation from the Community Anti-Drug Coalitions of America in 1997.

Troy has become a model to other communities hoping to duplicate their success. Mary Ann traveled extensively as a lecturer and consultant helping communities from prevention coalitions and providing technical assistance to community's partnerships and coalitions. She also served as an advisor to the Department of Health and Human Services' Center for Substance Abuse Prevention and as a member of the Board of Directors of the Community Anti-Drug Coalitions of America. President Clinton named her to serve on the Advisory Commission on Drug Free Communities, where she was elected by her peers as President of that Commission.

Mary Ann Solberg is an example of what makes the Troy community so strong. She has a tireless commitment to changing attitudes about drug and alcohol use and fighting abuse, especially by our youth. She has a passion for grassroots activism and a warmth of character that draws people to her and her causes. I am privileged to call her a friend.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Mary Ann Solberg as she deservedly receives this year's Distinguished Citizen Award from Leadership Troy for all she has done for prevention and to strengthen the fabric of our community.

ON INTRODUCING A RESOLUTION CONCERNING NATIONAL RUNAWAY PREVENTION MONTH

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution that recognizes the goals and ideals of National Runaway Prevention Month, which is sponsored by two organizations that work with runaway youth: the National Network for Youth and the National Runaway Switchboard.

These two organizations have chosen the month of November to bring attention to the important issue of runaway youth. The prevalence of young people who leave their home is confounding, with one out of every seven youth in the United States running away at least once before the age of 18. Studies suggest that between 1.3 million and 2.8 million young people live on the streets of the United States each year.

Preventing young people from running away is a national priority, as today's young people are tomorrow's teachers, doctors, workers and leaders. The hardships that runaway youth face on the streets would be too much for an adult to face. The impact on the young person, as well as society, is staggering.

National Runaway Prevention Month will bring national attention to this important issue and remind parents of the importance of effectively communicating with their kids. All of the conditions that lead young people to leave their homes are preventable when families are strong and when young people can find the support they need.

I am hopeful that the recognition of this issue will prevent other young people from running away by stressing the importance of families and communities.

TRIBUTE TO ADRIAN AKER BRADFIELD

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I recognize the life of Adrian Aker Bradfield of Dolores, Colorado. Mr. Bradfield passed away this July and, as his family mourns their loss, I would like to pay tribute to his life and the irreplaceable contributions he has made to his family, his friends, and the entire community of Dolores, Colorado.

Mr. Bradfield was born April 29, 1917, and grew up in a ranching family, acquiring a deep love for the land and the cowboy lifestyle at an early age. He worked for many years on the Bradfield Ranch in Cahone, Colorado until the ranch was sold in 1969. In 1938, he began working in partnership with his father Harold, where they spent many enjoyable days working side by side with one another. Perhaps one of Mr. Bradfield's fondest memories was the annual brandings up on Glade Lake when family and friends would all come together for the big event.

Mr. Bradfield always made people his number one priority and liked to spend his free time in the company of family and friends who loved listening to his countless stories. Although Mr. Bradfield was very busy with his ranching operation and growing family, he always found time to be actively involved in his community. Mr. Bradfield served a number of years on the Dolores County School District Board and as a Dolores County Commissioner. He was also a member of the Southwest Colorado Cattlemen's Association and Farmers Union of America. Mr. Bradfield loved working on the many issues that confronted his community and served the people of Dolores with distinction and honor.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep respect that I recognize Mr. Adrian Aker Bradfield before this body of Congress and this nation for all he has done for Dolores and the entire State of Colorado. My sincere condolences go out to his wife Nellie, his sister Janice, and his children Charles, Wilson, Kenneth and Nancy. Mr. Bradfield was one of Colorado's true American cowboys, his strength, character, and way of life have helped shape our state's culture and heritage throughout his life and has made a lasting impression upon our nation's history.

TRIBUTE TO GILBERT "GIGI" ZIMMERMAN

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend and former schoolmate, Gilbert "Gigi" Zimmerman. Despite significant challenges, this extraordinary man is an award-winning community activist, scholar, educator and an advocate for the disadvantaged.

I met Gigi when we were students at South Carolina State College (University) in Orangeburg. We were both active in the civil rights activities, often getting arrested together during sit-ins. He also found time to preserve the collective memory of those turbulent but heady days as the editor of our yearbook during his junior and senior years.

He was one of the scholars among our group, earning a Bachelor's degree in Business Administration. But he was not content to stop there. In 1970, Gigi received a prestigious Ford Foundation Fellowship in Leadership Development, and studied at the University of California at Santa Cruz under the mentorship of noted Sociologist, Dr. Herman Blake. That experience led him to earn a Master's Degree in Education Guidance and Counseling from South Carolina State. He then went on to round out his education with a Master's in Human Resources Management at Pepperdine University in California.

Gigi is a former high school teacher, who now serves as an Adjunct Professor of Business Management at Limestone College. He is truly committed to helping shape the minds of future generations. He also serves as a consultant to the U.S. Department of Education. But his role as scholar and educator, are just a small part of this larger than life character.

Gilbert Zimmerman is best known for his compassion for others and his dedication to improving the quality of life for the disadvantaged. He has worked primarily in the areas of community organization and development for very low-income citizens. Most of this community work experiences were gained from working with Mexican-Americans in depressed communities in California, Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Today he serves as the Director of Operations and Planning for the Beaufort-Jasper Economic Opportunity Commission.

Gigi's contributions have been recognized locally and nationally. In 1982, Ronald Reagan appointed him to the United States Commission on Civil Rights. He was reappointed by Governor Dick Riley in 1991, and served as Chairman from 1992-1996. He is a member and past President of the South Carolina Association of Human Service Agencies. As a young adult, Gigi was recognized as one of the "Outstanding Young Men of America." He is a past recipient of the "South Carolina Volunteer of the Year" award by the Joint Action in Community Service. His community service activities include membership on the S.C. Low-Income Housing Coalition, the Port Royal Community Residence for the Developmentally Disabled Board, the Partners for Healthy Community Steering Committee, the Prudential Youth Leadership Institute Advisory Board, and the Executive Committee of the Burton-Dale-Beaufort NAACP Branch.

All of this from a man whose stature among his peers is unequalled—physically and emotionally. "Gigi" stands less than four feet tall, but I am proud to say I look up to him for the enormous courage he continuously demonstrates, and the tremendous accomplishments he has achieved.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me honoring Gilbert "Gigi" Zimmerman for the inspiring example he sets for all of us. I wish him continued success and Godspeed.

CHILD ABDUCTION PREVENTION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. LEE TERRY

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 7, 2002

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5422, the Child Abduction Prevention Act.

Parents across the nation have been alarmed by recent high-profile child abductions, such as 14-year-old Elizabeth Smart, who was taken from her own bedroom at gunpoint in front of her younger sister, and 5-year-old Samantha Runnion, who was abducted while playing with her friend in her own front yard, then found molested and murdered the next day. Congress has a responsibility to take tough and effective steps to combat the increasing boldness of sexual predators, kidnappers, and murderers who prey on children.

According to law enforcement officials, the best chance of saving a child's life lies within the first few hours after an abduction. H.R. 5422 would expand the AMBER emergency alert broadcast system to give children the best chance for rescue during these critical hours. This system has already helped rescue 27 children across the nation from criminals intent on harming them. My home state of Nebraska recently implemented this system to aid police in quickly recovering missing children; establishing a special coordinator at the Department of Justice and providing $25 million will encourage the remaining 18 states to do likewise.

Other vital provisions in H.R. 5422 include mandating lifetime sentences for second-time child molesters, allowing judges to order lifetime supervision of child sex offenders, increasing electronic surveillance authority for child exploitation cases, and criminalizing international "sex tours" involving children. The House of Representatives has already approved these important measures by overwhelming majorities; I hope the Senate will follow suit to protect the lives and innocence of children, and urge my colleagues to join me today in supporting H.R. 5422.

TRIBUTE TO PREBEN MUNCH-NIELSEN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to my dear friend, Preben Munch-Nielsen, who passed away a few days ago in Denmark.

Preben Munch-Nielsen was born in 1926 to a Protestant family in a small Danish fishing village, Snekkersten. He was only 14 when German troops occupied Denmark in 1940. Munch-Nielsen soon became a courier in the Danish Resistance movement, and began helping Danish Jews flee persecution and certain death at the hands of the Nazi's.

He continually risked his life by hiding Jewish refugees in churches and houses near the shore of the North Sea. At night, he would lead them to fishing boats, which took them across the sea to safety in neutral Sweden. Twelve at a time, the Jews would sail in 21-foot boats to freedom. The four-mile boat ride to Sweden could take hours, as Munch-Nielsen and other Resistance members evaded German ships at sea.

Munch-Nielsen personally helped to transport 1,400 refugees, and of the country's 7,200 Jews, the Resistance movement saved all but 60 people. The Resistance also saved 700 people of non-Jewish decent, who could not bear to part with Jewish relatives. Munch-Nielsen himself had to take refuge in Sweden when the Germans replaced the Danish government in 1943. He returned home in May 1945.

Munch-Nielsen did not speak publicly about the rescues until 1985, when a friend asked him to share his story with a group of Jewish travelers in Denmark. He did not understand why people would make such a fuss over simple acts of decency, yet he knew his deeds should no longer be kept in secrecy. At age 59, his speaking career began, educating masses of people in Denmark, Israel and the United States about the hardships of perseverance and the atrocities of war.

He emphasized that Danish Jews were considered as neighbors, friends, and schoolmates, and not as a separate group or as criminals. "This is our history. We have no scapegoats. No pogroms. No Holocaust. It's so simple; we didn't recognize Jews as Jews, but as Danes," Preben Munch-Nielsen said. "They were victims of an insane movement created by lunatics."

Preben Munch-Nielsen was also a successful Danish businessman who was honored for his wartime heroic actions by President Bill Clinton in 1997.

TRIBUTE TO RAYMOND EARL "RED" LEMASTER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I recognize the life and passing of Mr. Raymond Earl "Red" LeMaster of Pueblo, Colorado for the many contributions he has made for the City of Pueblo. Mr. LeMaster has recently passed away and, as his family mourns their loss, I would like to pay tribute to his life and memory before this body of Congress.

Mr. LeMaster was born on July 2, 1910 in Springfield, Illinois. He was an exceptional athlete throughout his life and played both football and baseball for Centennial High School. After graduating in 1931, Red attended Colorado College, where he was an All-American football player. Upon graduating from college, he pitched for several semi-pro baseball teams in the old Cotton States League. In 1973, Mr. LeMaster was inducted into the Greater Pueblo Sports Hall of Fame.

After his baseball career, Red returned to Pueblo and managed the local Steel City YMCA while working in sales for Walter Brewery and playing for its baseball team. It was at the YMCA that Mr. LeMaster first got the idea to open Pueblo's original Janitor Supply Company. Today, LeMasters Janitor Supply Company provides service to customers throughout Southern Colorado and is one of Pueblo's largest and most successful businesses. —

In his spare time, Red spent innumerable hours as a Pueblo sports booster, helping to raise money for numerous youth sports programs. He was also responsible for co-founding the Old Timers Baseball Association. Through Mr. LeMaster's generosity of time and money, countless numbers of Pueblo boys and girls have been given the opportunity to play organized sports.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep respect that I recognize the life and passing of Mr. Raymond Earl "Red" LeMaster before this body of Congress and this nation. I extend my sincere condolences to his son Clarence, his daughter-in-law Kay, and his four grandchildren. The contributions Red LeMaster made to the community of Pueblo through his good works, generosity, and friendly demeanor have touched the lives of countless individuals throughout the region and have contributed greatly to the betterment of the Pueblo, Colorado community.

JIM PAISLEY HONORED AS 2002
OUTSTANDING ITALIAN-AMERICAN OF THE YEAR

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the attention of the House of Representatives to the long record of service to his fellow citizens of James Paisley, former mayor of Hazleton, Pennsylvania, who will be honored as "Outstanding, Italian-American of the Year" at the October 13, 2002, banquet of the Sons of Italy Lodge 1043, members of the Columbus Club and UNICO.

Jim was born July 1, 1928, to John and Frances LaRocco Paisley. He is a lifelong resident of Hazleton, was educated in the public school systems and graduated with the class of 1946. Following his graduation, he worked as an apprentice mechanic for the Hazleton Ford dealership.

He entered the Army in November 1950 as a private with the 43rd Infantry Division and was discharged with the rank of sergeant first class on November 1, 1952. The 43rd Infantry served in Germany, with its primary function to patrol the border with the Communist nations in Europe during the Cold War.

After returning to the United States, he met and married the former Irene Bonomo in 1953. They are the parents of a daughter, Francine, owner and operator of Francine's Beauty Shop, Hazleton; a son, the Very Rev. James J. Paisley, pastor of St. Maria Goretti Church, Laflin; and a daughter, Carmela, a clinical instructor at the School of Radiology, Greater Hazleton Health Alliance, Church Street Campus.

In 1954, Jim was appointed patrolman with the Hazleton Police Department. He was promoted to lieutenant in 1964, and then promoted to captain of detectives in 1969. He retained the position as captain until retirement in 1974. After retirement from the Police Department, he worked as a drapery installer for Bonomo Decorators from 1974 to 1978.

In 1978, he was elected mayor of Hazleton and served two four-year terms. He was appointed to the position of field investigator with the Pennsylvania Treasury Department, where he was responsible for the investigation of fraud cases in 12 counties through August 1989.

After passing the required state civil service examination in 1989, he was employed by the Hazleton Housing Authority as a project manager, and was promoted to administrative officer and grant coordinator in 1995 after successfully managing the Vine West Family Community. He was also named contacting officer for the authority. After 11 years of outstanding, exemplary and faithful execution of his duties, he was appointed in 1999 as executive director of the authority, in which capacity he continues to serve.

Jim is a member of the Most Precious Blood Roman Catholic Church, where he serves as an extraordinary minister of the Eucharist and as a lector. He has also served two terms as president of the Hazleton UNICO club.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I am pleased to call to the attention of the House of Representatives the well-deserved honor being accorded to James Paisley, and I wish him all the best.

RECOGNITION OF THE DISABILITIES AWARENESS FAIR HELD IN WARREN, MICHIGAN

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the City of Warren's Commission on Disabilities as they host the Disabilities Awareness Fair, held in conjunction with National Disabilities Awareness Month this October.

This community-wide event will bring together a variety of service and support agencies in one location to provide information on services and programs available to the citizens of Warren.

The Commission on Disabilities for the City of Warren was established by the Mayor and City Council in February 2002. The Commission's purpose is to advise the city on compliance with federal and state regulations, and legal developments affecting persons with disabilities. The Commission will also review and recommend to the Mayor and the City Council development practices that will improve access to city services and facilities to persons with disabilities.

The impact of the work of the Commission has already been felt in Warren as they have addressed many accessibility concerns including curb cuts in sidewalks, handicapped parking and accessibility at the new Community Center.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in commending the Warren Disabilities Commission. Their work is promoting better communication and greater understanding of persons with disabilities among the community and city employees, officers, boards and commissions. Their efforts will improve the quality of life for those with disabilities and, in the process, strengthen the fabric of our community.

ON INTRODUCING A RESOLUTION
CONCERNING A U.S. POSTAGE STAMP COMMEMORATING THE VICTIMS OF THE HOLOCAUST

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution that expresses the sense of Congress that the United States Postmaster General should issue a postage stamp commemorating the victims of the Holocaust.

Many of the victims who survived the Holocaust have built their lives and raised their families in the United States. They have contributed significantly to American culture and society. They are examples of strength and steadfastness, and serve as an example for other Americans.

U.S. postage stamps have honored other well-respected and influential people, and I believe that the survivors of the Holocaust deserve recognition. I believe it is time that we honor them in this very unique way.

The stamp will also recognize those who perished in the Holocaust. I am hopeful that this stamp will encourage all Americans to remember this unspeakable action unparalleled in world history. I agree with the philosopher George Santayana, who wrote, "Those who do not remember the past are doomed to repeat it." The stamp will serve as another reminder to people why there is a need for tolerance, sensitivity, pluralism and democracy.

It is time we commemorate all of the millions of victims, those who survived and those who died. I encourage all my colleagues to co-sponsor this important resolution.

TRIBUTE TO THE POMONA ELEMENTARY SCHOOL'S FOURTH GRADE CLASS

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great enthusiasm that I recognize the children of Heidi Nadiak's fourth grade class at Pomona Elementary School in Grand Junction, Colorado for the outstanding contributions they are making toward the advancement of environmental science. The Pomona fourth grade was one of ten classes around the country to be selected as part of a nationwide study that is using razorback suckerfish to monitor the health of the Colorado River.

The fish are raised by the Colorado Division of Wildlife and are part of a public outreach program providing Ms. Nadiak's fourth grade class with the opportunity to use scientific methods to conduct real life experiments. The fish will be living in an aquarium in the fourth grade classroom, and the students will make daily observations by measuring pH levels and monitoring the water temperature.

The Pomona students are studying the fish as part of a larger project to assess the current health of the Colorado River. The razorbacks once thrived in the Colorado River but became nearly extinct. By studying the fish and assisting in the effort to reintroduce them into their natural habitat, the Pomona fourth graders are providing a huge service to the advancement of environmental science. For several years, I have worked in Congress in the Upper Colorado River Endangered Fish Recovery Program, which seeks to ensure the recovery of the razorback, the pike minnow, and several other species of fish. It is a pleasure to see how this effort is being complemented by the efforts of Ms. Nadiak's fourth grade class.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to recognize Pomona Elementary's fourth grade class before this body of Congress and this nation for the contributions they are making toward the preservation of our natural habitat. Coloradans are fully aware that our lands and waters are some of our state's most precious resources, and I am grateful that our tradition of scientifically supported environmental awareness is being passed down to such an intelligent and capable group of kids at Pomona Elementary.

TRIBUTE TO CANDACE HUNTER-WIEST, INLAND EMPIRE COUNCIL OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA DISTINGUISHED CITIZEN

HON. KEN CALVERT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to an individual whose dedication to her country and community is exceptional. The Inland Empire has been fortunate to have dynamic and dedicated business and community leaders who willingly and unselfishly give time and talent to make their communities a better place to live and work. Mrs. Candace Hunter-Wiest is one of these individuals and her exemplary leadership is being recognized at a dinner on Thursday, November 7, 2002 as she is honored as the 2002 Inland Empire Boy Scouts of America Distinguished Citizen.

Candace's career path is as unique as it is exceptional. She was married at age 18 and was a proud mother of three by age 22. As the sole provider for her family, she began working in the restaurant business and later took a clerical support position with an independent insurance agency. She was quickly promoted to bookkeeper, then to office manager and soon became a licensed agent. Her career in banking began when she associated with an agency owned by a bank holding company that had been perpetually unprofitable. Under her excellent management, Candace turned a profit in ten months. She moved to Riverside in 1988 and her career with the Inland Empire National Bank (IENB) began. Under her superb leadership, IENB has become one of the best banks in the country and has been named a Super Premier Performing Bank.

Candace has been involved in numerous community organizations and she currently serves on the board of directors for the United Way of the Inland Valleys, the Community Foundation, the Mission Inn Foundation, and the Greater Riverside Chambers of Commerce—to name a few. She is also on the University of California, Riverside's Chancellor's Executive Roundtable and the A. Gary Anderson Graduate School of Management Executive Forum.

In 1998 Candace was recognized as one of "Twelve Women Who Make a Difference in the Inland Empire" by the Inland Empire Magazine and the Business Press name Wiest "A Woman of Distinction." She has also been listed in the International Who's Who of Professionals in the Year 2000 edition of Who's Who and has been named an Athena recipient as a YWCA Woman of Achievement in 1995.

Candace's tireless work as a community leader has contributed immeasurably to the betterment of the Inland Empire. Her involvement in community organizations, especially the Inland Empire Council of Boy Scouts of America, make me proud to call her a fellow community member, American and friend. I am grateful for her efforts and service and salute her as she is deservedly honored as the 2002 Inland Empire Boy Scouts of America Distinguished Citizen. I look forward to continuing to work with her for the good of our community in the future.

TRIBUTE TO VIETNAM VETERANS

HON. KAREN L. THURMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, in these troubled times when we in Washington are debating war, it brings us back to another time when the nation was debating its responsibility to preserve freedom throughout the world. It's hard to believe it has been more than a quarter century since the Vietnam War. Time has not healed all of the wounds. But time has allowed us to come together on one unmistakable conclusion—the soldiers who answered America's call in the Vietnam War are heroes by any measure.

I have had a lot of respect for the military all my life. My father served in the Air Force, and I grew up benefitting from the examples of men and women willing to make any sacrifice for this country and the ideals for which it stands. That experience may be the reason I cannot help but be devoted to our veterans and our men and women who serve now, particularly those from Florida and those who have moved to Florida.

Florida has a growing population of veterans including Vietnam veterans and I have been concerned that the rapid influx of these vets has strained the resources allocated in our state and has hindered our ability to keep the many promises that we have made to them. Due to that concern, I sponsored a measure that resulted in a funding allocation change for veterans' health care that has brought an additional $385 million to Florida and southern Georgia since 1997 and enabled the opening of additional community-based outpatient VA medical clinics in the 5th District and the state.

These veterans' benefits, however, are nothing more than the least our nation can and must do to thank those people who answered the nation's call to defend our freedom. The respect I and all of my colleagues—Democrats, Republicans, and Independents—feel for those who have served this nation is particularly strong for those who served in Vietnam. The Vietnam conflict was America's longest war and the burden it placed on those who answered the call to duty was immeasurable. Those who were there showed incredible physical courage. But they also showed incredible courage just to be part of America's armed forces at a time when people too often held our bravest men and women responsible for Washington's decisions which—whether right or wrong—they were sworn to execute to the best of their ability.

These men and women dealt with challenges that most of us cannot possibly contemplate. They could not sleep through a night because that's when the Viet Cong attacked. They could not get supplies because ambushes blew up convoys. There were no front lines to fortify. The enemy frequently was unseen. A booby trap could kill a soldier's buddies without him having any capacity to shoot back. The frustration, fear, physical and psychological wounds that these men and women endured must never be forgotten by the people and the nation that benefitted from their sacrifices. As Americans who are here today, we must acknowledge that we enjoy our lives and our freedom in part because 58,000 of our fellow countrymen laid down their lives for us.

Mr. Speaker, on October 18 through October 20, a 240-foot replica of the national Vietnam Veterans Memorial will be exhibited at North/Meadowlawn Funeral Home and Cemetery in my Congressional District in New Port Richey, Florida. The replica is part of a traveling memorial called the Vietnam Wall Experience that is allowing millions who cannot come to Washington to experience some of the serene power of the memorial and reflect on the sacrifices that thousands of Americans made for us. Like the Washington memorial, the Vietnam Wall Experience is an interactive and living memorial. It contains the names of the 58,175 Americans who never came home from Vietnam. However, the wall becomes the best memorial to them when it reflects the image of a living person who is remembering, mourning, and thanking these American heroes.

I want to thank all of the people involved in bringing this tribute to our community, especially Joseph A. Magaddino, MacDill Air Force Base, the Florida National Guard, the Florida Department of Veterans Affairs, Vietnam Veterans Inc., U.S. Postal Service Military Veterans, Pasco County Veterans Services, Suncoast Vietnam Veterans, Marine Corps League #567, Navy Seabees Island X-17, and all of the churches, schools, and scout groups that have contributed so much.

Of course, the greatest thanks goes to those who served our nation in Vietnam. We Members of Congress have a special obligation to remember the service of Vietnam veterans and provide decent health care, prescription drug benefits, educational assistance, and survivor benefits for their families. We must make every effort to fight for them just as they fought for us.

U.S.-INDIA RELATIONS

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, as we move toward the conclusion of the 107th Congress, I think it is fair to say that we will look back on this period as a time when South Asia became a major focus of U.S. foreign policy. Obviously, Afghanistan has occupied much of our attention, as our forces have routed the Taliban and Al Qaeda forces, which had turned that country into a base for international terrorism.

But a South Asian relationship that has perhaps received fewer headlines, but which I believe will prove to have a long-lasting and deep value for both countries, is our growing relationship with India.

After September 11, when so much changed for America and the world, India immediately stepped forward in full support and solidarity with the United States in the war on terrorism. But this level of cooperation and partnership between the U.S. and India in the struggle against terrorism was nothing new. The two countries had actually been cooperating on counter-terrorism efforts since the establishment of the U.S.-India Joint Working Group on Counter-terrorism in January 2000. Further, this cooperative system for addressing the problem of terrorism was part of a much larger realignment in relations between the world's two largest democracies.

When President Clinton traveled to India in March 2000—the first visit by an American President to India in more than 20 years—bilateral relations had already been showing signs of slow but steady improvement. President Clinton's trip to India, and the visit a few months later in September 2000 by Indian Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee—marking the first time that two Indo-U.S. summits had taken place in the same year—resulted in the development of a new framework for bilateral relations that was spelled out in "A Vision for the 21st Century." This Vision Statement called for a greater institutional dialogue, including a U.S.-India Financial and Economic Forum, a U.S.-India Commercial Dialogue, a U.S.-India Working Group on Trade, and joint groups dealing with such wide-ranging issues as energy and environment, science and technology exchange, and cooperation on the promotion of democracy internationally. I am pleased to report that these cooperative bodies have been active and have produced substantive results.

Since assuming office in early 2001, the Bush Administration has continued the progress begun by its predecessor. After 9/11, there was an upsurge in U.S.-India relations, given the urgent need to address the source of terrorism in Afghanistan. While India and the United States are united as democracies that have been the victims of horrendous terrorist violence, much of it coming from the same extremist sources based in Afghanistan and Pakistan, our relationship is by no means limited to our alliance in the war on terrorism. At their November 2001 meeting, President Bush and Prime Minister Vajpayee issued a joint statement affirming their commitment to continue transforming our relationship, including increased exchanges and technical cooperation in the defense and security areas. They also called for policies to enhance the economic and commercial ties between our nations and agreed to dialogue and cooperation in the areas of energy, the environment, health, space, export controls, science, biotechnology and information technology. The cordial relationship between President Bush and Prime Minister Vajpayee, like the warm ties that President Clinton continues to enjoy with the Prime Minister, serves as a visible symbol of the friendship and partnership between our countries on so many levels. In his visit to the United States this September for the UN General Assembly meeting, Prime Minister Vajpayee attended commemoration ceremonies for 9/11, demonstrating again that the Indian and American peoples stand together as supporters of democracy committed to standing steadfastly against the scourge of international terrorism.

Mr. Speaker, India's commitment to democracy is not just some abstract principle. For 50 years, India's political system has been based on free and fair elections. We have just witnessed the latest example of this commitment in India's state of Jammu and Kashmir. Despite the ongoing threat of terrorism, much of it emanating from neighboring Pakistan, four rounds of elections have just been completed in Jammu and Kashmir for the state assembly. Despite efforts by the terrorists to intimidate voters and candidates, the elections have been successfully concluded. Voter turnout has been estimated at a respectable 44 percent, and the early indications are that the current ruling party will lose its majority in the assembly. The fact that the state government will peacefully change hands as the result of an elections is but further evidence that India's democracy is not only alive and well, but thriving.

Mr. Speaker the progress in U.S.-India relations that has been made over the last several years has allowed us to broaden and deepen a relationship with a sister democracy in a part of the world where the United States has significant interests. It is a relationship that can only continue to bring both countries great benefits.

THE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SERVICES EXPANSION ACT OF 2002

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to enhance the membership, services and investment options available for credit unions under the Federal Credit Union Act. The bill also seeks to enhance Federal oversight and member protections in connection with certain credit union charter conversions.

I am offering the "Federal Credit Union Services Expansion Act of 2002" as a discussion document to highlight those areas of federal policy that I believe merit consideration by Congress. It is my hope that the proposals in this legislation will provide a template for new legislation in the next Congress.

Congress enacted landmark legislation in 1998 with the adoption of the Credit Union Membership Access Act. The credit union industry was confronted with a series of adverse Federal court rulings, culminating in a Supreme Court ruling early in 1998, that threatened to stall all future credit union growth and deny credit union services to millions of American families. We were able to forge consensus legislation, overcome the strong opposition of the banking industry, win near unanimous votes in both Houses and put a bill on the President's desk within a matter of months. This was a significant accomplishment, as well as a testament to the strong and growing support credit unions enjoy among American consumers.

I consider passage of the credit union legislation one of the important achievements of my years in Congress. This is in part because I consider credit unions as playing so important a role in the lives of so many American families and in so many of the communities that I represent. I believe even more strongly today that credit unions serve a unique and special role in our economy and society. The distinctive quality of credit unions is clearly a philosophy and attitude that reflects not only their structure as member organizations, but a mission that stresses service to members as their primary motivation.

As the author of many of the provisions of the 1998 legislation, I did not consider it a final answer to the issues raised by the bank litigation nor to the broader question of credit union growth. On the contrary, it was a critical first step in what I anticipated would be a gradual process of expanding credit union services to greater numbers of consumers. A number of compromises had to be made to achieve agreement on the legislation, some of which now appear unnecessary and should be revisited. And new advances in technology that continue to change the way we receive financial services also need to be accommodated in the law.

But other developments also require a review of the role credit unions play in our financial marketplace. We have witnessed the gradual withdrawal of traditional financial institutions from many of our nation's inner cities and rural communities. Entire communities have been devastated by a lack of financial investment, and large segments of our population have been left to the mercy of check cashiers, payday lenders, pawn shops and other fringe lenders to obtain basic financial services. Many traditional institutions are charging punitive fees and many other are engaging in predatory lending and other abusive practices. Even our college students have been bombarded with irresponsible offers of high-cost credit and buried by unpayable credit card debt.

Clearly, credit unions have not been part of this problem. But I am convinced they can be an important part of the solution. The key question for Congress is how to fashion our laws so that credit unions can remain faithful to their mission and their values and still become a solution to the financial needs of greater numbers of consumers? We want credit unions to become a financial services option for more Americans, but we do not want to render the core concept of credit union membership—a common bond—less meaningful.

I have struggled for several years to find an appropriate response to these questions. This effort has been complicated by a growing trend among larger credit unions to consider conversion to State credit union charters in response to State enticements of new powers, expanded membership options and reduced regulation. Equally serious has been the growing debate over conversion to private deposit insurance to avoid stronger safety and soundness regulation in federal law. While I remain a supporter of dual chartering for all financial institutions, I believe credit unions present unique issues and problems. As democratic, member-owned entities, credit unions need to involve members in any debate over changes in charters and insurance, and members need to be fully informed of the purpose and potential risks in such conversions.

The "Federal Credit Union Services Expansion Act" provides a blueprint of the initial steps needed to address these questions. First, the bill amends several sections of the 1998 Act to remove impediments to voluntary mergers among credit unions and conversions to community charters. In the later case, the bill would require the National Credit Union Administration to establish standards under which a credit union, such as a company-based credit union with members in a distant production facility, would be able to retain those members as part of a conversion to a community charter.

The bill would create new opportunities for expanding credit union membership and services to students to counter the growing abuse of college and high school students by credit card companies and other providers of high cost banking services. It would exempt student groups from the statutory 3,000-member limitation on new group additions to permit expansion of existing credit union services to college campuses, high schools and entire school districts, with the requirement that the credit union must also provide needed financial education and counseling services.

The bill would enable credit unions to respond to the growing need for basic services among individuals who lack traditional banking relationships and are being targeted by high cost check cashing and bill payment services. It would permit a credit union to provide needed check cashing and wire transfer services to non-members. This can provide an important marketing tool to potential members who may have distrusted traditional banking relationships in the past and are unaware of the services credit unions offer.

The bill also responds to the growing interest among credit unions in expanding small business lending services to members. Growing numbers of credit unions with active business lending programs are being restrained by the loan volume cap, equal to 12.25 percent of credit union net worth, that the Senate imposed as part of the 1998 legislation. My bill would permit additional business lending up to approximately 17 percent of credit union net worth. In addition, it would remove a long-time impediment in Small Business Administration regulations that has prevented credit union participation in the SBA's guaranteed small business loan program. SBA and other guaranteed loans are currently exempted from the statutory business loan limitation. In combination, these changes would provide ample room for most credit unions to substantially expand business lending services to their members.

The 1998 Act included an important provision originally authored by our colleague from Texas, Mr. Frost, that permitted an exception from the geographic limitations in the Act on new member group recruitment for potential members and groups who reside within areas determined to be financially underserved by the Treasury Department under criteria established for the Community Development Financial Institutions program. Unfortunately, an error in the statute limited this exception only to multiple group credit unions, excluding eligibility by single group, community and community development credit unions. The bill would correct this oversight and expand this important exception to greater numbers of credit unions. It would also expand the statute's definition of underserved areas to include areas with a significant need for affordable credit and banking services as evidenced by a documented concentration of payday lenders, money transfer and other high-cost fringe lenders. The change would permit credit unions to compete directly with fringe lenders who attempt to take advantage of vulnerable consumers.

The bill includes a number of important provisions to address potential problems in credit union conversions. It would raise substantially the minimum level of member participation in votes to convert a credit union to a mutual thrift institution or to transfer a credit union's deposits from federal share insurance. These are significant changes with serious consequences for members that require that members be fully informed and encouraged to participate in any conversion process. The bill also includes changes to provide earlier notice to NCUA regarding a credit union's intent to convert to a mutual thrift or to private insurance. And it proposes new conflict of interest protections to assure that a credit union officers and directors not attempt to persuade members to approve a conversion in which they receive any form of financial benefit.

Finally, the bill attempts to preserve the integrity and attractiveness of the federal credit union charter in response to State efforts to encourage conversions with escalating promises of new powers and reduced regulation. It would prohibit a state chartered insured credit union from including any person or organization within its membership that is not a permissible member for a federal credit union, or to engage in any activity, or exercise any asset power, that is not authorized for a federal credit union. It would authorize NCUA to provide exceptions on a case-by-case basis, provided that the exempted activity meets federal standards for safe and sound operation and is fully consistent with the mission and purpose of Federal credit unions.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this legislation in the hope that my House and Senate colleagues would consider it as a starting point for a broader credit union bill next session. Just as the legislation I introduced in 1997 became the framework for the 1998 Credit Union Membership Access Act, I would hope that introducing this bill will encourage action on new credit union legislation next year.

TRIBUTE TO SARAH AND HANNAH WALSH

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great enthusiasm that I recognize Sarah and Hannah Walsh of Grand Junction, Colorado for their outstanding performance this year with the Grand Junction High School Softball Team. Sarah and Hannah are the great-great-nieces of the legendary White Sox pitcher "Big Ed" Walsh. Today, the legacy of "Big Ed" Walsh's abilities have been passed to a new generation within the Walsh family, and I would like to pay tribute to Sarah and Hannah for their accomplishments as part of a rich and historic tradition.

"Big Ed" Walsh was born in Plains, Pennsylvania in 1881 and began his professional baseball career in 1904. He is considered one of the game's greatest pitchers and was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, New York in 1946. In fact, Mr. Walsh still holds the Major League record for the most games won by a pitcher in a single season—40 games in 1908. He also had two seasons where he pitched more than 400 innings, and won two World Series games. His career record was 195–126 and he is credited with having the lowest all-time career major league ERA (1.82).

Today, Sarah and Hannah are experiencing the same success on the baseball diamond as their uncle did almost one century ago. Currently, they are both starting players for the Grand Junction Tigers High School Softball Team. Sarah is a senior this year and plays first base, while her sister Hannah, a freshman, is currently playing right field and is the leadoff hitter for the Tigers. Together, they have helped the Tigers to a 9–1 season in the Southwestern League as well as a co-Southwestern League Championship.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great satisfaction that I recognize Sarah and Hannah Walsh before this body of Congress and this nation for their outstanding participation in the enduring legacy of our nation's pastime. I commend them for their outstanding performance and wish the Tigers the best of luck as they set their sights on the state championship.

IN MEMORIAM—DOUGLASS LORY
WARREN—FEBRUARY 18, 1950—
JULY 21, 2002

HON. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the life of my classmate and friend, Douglass Lory Warren, whose passions in life earned him the moniker "Renaissance Man" among his many admirers. He died Sunday, July 21, 2002, at Beth Israel Deaconess Hospital, of non-Hodgkins lymphoma, at the age of 52.

This Saturday, October 12, 2002, his friends and family will gather for a memorial service at the Memorial Chapel on the campus of Doug's beloved Harvard University. His classmates, business associates, neighbors, and many others whose lives he touched will share remembrances, anecdotes, and even photos for inclusion in a "Book of Doug" that will serve as a lasting reminder of this extraordinary individual.

Doug was born in Memphis, TN. He graduated from St. Paul's School, Concord, NH, and received his BS and MBA from Harvard University. He was a member of The Hasty Pudding Theatricals and the Harvard Krokodilos, and was president of The Harvard Independent. A resident of Hopkinton, he was a founder of the Hopkinton Education Foundation. At the time of his death, he was a partner with Tatum CFO Partners, LLP.

According to his brother Gregory, Douglass viewed the world with his heart rather than his head. Both the humble and the mighty deserved and received his equal care and consideration. As one friend put it, "Douglass was the man I knew I could call on in the middle of the night when I had to make an important decision—one that might even hurt me. I knew I could count on him to help me do the right thing. We might discuss it then, or he would say, 'Let me think about it and I'll call you back.' And he always called me back."

To his wife Nancy, his daughters Julia and Madeleine, his brother Gregory, and all who loved him, the prayers of this Congress are with you and your families.

HONORING MS. JANE PRICE TOBIN

HON. WILLIAM D. DELAHUNT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let this session of the 107th Congress end without commemorating the passing of a dearly loved member of my constituency, Mrs. Jane Tobin of Monument Beach. Mrs. Tobin died, on June 16, 2002. She was a resident of Monument Beach since 1973, when she and her husband, Lt. Col. Edward Tobin moved there after his retirement. She is survived by her son, Peter and his wife Sharon, of Redmond, Washington, her grandchildren, Jason, Jodi, and Adam Bannerman, the children of her late daughter, Kathy Bannerman and her husband Moss, one brother, James Price, and countless nieces, nephews and friends.

Known as Jen to her siblings, Jane was born on January 8, 1914 in Brooklyn, New York, the daughter of Jenny and Edward Price. She was the second oldest in a close knit family that included her three brothers, Edward, John and James, and one sister, Joan. Jane attended Our Lady of Guadalupe grammar school and graduated from Madison High School in Brooklyn in 1932. She married Edward Tobin, also of Brooklyn on October 5, 1940. Ed worked for Con Edison until the war broke out and he joined the Army Air Corps in hopes of becoming a pilot. An injury prevented this and in the early years of the war he served as a pilot instructor before being transferred to the Quartermaster Corps. During these years, Jane foreswore the comforts of her parents' home to travel with her husband. She often reminisced about their early experiences, joking that off-base housing was so sparse they she and Ed once shared a "cottage" in Arkansas that had been a chicken coop.

The young couple started a family in 1945 with the birth of their son Peter. Almost two years later they were blessed with a daughter, Kathy. Ed decided to make the military his career, and when he went to the Philippines in 1947, Jane followed later on a troop ship with their two small children, Peter, then age 3 and Kathy, then thirteen months old. This "adventure" as Jane characterized it, began a series of journeys that would take her to military bases overseas and throughout the US, including the Philippines, Cape Cod, Alaska and Newfoundland.

When Jane and Ed returned to the United States from the Philippines in 1948, they were quartered in the Nahant, Massachusetts, Mifflin Estate, which was the family home of John Cabot Lodge. This posting brought Jane's parents and siblings geographically closer to her and occasioned many happy family get togethers. It also began Ed and Jane's relationship with the great state of Massachusetts. In 1950 they were transferred to Camp Edwards on Cape Cod, where they bought their first home.

Jane's innate curiosity and graciousness made her a perfect partner in her husband's career which, after Camp Edwards, took them to Chicago, Alaska, Texas, and Washington, DC, where Lt. Colonel Tobin retired. Ed then became a civilian employee, running base exchanges in Newfoundland, Amarillo Texas, and Albuquerque, New Mexico. Throughout this period Jane made sure to go home at least once a year to see her parents in Brooklyn and to help care for them and other elderly relatives.

In 1973 Ed retired completely and the couple headed East, where their fond memories of the Cape brought them back to Monument Beach. There, Ed could enjoy his fishing and golf and the two of them were often seen on late summer afternoons taking a quick dip at "Mo Beach." They also bought a camper so that they could continue traveling and visit family members and the many friends they had made over the years. They were able to share the joys of retirement until Ed's death in August 1982.

Deeply saddened by the loss of her lifetime partner, Jane's deep faith and courage helped her through this difficult period. Her desire to stay active and contribute found expression in her membership in the Ladies Guild at St. John the Evangelist in Pocasset, and her part-time volunteer job at the St. Peter's Thrift Shop in Buzzards Bay. Jane also continued to spend time with her family, traveling to Louisiana and Texas to be with her daughter Kathy and Moss and their young family, and to Australia where her son Peter and his wife were living (and where at age 80, she went scuba diving). Shaken by the sudden death of her daughter Kathy in 1993, Jane's remarkable faith and courage helped her through that most unexpected and dreadful of parental experiences. Although deeply saddened, Jane carried on with grace, never giving in to anger, bitterness or complaint. She continued her travels and volunteer work, and graciously opened her home and heart to family and friends every summer.

Her thoughtfulness, genuine interest in people, and her warmth, openness, and grace drew people of all ages and backgrounds to Jane. Jane's reserve led her often to wonder why so many people wanted to spend time with her. When told that one of her doctors had referred to her in a medical report as "a truly delightful patient," she was both skeptical and surprised. But such assessments came as no surprise to Jane's extended family and friends. Her innate modesty kept her from seeing what everyone around her saw—a woman who had led an extraordinarily interesting life, who was always interested in others, who did not judge people but accepted them as they were, and whose serenity and grace were an inspiration to everyone.

At age 89, Jane's faith in God, which had characterized her life and inspired so many around her, took her to the home she had so faithfully sought. She was, in her words, "ready to go," and her passing was as gracious as was her life. I, along with many in my constituency and elsewhere are saddened by the loss of such a remarkable woman. Her presence enriched all who knew her, and I extend my heartfelt condolences all of Jane Tobin's family and friends.

TRIBUTE TO JOE CHRISTIAN, JR.

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Joe Christian, Jr., a classmate, good friend, great teacher and successful businessman who worked for twenty years as a leading Sales Representative with the Procter and Gamble sales organization. He is a highly skilled motivator and communicator with special strengths in public speaking, training and marketing.

Mr. Christian is a native of Fairfield, Alabama near Birmingham and received his high school diploma from Fairfield Industrial High School in 1952. He served in the United States Air Force from 1953 until 1957 and received an Honorable Discharge from the Reserves in 1961. After his active military service, Mr. Christian received an Associate Business Degree from Lewis College of Business in Detroit, Michigan in 1959 and subsequently matriculated at South Carolina State College (University) where I had the pleasure of meeting him. We became fast friends and remain so today.

October 11, 2002

After graduating from South Carolina State University in 1961 with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Business Administration, Mr. Christian began his professional career in 1962 as an Assistant Purchasing Agent at Tuskegee University in Alabama. After a year, he returned to South Carolina State University to serve as a Junior Accountant and Chief of Inventories and he stayed in that position until 1965. For the next four years, he worked at Savannah State College in Georgia where he served as the Director of Auxiliary Services and managed the College's physical plant (including dormitory equipment and renovation). He returned to Orangeburg in 1969 and served for a year as Business Manager of Claflin College where he managed a budget of $1 million and a physical plant of $3 million. He also supervised office managers in the College bookstore, dining hall and accounting offices.

Mr. Christian decided to go back to school and earned a Master of Business Administration Degree from Clark-Atlanta University's School of Business in 1972. Armed with his MBA, Mr. Christian began a new phase of his career in the corporate sector that lasted twenty years. As a Sales Representative for Grocery Retail Operations at Proctor and Gamble, Mr. Christian was responsible for expanding the paper, bar soap, food and beverage divisions and for expanding markets for new products.

He retired from Proctor and Gamble in 1991 and in 1992 returned to his teaching roots. For eight years, he served as an Adjunct Professor at Fayetteville State University's School of Business and Economics in North Carolina, and taught courses on American Capitalism, Retailing, Sales Management, and Principles of Marketing. Mr. Christian presently serves as a substitute teacher for the Wake County Public Schools in Raleigh, North Carolina.

Mr. Christian is a member, deacon and Sunday school teacher at the Trinity Baptist Church. He has received numerous awards, including the Ford Foundation Fellowship Award, and the Distinguished Service Award from the Durham Sertoma Club. He is also a recipient of the Silver Citation from Omega Psi Phi Fraternity.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues to join me today in honoring Joe Christian, Jr., a man who has touched innumerable lives in his community in countless ways. As we celebrate Homecoming at our alma mater, South Carolina State University, I wish him continued success and Godspeed!

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MEDICAL DEVICE USER FEE AND MODERNIZATION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. MARK E. SOUDER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 7, 2002

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the House passed H.R. 3580, the Medical Device User Fee and Modernization Act of 2002.

Kosciusko County in Northern Indiana is one of the nation's largest centers of the medical device industry. I have visited many of the medical device manufacturers in my home state, and continue to be amazed with the marvels that these companies produce every day. Injuries and illnesses that only a decade ago would have been debilitating are now curable, thanks in no small part to the ingenuity and innovation of companies that produce medical devices.

H.R. 3580 is a win for both medical device producers and for consumers. It streamlines the process by which medical devices will be approved by the Food and Drug Administration by establishing a new user fee program similar to the one that exists for pharmaceuticals and biologics. By doing so, it helps medical device producers get their products to the marketplace more quickly, making them available to those who need them. The legislation also establishes a new Office of Combination Products at the FDA so that producers of combination drugs and medical devices do not have to be approved by two separate agencies.

Even more impressive is that medical device consumers are not being forced to pay for the creation of a new, faster approval system for medical devices. Under this legislation, the companies themselves will fund the expedited process.

It is important to note that this expedited procedure will not sacrifice thoroughness for speed. This legislation carefully spells out strict standards to ensure the absolute highest level of safety.

On behalf of medical device manufacturers in Warsaw, Indiana as well as those across the nation who benefit from their products, I am pleased to support this bill, and urge its passage.

A SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO MELVIN MURRAY FOR HIS DEDICATED SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY OF FOSTORIA

HON. PAUL E. GILLMOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay special tribute to an outstanding gentleman, and good friend, from Ohio's Fifth Congressional District. Melvin Murray, of Fostoria, Ohio, is being honored for his dedicated service and loyalty to the citizens of Fostoria.

Mr. Speaker, Melvin's efforts are being recognized by the Kaubisch Memorial Public Library, of which he has served on the Board of Directors for over fifty years. Serving the community was not only Melvin's duty but also his honor. These chances to give back to the community have brought him a lifetime of both personal and professional achievement. Melvin truly is a valued asset to the City of Fostoria.

Melvin has served Fostoria well throughout his years, both professionally and philanthropically. He began as a radio station manager in Fostoria immediately following his graduation from The Ohio State University, and has since utilized his talents and skills to become the station's president, and largest shareholder of the same radio corporation which would soon own several radio stations throughout greater Northwest Ohio.

Melvin, now enjoying his retirement years, has dedicated his charitable services to the Fostoria Glass Heritage Gallery & Museum, serving as its curator. He has also spent his time authoring several books on the subject of antique glassware, and is regarded as the foremost authority in the country on identification of Fostoria, Ohio glassware.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying special tribute to Melvin Murray. Our communities are served well by having such honorable and giving citizens, like Melvin, who care about the well being and stability of their communities. We wish him the very best on this special occasion.

HONORING DEPUTY ASSISTANT DIRECTOR KATHERINE CROWLEY OF UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE

HON. PETER T. KING

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of Deputy Assistant Director Katherine Crowley of the United States Secret Service. After serving in a liaison capacity between Congress and the Secret Service for the last seven years, Katherine, who is known as K.C. to her friends, will be leaving Washington, D.C. to become the Special Agent in Charge of the Secret Service's Little Rock Field Office.

It has been a privilege to work with K.C. these last several years. She is well known throughout the congressional community, including by her colleagues in the U.S. Capitol Police, and is widely respected and valued for her professionalism, integrity, work ethic and of course, her kind heart. She has not only ably represented the Secret Service these last seven years, but has become a friend of the United States Congress.

Next year, K.C. will be celebrating her 20th year as a member of our Nation's most elite law enforcement agency. K.C. graduated from Westfield State College in her home state of Massachusetts in 1978 with a Bachelor of Science degree in criminal justice. She took a position as an officer with the Arkansas State Police, and worked in the Little Rock area for nearly four years. She then applied for a special agent position with the Secret Service through their Little Rock office, and became an agent in 1983. She worked as a field agent in Little Rock for three years before transferring to the Vice Presidential Protection Division for another three years. K.C. returned to her home state in 1989 for a four-year stint in the Boston Field Office. In 1993, K.C. was assigned to the prestigious Presidential Protection Division, with responsibility for protecting President Clinton and the First Lady.

K.C. continued her rise in the Secret Service in 1996, when she was promoted to the position of Assistant to the Special Agent in Charge of the Capitol Hill and Interagency Liaison Division. It was during this time when many of us in Congress were first introduced to this exceptional individual. K.C. was again promoted to Assistant Special Agent in Charge of the Office of Congressional Affairs in 1999, and later became the Special Agent in Charge of the same division. In 2001, K.C. was named Deputy Assistant Director of the Office of Government and Public Affairs, one of the highest ranking women in the entire Secret Service.

This year, in addition to being named as the Special Agent in Charge of the Little Rock Field Office, K.C. was also selected as a candidate for the Senior Executive Service.

During her tenure as a liaison representative to Congress, K.C. helped steer legislation that will have a lasting impact on the future mission and role of the Secret Service. This included legislation to provide the Secret Service with jurisdiction to investigate cyber crimes, to coordinate security at National Special Security Events, to provide a nationwide expansion of the Secret Service electronic crime task force initiative, and to launch their world-renowned National Threat Assessment Center.

On behalf of the House of Representatives, I want to express our gratitude and appreciation to K.C. Crowley for her many years of public service as a member of the Secret Service. She will be dearly missed, but we all join in wishing her well in her new role as the head of the Little Rock Field Office.

CHARLES E. COBB, JR. AWARD

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I had the distinct pleasure of participating and helping to select this year's recipients of the annual Charles E. Cobb, Jr. Award for Initiative and Success in Trade Development. The award recognizes both an Ambassador and non-Ambassador who are the most innovative and successful in developing trade and promoting exports for the United States. The recipients of the award each receive a certificate signed by the Secretary of State and $5,000. Along with Alan Larson, Under Secretary of State for Economic, Business and Agricultural Affairs, I would like to bring your attention to the exemplary work of these career Department of State employees:

AMERICAN DIPLOMATS: BUSINESS IS THEIR "BUSINESS"

Shortly after arriving in Cotonou, U.S. Ambassador Pamela Bridgewater began exploring with the President of Benin ways in which an American company could resolve the challenges faced by a major U.S. telecommunication investment in this small West African country. In Poland, Ambassador Chris Hill used strong personal relationships with senior Polish government decisionmakers, including the Prime Minister, to assist a U.S. company win a multi-million dollar contract to privatize a Polish defense industry. Ian Campbell, an economic officer in Jordan is helping in the formation of a business-government steering committee that will implement the U.S.-Jordan Free Trade Agreement. And Laura Byergo has turned the American Mongolia Business Group in Ulaan Baatar into an effective vehicle for improving the business climate there and increasing American exports.

What these diplomats—and hundreds like them—have in common is their understanding that advancing opportunities overseas for American business is central to maintaining our nation's economic prosperity and national security. Exports accounted for more than one quarter of our economic growth during the past decade; they currently support an estimated 12 million high-paying jobs.

American diplomats have made business their "business." Support for U.S. business is now a central feature of the work of our 150-plus posts worldwide. Business executives, who only a decade ago shied away from contacting American missions about their business problems, know that if help is needed—with a contract, a tender, access to local government officials—U.S. diplomatic missions abroad are prepared to assist. Ambassadors today often spend 30 to 60 percent of their time on commercial issues; their doors and those of their staff are open to companies that provide jobs for American workers and they are working hard to assist them in promoting the export of our country's goods and services.

To add momentum to this sea-change in the work of American diplomats, Charles Cobb Jr., former Ambassador to Iceland, established an annual award in 1991 to recognize two individuals at posts abroad—an Ambassador and a non-Ambassador—for their success in developing trade and promoting exports. Along with several other government officials and U.S. business executives, we were privileged to participate in reviewing an impressive list of nominees and deciding on the recipients of this year's award.

Ambassador Bridgewater in Benin and Ms. Byergo in Mongolia were this year's recipients in recognition of their energy, imagination, initiative and leadership on the business front. Ambassador Bridgewater was cited for championing American investments in Benin and for working tirelessly to promote the benefits of the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), a U.S. law passed in 2000 that promotes trade and development in sub-Saharan Africa. On that score, she identified sectors of Benin's economy best positioned to benefit from AGOA provisions. With AGOA, we have an opportunity to go beyond traditional development assistance and give all of the countries of sub-Saharan Africa, no matter how small or how poor, an opportunity to avail themselves of trade incentives if they pursue economic reform and move toward democracy and good governance.

Ms. Byergo improved the business environment for American products in Mongolia by persuading the government of Mongolia to act upon the recommendations for change made by U.S. business executives. Her "Open Government Initiative" brought U.S. business and Mongolian government officials together to address specific problems such as taxation policy.

Others nominated for the award this year were praised for working with business to cut through bureaucratic red tape, improve the regulatory environment, reduce high tariffs, encourage privatization, and combat corruption. These efforts to push the envelope on economic policy often translated into greater transparency and business opportunities.

Past winners of the Cobb Award continue to distinguish themselves in government service and with the business community, including Richard Boucher, the Secretary of State's spokesman; Beth Jones, Assistant Secretary for European and Eurasian Affairs; and John Wolf, Assistant Secretary for Non-proliferation.

The commercial advocacy of American diplomats ensures that what we have won for American business and American workers at the negotiating table—in bilateral and free trade agreements, regional trade compacts and the World Trade Organization—is translated into commercial opportunities and ultimately business contracts.

In U.S. missions large and small, wherever American business sees opportunity and needs assistance in winning a fair market share, our diplomats are there to help. Their work is key not just to our own future, but to the welfare of others in the world community as well.

CONGRATULATING THE LA SPARKS

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my hometown WNBA team, the Los Angeles Sparks. Today we passed H. Res. 532 which honors the Los Angeles Sparks players and staff for winning the WNBA championship and completing a remarkable season.

On August 30th, they won the WNBA title for the second year in a row. The Sparks were competing against New York Liberty for this year's title. It was a competitive series and the decisive game went down to the last couple of seconds. With the game tied at 66, rookie Nikki Teasley got the ball and scored the winning basket—a three pointer, putting the team up for good and clinching the championship. Both teams played superbly. It was exciting, a great show of gamesmanship and the fans were treated to an exceptional game. Lisa Leslie was named the series Most Valuable Player. This is an honor she received last year, as well. She finished the game with seventeen points.

With this championship, the LA Sparks join the Houston Comets as the only multiple titleholders in the league's six-year history. In addition, by winning every playoff game they played, they tied the Comets record of sweeping all six playoff games. The team's winning streak is nine if you count the last three games of the regular season.

It was not an easy season, but the women worked hard, played hard and were rewarded for their efforts. That is something from which we can all learn. So as I close, I would like to congratulate the Sparks and thank them for being leaders. I hope they continue to set good examples for our city.

INTRODUCTION OF THE ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE ACT OF 2002

HON. HILDA L. SOLIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleague, Congressman MARK UDALL, in introducing the Environmental Justice Act of 2002.

This bill will codify a 1994 environmental justice Executive Order by President Bill Clinton.

Executive Order 12898, the "Federal Actions to Address Environmental Justice in Minority Populations and Low Income Populations," attempts to address environmental injustice within existing federal laws and regulations by prohibiting discriminatory practices in programs that receive federal funds.

This issue has been one of my priorities as a public servant because I have seen the damage—first hand—that environmental injustice can bring to poor and minority communities.

I grew up in the shadow of one of the largest landfills in the country.

As the landfill grew, so did other regional pollution.

Gravel pits that are miles wide and hundreds of feet deep were dug to build roads and buildings in California.

Heavy industry moved in—especially during World War II when my area manufactured jet fuel.

And the rivers that were once free-flowing water bodies were reduced to sewer channels.

Areas where my family would picnic or enjoy nature when I was little are now part of the dirtiest watershed in the country.

In the Los Angeles area, it is estimated that over 71 percent of African Americans and 50 percent of Latinos reside in areas with the most polluted air, while only 34 percent of whites live in highly polluted areas.

Even our open space tends to be divided among financial or other demographic lines.

In Los Angeles neighborhoods where 1990 household income averaged less than $20,000 a year, there was less than a half-acre of parkland for every 1,000 residents.

The ratio was more than 40 times higher—21.2 acres for every 1,000 people—in neighborhoods where household incomes were $40,000 or higher.

Park access was similarly lopsided when broken down by race.

Majority white neighborhoods had 95.7 acres of parkland for every 1,000 children, compared with 5 acres in Latino areas, 2.9 acres in African-American neighborhoods and 6.3 acres in Asian-American areas.

In the past we might have accepted our fate but today we chose to fight back.

Hardly a day passes without the media informing us about a neighborhood that is fighting a landfill, incinerator, chemical plant or some other polluting industry.

This was not always the case.

Just three decades ago, the concept of environmental justice had not registered on the radar screens of most environmental, civil rights or social justice groups.

Today, we enjoy a greater ability to connect with the public by media but our laws still offer few protections to disadvantaged communities.

I am committed to changing this and look forward to working with Congressman UDALL and others to make sure that environmental protection starts with environmental equality.

I ask my colleagues to support this bill and yield back the balance of my time.

APPLICATION OF BERRY AMENDMENT TO MULTI-YEAR AIRCRAFT LEASE PILOT PROGRAM

HON. TED STRICKLAND

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my appreciation for the provision in the Defense Appropriations Conference Report that helps to reaffirm the certainty of the specialty metals clause of the Berry Amendment. The provision in the conference report directs the Secretary of the Air Force to provide Congress with estimates of the amount, value, and overall percentage of foreign and domestic-sourced specialty metals to be used in the fleet of leased aircraft under the Multi-Year Aircraft Lease Pilot Program. The Secretary must compare this data to the specialty metal content of military aircraft the Air Force has procured over the last five years. This measure will provide valuable data to Congress to ensure that the objective of the Berry Amendment and particularly the specialty metals clause of this long-standing procurement rule stands firm. Without proper enforcement of the Berry Amendment, the U.S. titanium industry could shrink and lead the Department of Defense to become dependent on foreign supplies from Russia for this strategic material that is of critical importance to the military aircraft industry.

TRIBUTE TO TOM MULLEN, RIVERSIDE COUNTY SUPERVISOR

HON. KEN CALVERT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to an individual whose dedication to the community and to the overall well-being and prosperity of the County of Riverside, California, is exceptional. The County of Riverside has been fortunate to have dynamic and dedicated community leaders who willingly and unselfishly give time and talent to making their communities a better place to live and work. Tom Mullen is one of these individuals. After two terms as Riverside County Supervisor, Tom is retiring this year. I know all of the citizens in our great County will miss Tom and wish him well as he moves to new endeavors.

Tom Mullen is a native of Hastings, Nebraska and has served his country honorably in the United States Air Force. Tom also served his community as a law enforcement officer and as an aide to State Senator Bob Pressley. Mullen was first elected to the Fifth District Supervisor seat for Riverside, California in 1994. As a county supervisor, he has been responsible for a population greater than 12 states and a multi-billion dollar budget that would rank among Forbes Magazine's Fortune 500 companies. Mullen has also been the leader for an ambitious planning initiative, the Riverside County Integrated Project, a three-pronged plan to simultaneously address transportation, habitat conservation and housing demands brought on by rapid population growth in Riverside County. The plan has been praised as a national model for other states and communities to emulate.

Under Tom Mullen's excellent leadership Riverside County has achieved impressive results. The economy has grown significantly and during his tenure more than 350,000 jobs have been generated. Mullen's aggressive hiring of new Sheriff Deputies and prosecutors has produced a 50-percent decrease in crime since 1994.

In recognition of Tom's exemplary work as a Riverside County Supervisor, Tom has been awarded the Riverside Community College Alumnus of the Year 2000; Management Leader of the Year 1998 by the A. Gary Anderson School of Management at the University of California, Riverside; and the Good Government Award from the Riverside County Chapter of the Building Industry Association.

Tom is a devoted husband to wife, Kathy, and proud father and grandfather.

Tom's tireless work as the Riverside County Supervisor has contributed unmeasurably to the well-being and betterment of Riverside County. His outstanding involvement in the community makes me proud to call him a fellow community member, American and friend.

RECOGNIZING TAIWAN'S 91ST NATIONAL DAY

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, as a longtime supporter and proud member of the Taiwan Caucus, I would like to recognize and congratulate Taiwan today on its 91st National Day. Taiwan has made many significant accomplishments during its brief history. Taiwan has been a true friend to the U.S., and one of our major trading partners.

Taiwan is one of the largest export markets for many states, including New York. With a population of 23 million, the island of Taiwan is the world's 12th largest economy and seventh largest market for U.S. exports worldwide. Trade between Taiwan and the U.S. presently tops $51 billion. Most importantly, these economic ties have strengthened our bilateral relationship.

Taiwan is a thriving democracy, supportive of political freedoms and human rights. Its constitution guarantees citizens freedom of assembly, expression and association, freedom of religion, and freedom of the press. Taiwan conducts free and fair elections, and is home to more than 90 political parties.

I applaud Taiwan's commitment to upholding the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, and the Declaration and Action Program of the 1993 Vienna Conference on Human Rights. I thank Taiwan for providing humanitarian assistance to Afghan refugees, and for its generous contributions to the International Community.

The U.S. is firmly committed to the 1979 Taiwan Relations Act, and supports the details of the 2000 Taiwan Security Enhancement Act. We must continue to support Taiwan's defense by offering a robust arms sales package, and recognize Taiwan's need for operational training to effectively use U.S. weapons in case of need.

I fully support Taiwan's efforts to join the World Health Organization. Last year, the House and Senate unanimously passed a bill authorizing the State Department to develop a plan to assist Taiwan in achieving observer status at the annual WHO Assembly. The President signed this important bill into law in May 2001.

Last year, President Chen Shui-ban made a transit stop in the U.S. The dignified treatment Taiwan's democratic leader received was encouraging. I support lifting restrictions on high-level visits by officials from Taiwan to help promote a balanced understanding of issues on both sides of the Taiwan Strait.

Taiwan's President Chen Shui-ban was one of the first world leaders to condemn the events of September 11th and to support U.S. efforts to combat terrorism. I am pleased to express my appreciation for Taiwan's gestures of goodwill on this day of celebration.

TRIBUTE TO MR. CHUCK GRAHAM

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with you my tremendous pride in a member of the United States Forest Service who has served his fellow citizens and his nation for almost 40 years, Mr. Chuck Graham. Chuck has not only served in the finest tradition of the Forest Service, he has also made the Forest Service a great neighbor to the communities in which he has served. Chuck's career has been guided by a deep commitment to public service. In every community, from Prospect and Powers to John Day and Lakeview, he has been a friend to all who have known him.

Most recently, serving as Forest Supervisor of the Fremont and Winema National Forests in Oregon, Chuck has always seemed to find a way to bring Forest Service interests and community interests together. Whether he was working out a land exchange to preserve the local ski area or preserving a long-standing sustained yield unit, Chuck has always been guided by common sense and innovation to solve problems and capitalize on opportunities.

Community leaders and those who use our public lands admire Chuck for his sensible approach to the stewardship of our natural resources. Chuck's strong belief in responsible multiple-use has made the forests he's cared for a valuable asset for all of us. In his innovative management of the forests, he never lost sight of the fact that the chief function of a forest is to sustain clean and abundant water. Chuck has demonstrated that when you manage a forest for its water, you bring out the best that God intended in a forest.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, we can all take pride in the way Chuck oversaw the merging of the local Bureau of Land Management and United States Forest Service into one, cohesive, efficient, and responsive unit. At the headquarters in Lakeview, the BLM and Forest Service not only share a building, they share a philosophy and a mission. Because they work so well together, Chuck and his BLM counterpart, Steve Ellis, have created the model for effectively combining assets of our land management agencies to deliver great service at a significant savings to the taxpayer.

Those who have worked with Chuck admire his management style. Chuck sees every employee not just for what they are but also for what they can become. He is dedicated to helping his people reach their full potential in an organization that has meant a great deal to him during a long and productive career. He has steered his organization with a steady and gentle hand, always mindful of his responsibility to the health of the forest and the vitality of the surrounding communities.

Chuck is known by the managers of Region 6 as the "go-to guy." When there is a big project, a vexing problem, or an exceptionally bright opportunity, the word in the Regional Office is to "run it by Chuck". Chuck has had a distinguished career of getting things done for us, his neighbors, and for the environment we all share.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, please join me today in saluting a man who has served us well. Chuck Graham represents the best in the Forest Service and serves as an example for all to follow. Chuck's career truly represents the "service" in Forest Service.

RECOGNIZING STUDENTS IN FREE ENTERPRISE AND DR. ALVIN ROHRS' 20 YEARS OF LEADERSHIP

HON. ROY BLUNT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I stand before this body to honor an institution and its leader who have championed our free enterprise system for two decades. Students in Free Enterprise is a nonprofit education corporation whose mission is to work in partnership with businesses and institutions of higher education to provide university students the opportunity to understand and achieve success in a business world open to individual enterprise. Students are guided through the development of leadership, teamwork and communication skills by learning, practicing and teaching the principles of free enterprise.

For the last 20 years, Dr. Alvin Rohrs has served as President and CEO of Students in Free Enterprise (SIFE). His tireless work has seen an international expansion of SRFE from 18 to 31 countries. Its classes, which teach of the principles of market economics, entrepreneurship, business ethics and personal financial success, are in 1,200 schools of higher learning worldwide. SIFE proponents and students hold annual international competitions that emphasize the strengths and positive societal contributions of the free enterprise System.

The free enterprise system reaches its zenith when it is coupled with individual liberties. Its principles resonate with many people who believe in the idea that hard work, free markets, and democracy lead to prosperity and social responsibility. More than 170 of America's business executives from some of the world's largest companies are members of the SIFE board.

Alvin Rohrs' commitment to free enterprise has been unwavering. Prior to his work with SIFE, Rohrs served as the Director of the Gene Taylor National Free Enterprise Center at his alma mater, Southwest Baptist University. He came to SIFE in 1983, a year after receiving his Juris Doctorate from the University of Missouri Columbia School of Law, where he graduated with full honors in the top ten percent of his class.

Dr. Rohrs has received the National Charity Award twice, honoring his leadership in SIFE. He has also received the National Entrepreneur of the Year Award for "Supporter of Entrepreneurship." Active in community service and church work, Rohrs is a member of the Missouri Bar Association and serves as a member and Deacon at First Baptist Church in Bolivar, Missouri. He resides in Bolivar with his wife, Bolivar Municipal Court Judge Elizabeth Rohrs and their two children.

We wish him and Students in Free Enterprise continued success in spreading the gospel of free enterprise and entrepreneurship, on which our American way of life is founded.

SPECIAL JOINT SESSION OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS

HON. SUE WILKINS MYRICK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, September 6 of this year, a special Joint Session of the United States Congress gathered in New York City to remember the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. This special session reminded us of the lives that were lost and the heroes that were found all across this country on that terrible day. I am honored to have taken part in this unique session.

We convened at Federal Hall, where the first Congress met over two centuries ago, and a few blocks from where the World Trade Center towers once stood proud and tall.

Mr. Speaker, we met to remember the thousands of lives that ended so abruptly that day. We prayed for the families of those that were lost. We prayed for the families who had to say goodbye before they were ready. The wound that America suffered on that day will always be remembered.

We also expressed our most sincere thanks to the firefighters, police officers emergency personnel, and all others who risked and gave their lives on that day. These brave men and women, along with their peers across the country, risk their lives every day to protect those around them. Expressing our thanks to them is a long overdue action.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we recommit ourselves to eradicating terrorism from the world and to making sure that those responsible for this horrible attack on America are brought to justice. American soldiers are now stationed across the globe, helping to create a world where those who live in freedom can also live free of the fear of terrorism. America and the world owe these soldiers a debt of gratitude.

I am proud to have joined Congress on September 6, to remember the lives that were lost and to show those who would harm America that we will not forget, but we will overcome.

INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION RECOGNIZING THE GOALS AND IDEALS OF RUNAWAY YOUTH PREVENTION MONTH

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleague from New York, Mr. ISRAEL, in introducing a resolution recognizing the goals and ideals of Runaway Youth Prevention Month, which is being sponsored by the National Network for Youth and the National Runaway Switchboard.

Recently, a number of highly publicized child abductions focused the attention of Americans on the plight of exploited and abducted children, and the pain and agony suffered by the families left behind.

Recognizing the serious threat that faces our children every day as they travel to and from school and play with friends in parks and neighborhoods, President Bush last week convened a conference on missing, exploited and runaway children.

Again, the main focus was on abducted and exploited children. And rightly so. One child abduction is one too many.

But let's put the problem of child abductions into perspective. Five times as many children run away as are abducted in this country, and one runaway child is also one too many.

There are approximately 1.3 million young Americans on the street every day as a result of running away and/or homelessness. One in seven children between the ages of 10-18 will run away. Some will return within a few days, while others will remain on the streets and never return. And each year, assault, illness or suicide will take the lives of 5,000 runaway youth. That's 5,000 too many.

There are many reasons why children run away from home. Some are expelled from their homes by their families, or separated from their parents because of death or divorce. As much as violence is involved in the abduction of a child, so too does physical, sexual, and emotional abuse at home often cause a child to run away.

Having run away, these youth are now homeless, too poor to secure their own basic needs, and are often ineligible or unable to access medical or mental health resources.

Many runaway youth also have difficulty obtaining an education because they are homeless. Being a runaway or being without a home should not mean being without an education. Yet that is what homelessness means for far too many of our poor and runaway children and youth today.

Congress recognized the importance of educating homeless and runaway youth when it enacted in 1987 the McKinney Education program. But despite the progress made over the past decade, we know that homeless children continue to miss out on what often is the only source of stability and promise in their lives—school attendance.

That's why I introduced H.R. 623, the McKinney-Vento Homeless Education Act of 2001, which was included in the No Child Left Behind Act that became law at the beginning of this year.

By incorporating the innovative provisions contained in my legislation, H.R. 1 strengthened the McKinney program, ensuring that a homeless or runaway child is immediately enrolled in school. That means no red tape, no waiting for paperwork, and no bureaucratic delays. A school liaison helps runaway or homeless youth make certain decisions about their education, and upon enrollment, ensures they have access to the special assistance and services available to runaway and homeless youth.

This is one small way that more is being done to help children who are runaways or homeless. There are many others—individuals and organizations—who are doing whatever they can to assist America's runaway youth by providing food, shelter, clothing, and counseling. Others are working with families to prevent a child from running away in the first place. And still others are intervening and advocating on behalf of children and giving them options other than running away.

One such organization is the National Runaway Switchboard, which provides crisis intervention and referrals to reconnect runaway youth with their families, and to link young people to local resources that provide positive alternatives to running. I am compelled to call attention to this important resource because it originated in Chicago.

Founded by a group of Chicago agencies, the National Runaway Switchboard was established in 1971 to provide comprehensive crisis intervention services for young people in Chicago. It was conceived as a centralized organization with free, 24-hour services, expertise in all youth-related issues, and as an information clearinghouse. In 1974, it became a national resource, and now is the federally designated national communication system for runaway and homeless youth. The Switchboard is still available 24 hours a day, and fields more than 100,000 calls each year from the nation's runaway and homeless youth.

The National Runaway Switchboard and the National Network for Youth have designated November as National Runaway Prevention Month. The purpose of this month is to call attention to the problem, its causes and impacts, and all those organizations and services that exist to help both runaways and their families.

It is fitting for Congress to support the goals and ideals of National Runaway Prevention Month, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.

TRIBUTE TO MR. LES SCHWAB

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay special tribute to an outstanding business leader and gentleman from Oregon's Second Congressional District, Mr. Les Schwab. I am pleased to announce that this year marks the 50th anniversary of the company he founded, Les Schwab Tires.

In 1952, Les bought a small tire store in the city of Prineville, deep in the heart of Central Oregon, for $3,500. From that simple investment, Les Schwab Tires has grown to become the nation's leading independent tire business with over 330 stores throughout the West. Today, there is hardly a town in Oregon that does not fall under the shadow of a Les Schwab Tires sign.

His innovative business programs inspire a fierce loyalty that few other companies can match. The tenets for achievement are the same for all of his 7,000 employees: start at the bottom, work hard, and never rest on your laurels. The many profit sharing programs he pioneered ensure all employees have a stake in the success or failure of a store. To this end, the company returns over forty-nine percent of each store's profits to its employees. As Les explained in his inspirational book, "Pride In Performance", this return investment is "unselfish for good reasons." It is his sincere wish to instill within his current and future employees a desire to succeed in business to last for many generations to come.

The same honesty and fairness that Les shows his employees is bestowed upon his customers as well. Customers know that Les is a man of his word. Westerners, especially Oregonians, appreciate his commitment to customer service and satisfaction, and have rewarded his efforts with 50 years of loyal business. Now, at 85 years of age, Les continues to lead by example. He comes to work daily at his headquarters in Prineville, right where it all started. Ultimately, it is Les' own straightforward leadership and no nonsense Oregon values that have made Les Schwab Tires an American success story.

Les is also known for his civic leadership. He gives back generously to the communities that made his company thrive. Les Schwab Tires sponsors numerous charitable events to support local food banks, youth shelters, and several different scholarship foundations. The state All-Star high school football game, the Les Schwab Bowl, benefits athletic programs for disadvantaged youth in the greater Portland area and provides free equipment and sportsmanship education for underprivileged youth in all Oregon high schools. Les is also the chief supporter of the Les Schwab Invitational, a four-day basketball tournament that showcases the top Oregon high school basketball teams and matches them against other outstanding teams from around the country. This event, now in its seventh year, expects to raise $30,000 to help curb the dramatic cuts in the state's athletic programs.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join me in congratulating this extraordinary man and great American, Mr. Les Schwab. I wish continued happiness for him and Dorothy, his wife of 66 years. Personally, I would like to thank him for all the opportunities he has provided to the people of Prineville, the Second District, and all of Oregon.

RECOGNIZING THE CONVOY OF HOPE IN SPRINGFIELD, MO

HON. ROY BLUNT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Convoy of Hope being organized in Springfield, MO on October 26, National Make-A-Difference Day. Volunteers make a difference in the quality of a nation and how we treat the less fortunate. A great number of community services rely on volunteers. Volunteers come from all walks of life and often have the skills and experiences of a lifetime of work that make them invaluable resources and problem solvers.

On October 26, the Convoy of Hope will bring 1,000 volunteers together to honor 5,000 guests—the working poor and the needy. These guests will receive a hot lunch, medical and dental screenings at a health carnival, a KiddsZone carnival, free haircuts, services from state and local agencies, and job search activities.

This is an effort by dozens of local churches to reach out to the poor and needy and raise awareness of local needs in our communities. The goal is to improve the quality of life for the less fortunate and to share a message of spiritual faith and hope.

These churches in Springfield, Missouri share the same goal as the U.S. Congress. In the last five decades, Congress has created and expanded and re-created dozens of programs to help the less fortunate. In contrast, the churches and faith-based organizations of our nation have an even longer history and a greater number of success stories to tell about these compassionate endeavors. These organizations also seem to accomplish their goals more efficiently and with less cost than many programs created by the Congress.

The Convoy of Hope will touch the lives of thousands of volunteers and guests on October 26, 2002 and unite them in a meaningful expression meant to change lives not only for that day but for days to come. I wish them great success in this undertaking.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN MEMORY OF “SNOOKY” SALEH

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of a great friend and great American, Jameel Joseph “Snooky” Saleh, of Tyler, Texas, who leaves behind a powerful legacy of hard work, generosity, and dedication to his family, community and country. He was a friend to so many—and a special friend of mine.

Snooky passed away in August at the age of 78. The son of Lebanese immigrants, he attended Tyler Junior College and spent two years at Texas A&M before being called to service in World War II. After the war he began a business venture with his brother, George—George Wholesale Company. He married his wife of 51 years, Angel Kotsiones of Dallas, in 1951, and they had three children.

In 1964 Snooky purchased his brother's interest in the company. His son Danny joined the business in 1977 and later became a partner. In 1998 the father and son team sold the business to free themselves to pursue charitable works. Snooky was very generous to the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception and the diocese of Tyler. He supported the United Way, American Heart Association, Muscular Dystrophy Association, Catholic Charities, B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League, and Alexis de Tocqueville Society. He also supported the East Texas Food Bank, Habitat for Humanity, East Texas Crisis Center, Hospice of East Texas, Literacy Council of East Texas and many other agencies.

Snooky won many awards, including the Southwest Candy Merchandiser of the Year in 1984, the National Association of Tobacco Distributors' award in 1991, Southwest Tobacco Man of the Year Award in 1992, America Wholesale Marketers Annual Citizenship award in 1994, National Catholic Charities award in 1995, and the Career Achievement Award of the Southern Association of Wholesale Distributors in 1998. He was also a recipient of a Texas House of Representatives resolution noting the contributions to all the lives he has touched, and he was named an honorary Admiral of the Texas Navy.

He is survived by his wife, Angel; son and daughter-in-law Gerald and Barbara Saleh; daughter and son-in-law Beverly Saleh Mamey and husband Nelson; son and daughter-in-law Danny and Denise Saleh; sisters Evelyn Saleh and Rose Marie Saleh Pilcher; six grandchildren and other family members.

Mr. Speaker, Snooky will be missed by all those who knew him and loved him and by all those he helped and who sought his advice—and his influence will be felt in Tyler for years to come. As we adjourn today, let us do so in tribute to this great American—Jameel Joseph “Snooky” Saleh.

AMBER ALERT: A POWERFUL TOOL TO PROTECT KIDS

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of my colleagues to the successes of the AMBER Alert program. As my colleagues know, this is a program that utilizes media alerts to help locate missing children within hours after they are abducted.

When a child is abducted, every minute is crucial. Statistics show that, when abducted, a child's greatest enemy is time. In those critical first hours, the AMBER Alert works to aid in a child's safe return by enlisting the entire community in their recovery.

The AMBER Plan idea was created in 1996 in response to the tragic murder of 9-year-old Amber Hagerman, a little girl who was kidnapped and killed while riding her bicycle near her home in Arlington, Texas. That tragedy shocked and outraged the entire community. Residents contacted radio stations in the area and suggested they broadcast special “alerts” over the airwaves to help in the future.

Since that time, the AMBER Alert idea has spread across the country. Since the original AMBER Plan was established, 66 modified versions have been adopted at local, regional, and statewide levels; 24 states have a statewide plan. In my home State of New Jersey, Governor James E. McGreevey, together with the Office of the Attorney General and the State Police have been working to implement an AMBER Alert system.

In my own district, we know something about the plague of child abduction. Megan's Law, the law that requires authorities to notify residents when a sexual predator resides in their neighborhood was named after Megan Kanka, a central New Jersey child who was the victim of a ruthless child killer. My predecessor in Congress, Representative Dick Zimmer, worked with Megan Kanka's parents to pass Megan's Law.

I am proud to have recently joined with my colleagues here in Congress, Representative MARTIN FROST and Representative JENNIFER DUNN and other legislators to introduce legislation calling for an expansion of the AMBER Alert concept nationally. Protecting our children against violence is nothing less than a national priority, and we are committed to passing this bill immediately to begin the creation of a nationwide network of AMBER Alert programs.

Unfortunately, passage of an AMBER Alert package into law this year is very much in doubt. Earlier this week, Congress passed legislation that included provisions to promote a national AMBER Alert program. While that would seem to be good news, I'm afraid that passage of this bill may actually delay, not speed up, the implementation of AMBER nationally.

The components that were unnecessarily added to the AMBER Alert Bill had previously been passed as stand-alone bills and I have previously voted in favor of them. On March 14, I voted to pass the “Two Strikes and You're Out Child Protection Act.” On May 21

I voted to pass the "Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act." On June 25, I voted to pass the "Lifetime Consequences for Sex Offenders Act." And on June 26, I voted to pass the "Sex Tourism Prohibition Act."

A week ago, at the White House Conference on Missing and Exploited and Run-away Children, President Bush called on us in the House to pass the AMBER Alert legislation passed by the Senate. I completely agree with the President. Bipartisan legislation to create a national AMBER Alert System quickly passed the Senate and it should have passed the House and been put into law by now.

Unfortunately, instead of enacting this bipartisan plan to protect kids, House Congressional leaders added all of these other provisions to the AMBER bill, an action that may make it impossible to pass this legislation prior to adjournment because some members of the Senate do not support them. In fact, several of the provisions have been pending in the Senate for over four years without action. The likely result is that we will have no national AMBER Alert system for at least another year. That is unfortunate and unnecessary. I suspect that the leadership of the House presented the legislation more for the sake of appearance than to actually bring about a national AMBER Alert system.

We in Congress have a chance to do something positive to keep our children safe. I call on all of my colleagues to come together and redouble our efforts to pass AMBER Alert legislation before Congress adjourns next week. We owe it to parents and kids in central New Jersey and the nation.

RECOGNIZING DAVID FLEMING FOR HIS OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO THE PEOPLE OF SOLANO COUNTY

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. DOUG OSE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, we rise today to recognize the Mayor of the City of Vacaville, David A. Fleming, who is leaving office after 24 years of service to his community.

Mr. Fleming was elected to the City Council in 1978 and has served as Mayor since 1990. During his tenure, Mr. Fleming has promoted the city's Growth Management Ordinance, the City of Vacaville Planned Growth Ordinance and the Vacaville/Dixon Greenbelt. He also led fundraising efforts for public art projects celebrating the community's historical milestones.

Mr. Fleming has also served as the President of the League of California Cities, President of the League of California Cities North Bay Division Executive Committee, Chairman of the Solano County Mayors Conference and as a member of the Board of Directors of the Solano County Transportation Agency, the Solano County Water Agency, and the Yolo-Solano Air Quality Management District.

Mayor Fleming has also been active in civic organizations, including the Air Force Association, the Retired Officers Association, the Napa-Solano United Way Executive Board, the North Bay YMCA Executive Board, the Vacaville Chamber of Commerce, the Vacaville Elks Club, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Vietnam Veterans Association, among others. He was also a Charter Member of the Board of Directors of the Travis Air Force Base Museum and currently serves as President of the Travis Air Force Base Jimmy Doolittle Air and Space Museum Education Foundation.

Mr. Fleming has been married for 47 years to his wife, Buff, and they have three sons. Mr. Fleming retired from the Air Force with the rank of Lt. Colonel. He is a Vietnam War combat veteran and earned three Distinguished Flying Crosses for his service to his country.

Mr. Speaker, because of Mayor David Fleming's many contributions to the city, his community and his country, it is proper for us to honor him today.

U.S.S. "SAN DIEGO" MEMORIAL

HON. SUSAN DAVIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute a great warship that was named for a great maritime city: my hometown of San Diego.

The U.S.S. San Diego served our nation with honor and distinction during World War II. The San Diego was a light cruiser whose principal purpose was to provide anti-aircraft protection to the fast carrier task groups that formed the backbone of the fleet during the war in the Pacific. Commissioned in January 1942, the San Diego joined the Pacific Fleet just prior to the Battle of Midway and saw her first action in the Guadalcanal campaign in the summer of 1942. The San Diego participated altogether in 42 months of nearly continuous operations, was involved in 34 engagements with enemy forces, earned 18 Battle Stars for her World War II campaigns, and was selected by Admiral Halsey to be the first major U.S. warship to enter Tokyo Bay upon the surrender of Japan.

Though the San Diego has been decommissioned and scrapped for many years, she has not been forgotten. The U.S.S. San Diego Memorial Association is a nonprofit organization formed with the goal of erecting a permanent memorial in San Diego, its namesake city, to honor the valiant and remarkable services of the cruiser U.S.S. San Diego and the men who served aboard her during the tumultuous and historical years of 1941-1945. Association membership includes surviving Navy veterans who served on the San Diego during the war. The Port of San Diego has donated a prime waterfront site for the U.S.S. San Diego Memorial, and the Memorial Association is raising private funds to construct a beautiful monument.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the U.S.S. San Diego Memorial Association and the Port of San Diego for their tremendous efforts to pay tribute to this great ship and her crew. Once again, the people of San Diego are demonstrating their strong support for the United States Navy and its many contributions to our nation's defense.

CELEBRATING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, BONHAM

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to recognize the 150th anniversary of the First Baptist Church of Bonham, Texas, in the hometown of the late great Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn. On November 10th, the First Baptist Church will celebrate one hundred and fifty years of worship and service in Bonham and the surrounding community—an expanse of time that reflects the dedication and vitality of the church's pastors, leaders and members over several generations.

First Baptist Church, Bonham, organized in early November 1852, sixteen years after the founding of Bonham and seven years after the annexation of Texas into the United States. Rev. J.R. Briscoe, a pioneer Baptist preacher, began the church with six charter members. They first met in the Masonic Hall but were soon able to move into their own building, which was also used as a schoolhouse. On January 24, 1855, for the sum of $50, they purchased the building, and each succeeding building has stood on this same plot of land on the corner of Eighth and Center Streets.

In 1855 a new frame building was constructed. This was used for joint Sunday School services of the Baptist, Episcopal, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches. It was also used for special meetings, weddings, and funerals for a wide area around Bonham. By 1915, the church building was no longer adequate for further growth, and despite the scarcity of supplies and the high prices of the World War I years, the congregation was able to construct a new two-story building, including a basement, in 1919 and dedicate it in 1921, free of debt. The services were led by Rev. George W. Truett, pastor of First Baptist Church, Dallas.

Due to structural problems during the following years, a new building was constructed in 1958 and still stands today. Some of the furnishings that had been in the earlier buildings are part of the new structure—including several magnificent stained glass windows and a scene over the baptistery taken from a photograph of the Jordan River.

First Baptist Church, Bonham, was very much in the news in November 1961 as the place where the funeral service for Speaker Rayburn, beloved citizen of Bonham, was held. Countless numbers of dignitaries were in attendance, including President John F. Kennedy, Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson, former presidents Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower. A plaque inscribed with their names adorns the pew where they sat.

First Baptist Church, Bonham, is rich in history. It is a shining example of the positive influence that churches make in the lives of our citizens and the fabric of our communities—and a powerful testament to the importance of faith and religious expression in the United States of America. We are, indeed, "one Nation under God." In preparation for its Sesquicentennial Celebration on November 10, a history of the church has been compiled that will honor all those who so diligently worked and sacrificed in their service to their church and their community. This celebration also will inspire current and future generations to carry on the wonderful legacy that was begun one hundred and fifty years ago.

Mr. Speaker, First Baptist Church, Bonham, was built upon the solid rock of Christian faith and service—and upon that rock it will continue to grow. I congratulate the members of First Baptist Church, Bonham, on this important milestone in the history of their church—and I wish them "God speed" as they continue to meet the needs of those in Bonham, the surrounding community, and mission fields around the world.

SUPPORT CONCURRENT RECEIPT

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of concurrent receipt.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of legislation that would permit military retirees to concurrently draw their retired pay and disability benefits without an offset to either.

I firmly believe that retired members of the Armed Forces who are eligible for disability compensation should receive both their retirement and disability entitlement.

In fact, military retirees are the only group of federal retirees who must waive retirement pay in order to receive VA disability compensation. That's unfair and it should be corrected.

When asked about concurrent receipt, one combat veteran said it best. He said, "When I was flying combat missions in Korea, I knew there was a possibility of being shot down, captured, and tortured by the enemy. And I was unlucky enough to have that happen. But I never dreamed that Uncle Sam would penalize me by making me pay for my own disability compensation out of the retired pay I was supposed to have earned for my 24 years of military service."

Lt. Col. Norman E. Duquette, the person who said that, is one of nearly 500,000 disabled military retirees penalized by this unfair provisions that stops them from keeping veterans' disability compensation and full military retired pay—even though the two have entirely different purposes.

On February 1, 2002, I joined several of my congressional colleagues in sending a letter to President Bush requesting that he include in his FY 2003 budget request the funds necessary to eliminate the current offset between military retired pay and VA disability compensation. Unfortunately, when President Bush delivered his FY 2003 budget request to Congress on February 4, 2002, funds for implementing concurrent receipt for disabled military retirees were not included in it.

In recent days, President Bush has actually threatened to veto the Defense Authorization bill because he opposes fixing the concurrent receipt problem. That's why this motion is necessary and so important.

New Jersey veterans have heard enough excuses. We owe them this for their service to our Nation, especially now, as our Nation is calling upon the members of the armed forces to defend democracy and freedom.

RECOGNIZING WILLIAM CARROLL FOR HIS OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO THE PEOPLE OF SOLANO COUNTY

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. DOUG OSE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, we rise today to recognize the Chair of the Solano County Board of Supervisors, William Carroll, who is retiring this year following a long and distinguished career in local government.

Mr. Carroll served on the Vacaville City Council for 21 years, 18 of them as Mayor, prior to his election to the Board of Supervisors in 1991. While on the Board, he served as Chair for three terms and also served as President of the League of California Cities.

He was instrumental in creating the Rural North Vacaville Water District, which enabled a large segment of the community in the unincorporated area of his supervisorial district to receive water services. Air quality was also one of his primary policy issues. He served on the Yolo-Solano Air Quality Management District from January 1991 to May 2002 and on the Bay Area Air Quality Management District from January 3, 1995 to May 28, 2002.

Mr. Carroll has been a tireless supporter of Travis Air Force Base and of the United States military presence in Solano County. He recognizes the vital role agriculture plays in Solano County and has been a strong advocate for agricultural interests while in public office. Supervisor Carroll also devoted much of his spare time to assisting the homeless throughout Solano County.

Mr. Speaker, because of William Carroll's many contributions to local government in Solano County and for his commitment to his community, it is proper for us to honor him today.

80TH ANNIVERSARY OF UNICO WATERBURY

HON. JAMES H. MALONEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Unico Waterbury on its 80th anniversary this Sunday, October 20, 2002. The Waterbury chapter of Unico National has truly lived up to its motto of "Service Above Self." Through their charitable efforts the members of Unico have made Waterbury a better community in which to live. For those not familiar with the organization, it was founded in 1922 by a group of fifteen men of Italian heritage, united in their commitment to civic service.

The founding Waterbury Unico chapter became the progenitor of more than 150 chapters of Unico in communities nation-wide.

Let me take a moment to recount a few of its many accomplishments. In its early years Unico organized regular social activities for Italian students pursuing higher education. At these dance receptions, awards and scholarships were awarded to young achievers in the community. Soon this model of civic participation spread to other cities, enabling a national convention to be held in New York in 1930.

During World War II, Unico Waterbury achieved the distinction of selling more war bonds in one day than any other local club during a month's competition ($75,000). In 1977, the club began aiding the Salvation Army to raise funds for its annual Christmas programs. This proud tradition continues to this day.

Today, Unico Waterbury is well served under the leadership of its first woman President, Dr. Joane D'Angelo. Membership stands at 95 strong and growing. Its fundraising prowess was recently demonstrated by raising $3,985 for Unico National's "Campaign Unity" to aid those affected by the September 11 attacks. The chapter continues to excel in public service by providing sizeable scholarships to students in the Waterbury community.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by expressing my personal appreciation for the spirit of civic service so notably demonstrated by Unico Waterbury. On behalf of the citizens of the United States, I thank the members of Unico Waterbury for their tradition of service and look forward to their many civic accomplishments to come in the years ahead.

THE GROWING U.S.-INDIA RELATIONS: STRONG AND BROAD- BASED BILATERAL RELATIONS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, relations between the United States and India continue to grow and prosper in the economic, political, diplomatic, democracy promotion, scientific, and security cooperation areas. During the past year, high-level agreements and substantive exchanges have brought the world's two largest democracies ever closer together; particularly with regard to security cooperation and a partnership in international counter-terrorism efforts.

The September 11 terrorist attacks on America have brought our two countries even closer together—as democracies which have been the victims of terrorism and which stand resolved to combat this scourge on a global basis. Following our President's clear statement that the nations of the world must stand "with us or with the terrorists," India answered the call. India immediately and unhesitatingly expressed full solidarity with our Nation and the American people. The welcome presence of Prime Minister Vajpayee last month at our one-year commemoration ceremony in New York City was but one highly symbolic indication of this sense of solidarity.

"The National Security Strategy of the United States," transmitted by President Bush to Congress last month as a declaration of the Administration's policy, calls India "A growing world power with which we have common strategic interest. The Administration sees India's potential to become one of the great democratic powers of the twenty-first century and accordingly has worked hard to transform our relationship."

Further quoting from the Administration's report:

The United States has undertaken a transformation in its bilateral relationship with India based on a conviction that U.S. interests require a strong relationship with India. We are the two largest democracies, committed to political freedom protected by representative government. India is moving toward greater economic freedom as well. We have a common interest in the free flow of commerce, including through the vital searoutes of the Indian Ocean. Finally, we share an interest in fighting terrorism and in creating a strategically stable Asia.

The pace of our bilateral engagement since President Bush assumed the Presidency has been unprecedented. At their November 2001 meeting, President Bush and Prime Minister Vajpayee issued a joint statement outlining the broad scope of our bilateral relations. The Prime Minister and the President affirmed their commitment to complete the process of qualitatively transforming bilateral relations in pursuit of their many common goals in Asia and beyond.

The two leaders agreed that the lifting of economic, military and technology restrictions on India provides a further impetus to our bilateral relations. They welcomed the resumption of the bilateral Defense Policy Group as a step toward increasing exchanges and technical cooperation in the defense and security areas. The two leaders also agreed to pursue policies to enhance the mutually beneficial—and growing—economic and commercial ties between our nations. They also agreed to expand the Bilateral Economic Dialogue and to broaden dialogue and cooperation in the areas of energy, the environment, health, space, export controls, science and technology, including biotechnology and information technology. Indeed, the United States is India's largest trading partner and premier export destination. In particular, the President and the Prime Minister agreed that the two sides should discuss ways to stimulate bilateral high technology commerce, and agreed that our two countries should begin a dialogue to evaluate the processes for the transfer of dual-use and military items, with a view towards greater transparency and efficiency.

Moreover, India and the United States have a mutual interest in space exploration, and both countries have active space programs. The two leaders began an ongoing process to initiate discussions on Civil Space cooperation. In addition, private sector contacts, as well as meetings at the academic, cultural, NGO and other levels, continue to expand.

PARTNERS IN BUILDING DEMOCRACY

The U.S. and India, the world's two largest democracies, are partners in the ongoing effort to build a more democratic world. In this regard, India is leading by example, having stuck to the democratic path in the more than 50 years since it gained independence. During September and October, despite the ongoing threat of terrorism originating from outside India's borders, India is holding elections for the state assembly in Jammu and Kashmir. On September 18, after the first of four rounds of voting in the elections, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said:

We do welcome the Indian Government's commitment to holding an election that's free and fair and perceived as such internationally and within India. We have diplomats, and others do as well, up in the area observing the elections. Their findings, combined with the coverage by India's media and the international press will form the basis for an assessment of the election overall, after it's over. And I'm sure it'll be widely reported. And against these kind of sporadic violence and the threats that were issued, we actually applaud the courage of the voters who have chosen to participate in the first round of voting.

U.S.-INDIA COOPERATION ON SECURITY, DEFENSE AND COUNTER TERRORISM ISSUES

In particular, the U.S. and India have moved relations to a new level in terms of security and defense matters, and cooperation on counter terrorism, reflecting the recognition on both sides of the need to build stability and security in Asia and beyond.

The U.S.-India Security and Non-Proliferation Dialogue held in New Delhi on September 23–24 was but the latest example of this cooperation, as India continues to make substantial progress in meeting non-proliferation goals. India is also committed to vigorously enforcing stringent export controls on its locally developed know-how and technologies, an issue that the two sides will continue to pursue.

The U.S. and India have held joint military exercises, and others are planned. Following a December 2001, meeting of the U.S.-India Defense Planning Group and the Executive Steering Groups of the Army, Navy and Air Force, the U.S. and India agreed that each of its Navies would jointly patrol the Strait of Malacca to ensure the uninterrupted flow of vital oil supplies. The U.S. and India will hold their first joint air exercise over Indian airspace in almost four decades in October. In Washington, the chief of the U.S. Pacific Air Force Command, General William Begert, described the joint exercise as "a breakthrough." It has also been announced that Indian Army and Air Force personnel will participate with U.S. forces in exercises in Alaska later this year.

India and the United States have forged an ever-closer partnership in the struggle against international terrorism—a partnership that had actually begun before last September 11. The U.S.-India Joint Working Group on Counter terrorism was established in January 2000. The fifth meeting of the Joint Working Group was held in July in Washington. The past year has been a watershed for the two democracies in confronting the challenge of terrorism.

During this period, India and the United States have accomplished much in their counter-terrorism cooperation, including:

Broadening their exchange of information and assessments on the international and regional terrorist situation.

Strengthening intelligence and investigative cooperation.

Signing a Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty.

Launching a bilateral Cyber Security Forum, with a wide-ranging program of action to address cyber terrorism and information security.

Introducing military-to-military cooperation on counter terrorism to supplement the initiatives of the India-U.S. Defense Policy Group in this area.

Working together closely on multilateral initiatives on terrorism, including the implementation of UNSC Resolution 1373.

Initiating dialogue and cooperation in homeland/internal security, terrorist financing, forensic science transportation security and border management.

Taking concrete steps to detect and counter the activities of individual terrorists and organizations of concern to both of our countries.

Accordingly, I urge the Administration and my colleagues to continue to strengthen the U.S.-India ties and to turn the blueprint outlined at the joint meeting between President Bush and Indian Prime Minister last year, into a sturdy and enduring structure that will benefit the people of both of our great nations.

IN RECOGNITION OF A TRUE
TEXAS WWI HERO—LIEUTENANT
MITCHELL H. BROWN

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a true patriot from my hometown, Rockwall, Texas—the late Mitchell H. Brown. My district, the Fourth Congressional District of Texas, is home to the second largest population of veterans in the State of Texas. Today I would like to single out a great veteran and WWI hero, Mitchell Brown, who was a distinguished Second Lieutenant in the 50th Aero Squadron, Air Service, American Expeditionary Force.

Mitchell left Rockwall in January of 1918 and was dispatched overseas to France, where he attended French artillery school and an aviators instruction center. He studied aerial photography and learned to be proficient in the use of light weaponry. Finally, he attended the Aeronautical section of the Ind Corps school located at Châtillon-Sur-Seine.

After finishing his training, Mitchell was assigned to the 50th Aero Squadron. Mitchell used his field training as he penetrated enemy lines, reporting batteries in action, trucks on the roads, trains, massed troops, fires, and other favorable targets that the artillery might fire upon. He survived many near-death encounters with the enemy. During an aerial reconnaissance mission for the 78th Division near Beffu-et-le-Morthomme, he attacked an enemy balloon, forcing it to the ground, but this drew an attack by three enemy planes in return. The incendiary bullets from the enemy's machine guns set the signal rockets in Mitchell's cockpit afire. Disregarding the flames, he continued to fire his machine gun, destroying one enemy plane and forcing the others to disengage. He quickly put out the flames and then successfully completed the mission and secured information of "great military value". This was one of his more well known acts of heroism during the war.

Mitchell has always been passionate about his country. He once wrote his wife Lilybel, saying, "It's all very true that war isn't what it's cracked up to be. Lots of times you have a longing for quiet pastures when the odds loom up against you. Personally, I had rather die a dozen times than to have folks say I didn't do my duty." That statement characterizes so many veterans who put their lives at risk in defense of our country and the principles of freedom upon which America was founded. These veterans, like Mitchell, are true American heroes, and we owe them a debt of gratitude that can never be adequately repaid.

Mitchell was married before he went overseas and, after the war, returned to Rockwall County to farm and raise three boys with Lilybel. His sons were also in the service of their country, with one son, Lt. Tom Brown, paying the supreme sacrifice on the battlefield. I went through high school with Tom. He, like his father and brothers, loved life and loved this country. He gave it all so that his family—and all of us—could live in safety and peace. God Rest His Soul.

For many years Mr. Mitchell Brown lived, as he said, a "rather quiet life with little to enlarge upon" as a farmer. Such a humble statement belies the great man he was. He was dedicated to his country, his family, and his community—and he was a good friend of mine. I admired him greatly—and I have never forgotten the greatness I saw in this great WWI aviator who flew the airplanes that were forerunners to today's fast fleet of jets. Mr. Speaker, as we adjourn today, let us do so in memory of Mitchell H. Brown and all our veterans whose sacrifices enable us to be free today.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY CELEBRATES THE LIFE AND CAREER OF FORMER SPEAKER JACK COLLINS

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor the commitment of former assemblyman and speaker Jack Collins to his constituents in the third district and to his extended responsibility to all New Jerseyans.

I am proud to speak across partisan lines in praise of Jack Collins because, so often, he reached across party lines to fight for things important to all New Jerseyans. He is the embodiment of the citizen legislator: a working teacher and farmer who also represents the people of his district and his state.

As a career educator, he rose above partisan politics to defend our teachers whether it was fighting for pension enhancements and health benefit improvements or blocking ill considered voucher proposals or tenure threats.

Jack Collins also defended open space retention, farmland preservation, and aid to the developmentally disabled. These are all examples of the greatness of the heart of the man, and his dedication to issues concerning New Jersey.

His career as speaker was marked not just by the legislation he championed, but the house he ran. As the longest serving speaker of the Assembly in New Jersey, Jack Collins was respected by politicians of all persuasions, for his directness, for his honesty and for his convictions.

I am proud to rise today to wish Jack Collins well in his retirement. While he is no longer serving in the Assembly, I am sure that New Jersey has not seen the last of Jack Collins. He has built his life around service to others, whether in the classroom or on the floor of the Assembly, and I am sure that this instinct to serve will keep him active in the political life of New Jersey.

THE "COMMERCIAL SPECTRUM ENHANCEMENT ACT"

HON. FRED UPTON

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Telecommunications and the Internet, I am pleased to join the distinguished Chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. TAUZIN, in introducing the "Commercial Spectrum Enhancement Act".

Earlier this year, we significantly changed spectrum auction policy by freeing the FCC's hands with respect to when auctions should be conducted. Now, with this bill, we are making another significant down payment on our Committee's spectrum reform efforts, by eliminating grave inefficiencies in spectrum management which have thwarted spectrum relocation efforts to date.

The commercial wireless industry must have additional spectrum to provide innovative new services and other critical benefits to the American public and to foster economic growth. However, spectrum ideal for next generation wireless services currently is encumbered by the federal government.

We all recognize the need to relocate federal government incumbents to comparable spectrum in order to make way for the commercial wireless industry, but the road to relocating federal government incumbents to comparable spectrum (or alternative facilities) is unpaved and filled with potholes. The "Commercial Spectrum Enhancement Act" would pave that road, establishing procedures to ensure a timely, certain, and privately—yet fully—funded relocation of federal incumbents to comparable spectrum (or alternative facilities). Hence, this bill represents a "win-win" for both the government and the commercial wireless industry, not to mention our nation's wireless users.

Under the bill's provisions, when executive branch agencies are required to relocate spectrum operations to a different spectrum band (or to switch to non-spectrum dependent facilities to transmit telecommunications), the agencies will have access to a trust fund from which their relocation costs will be paid. Relocation will be required when spectrum currently occupied by governmental entities is reallocated for commercial use.

If an agency is required to relocate its spectrum operations, the agency must be able to achieve comparable telecommunications capability in the new band (or with the non-spectrum dependent facilities).

Six months before the FCC conducts an auction of spectrum that has been reallocated for commercial use, NTIA (working in conjunction with the affected agency and OME) submits to the FCC a preliminary cost estimate and timeline for relocation.

For an auction of reallocated spectrum to be valid, the net proceeds of the auction must be at least 110 percent of the preliminary costs estimated by NTIA.

The auction proceeds, rather than being placed in the General Fund at Treasury, are deposited in a Spectrum Relocation Fund, from which relocation costs will be paid.

The relocation fund is administered by OMB in consultation with NTIA. OMB determines whether an agency's costs are legitimate and whether the agency's timeline for relocation is appropriate.

The Energy and Commerce Committee, Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and the House and Senate Appropriations Committees must be notified 30 days before money is transferred from the relocation fund to an agency. Also, the NTIA will be required to file periodic reports to apprise Congress of the progress being made to relocate in a timely and cost-effective manner.

I look forward to working with Mr. TAUZIN, other Members of the Energy and Commerce Committee, other interested committees, and the Bush Administration to advance this legislation in a bipartisan fashion.

NURSE LOAN FORGIVENESS ACT OF 2002

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Nurse Loan Forgiveness Act of 2002.

Across the United States, and specifically in my District in Colorado, health care facilities are experiencing a loss of full-time registered nurses. As aging nurses retire, there are not enough persons willing to enter the field to replace them. The American Association of Colleges of Nursing estimates that within the next 10 years, the average age of registered nurses is forecasted to be 45.4 years old, with more than 40 percent of the registered nurse work force expected to be older than 50. Currently, there are more than 126,000 hospital nursing positions that need to be filled. I am deeply concerned about this issue and the care of our elderly, especially in a time when the nation's baby boomers are aging and require increasing health care services.

The Nurse Loan Forgiveness Act establishes a student loan program for nurses and in doing so, it encourages young people to enter and continue in the nursing profession. Since enrollment in entry-level nursing schools continues to decline, this legislation provides an incentive to study, work, and more importantly, stay in the nursing profession. Not only will this enhance patient care, but also it will create a new generation of nurses.

For nurses that stay in a medical facility or approved health care setting for at least three years, their loans can be forgiven up to $5,000. Additionally, those that work as nurses for five years, are eligible for loan forgiveness up to $12,000. This is a temporary, five-year program, established during this time of crisis a time when our aging family members, friends and loved ones may not have the care they deserve or require.

I urge my colleagues to support the Nurse Loan Forgiveness Act and aid our nation's health care professionals.

TRIBUTE TO DANIEL A. BENAC OF MONTMORENCY COUNTY, MICHIGAN

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to a man who is a longtime activist in labor, politics, and community service in northern Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Daniel A. Benac of Montmorency County, Michigan.

Dan Benac was born in Alpena, Michigan on June 8, 1922, as one of twelve children of George and Rose Benac. Nearly sixty years ago he married Geraldine on February 9, 1943 and the couple raised three children: Charlotte, Carolyn, and David. Dan and Geraldine have eight grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren.

Dan Benac served in the U.S. Army's 103rd Infantry Division from 1942 until receiving an honorable medical discharge as a private in 1943. After serving his country, he then began his career as a skilled tradesman at Besser Manufacturing in Alpena.

Dan then worked at a small manufacturing plant in Walled Lake, Michigan before taking a position with Pontiac Motors in 1948. He tried his hand as an entrepreneur in 1955, when he started and operated two gas stations. During the time he ran these businesses he began an apprenticeship as an electrician and earned the status of a journeyman electrician in 1962.

In 1969, Dan Benac took his skills to Warren, Michigan, where he worked at General Motors Chevrolet plant. He began his union career in 1948 when he joined the United Auto Workers. While at the Chevrolet plant, Dan accepted the position as a UAW committeeman.

In 1974 Dan Benac took a medical retirement from GM, but as with so many union brothers and sisters, Dan continued his work with the union. In addition to his membership in the UAW, he also joined the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in 1956.

In 1983 Dan was named chairman of the UAW Retirees for the Alpena International Council. Dan organizes presentations on a monthly basis for his fellow retirees that range from elected officials to speeches about prescription drugs and Medicare.

Dan was later named chairman of the UAW Region 1-D retirees, serving members from sixty two counties. He continues to serve as chairman of the UAW Region 1-D retirees to this day. He is also a board member of the UAW statewide coordinating committee for the Democratic Party.

In addition to his union activities Dan Benac was instrumental in forming the Montmorency County Democratic Party. He served for many years as chairman of the Montmorency County Democratic Party before resigning from that post recently. While Dan is no longer chairman, he remains active in the Montmorency County Democratic Party.

Dan Benac is a board member of the National Council for Senior Citizens. He is also a member of other organizations including the Shrine Club, Disabled American Veterans, American Legion, and Masons. He is also chairman of the Michigan Veterans Trust Fund for Montmorency County.

Mr. Speaker, Dan Benac's activities are amazing for a person of any age but as an eighty year old, his many activities are exceptionally admirable. Dan and Geraldine Benac have been great assets to their family, their fellow workers, and their community and good friends of mine.

Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 2002 the Montmorency County Democratic Party will hold a tribute dinner for Dan Benac at the Atlanta, Michigan Senior Center. I ask you and my House colleagues to join me in saluting Dan Benac, a great man who has spent his life in service to others.

TRIBUTE TO THE CHALDEAN
FEDERATION OF AMERICA

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 21st Anniversary Celebration and 10th Annual Awards Banquet of the Chaldean Federation of America. On Friday, October 18, 2002 the Chaldean Federation will mark more than two decades of service to the Chaldean community in Metro-Detroit and one decade of recognizing outstanding citizens in their midst.

Over these many years, I have been privileged to witness the establishment and blossoming of this exceptional organization. The Federation serves the growing Chaldean community of Metro-Detroit, which now numbers over 160,000. Their service to the community has been extensive, from employment and social services, to language and translation support, to computer training and immigration services.

For new immigrants, the Federation has served to bridge the cultural gap between their native land and that of their adopted home. For first, second, and third generation Americans of Chaldean descent, the Federation has been a place of education and celebration, keeping alive the traditions of the Chaldean homeland.

In addition to serving the Chaldean community, the Federation has been an invaluable resource to our community as a whole. By providing cross-cultural education and sensitivity training to schools and other groups they have helped to promote tolerance and understanding in an increasingly complex world.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to salute the Chaldean Federation of America, its key activists and countless volunteers, many of whom I have known personally for years. We have been enriched by the Chaldean culture and are deeply appreciative of the role that the Chaldean Federation of America continues to play in our community.

HONORING AN OUTSTANDING EMPLOYER—DOUGLASS DISTRIBUTING

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Bill and Joan Davis, owners of Douglass Distributing an "Outstanding Employer of Older Workers for 2002". Douglass Distributing has established a long-term commitment to the region of North Texas and Southern Oklahoma, proven by their community partnerships and contributions to local service organizations. For this reason, they have been selected as one of Prime Time's Outstanding Employers of Older Workers award winners.

Since 1981, the Douglass family has shown a strong belief in the value of older workers and has supported that belief by maintaining an age-balanced group of employees. They have been a family owned and operated petroleum products distributor in Sherman, Texas who view older workers as "productive, reliable, and versatile with a strong work ethic." Their winning combination of younger workers and their older counterparts create a work environment where age and experience can assist in training, advice, and counseling.

Owners Bill and Joan Douglass have created an outstanding company that is a role model for a nation and state whose workforce is rapidly aging and whose businesses are facing a shortage of skilled, reliable workers. Douglass Distributing has led the way by putting their faith and trust in older workers who bring valuable experience, skills and work habits to the job. The company has no mandatory retirement age and provides flexibility in scheduling of employees' hours. They also believe that expertise and a positive attitude are the most important qualities in an employee, regardless of his or her age.

Douglass Distributing has shown a new path and winning blueprint for success. Mr. Speaker, as we adjourn today, let us acknowledge the contributions and the achievements of Douglass Distributing and Bill and Joan Douglass, as they have shown the business world a new model of distribution worthy of replication and appreciation.

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING MEMBERS OF THE TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE COMMITTEE

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, last evening in the main hearing room of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, we held a reception honoring eight Members who are retiring from the House at the end of this Congress. In the spirit of bipartisanship that so truly characterizes our committee, Chairman DON YOUNG and I joined voices in tribute to these eight men—three Republicans and five Democrats—who are moving on to new challenges: BRIAN KERNS of Indiana, JOHN THUNE of South Dakota, STEVE HORN of California, JOHN BALDACCIO of Maine, FRANK MASCARA of Pennsylvania, JIM BARCIA of Michigan, BOB CLEMENT of Tennessee, and BOB BORSKI of Pennsylvania.

Before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to recognize the leadership of Chairman YOUNG and call attention to some of the accomplishments of the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee during the 107th Congress: The Railroad Retirement Act, the Kennedy Center Act, and the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, represent what our Committee does best—moving bipartisan bills to the President's desk. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in the 108th Congress on TEA 21 reauthorization, AIR 21 reauthorization, RIDE 21, and water and other critical infrastructure investment legislation, regardless of whether Republicans or Democrats are in the majority.

Mr. Speaker, on the Republic side, the Committee is losing three of our colleagues, Cong. BRIAN KERNS, Cong. JOHN THUNE, and Cong. STEVE HORN. Cong. KERNS (Indiana) joined the Committee last year with a fresh perspective on our Committee's issues that will be missed. Cong. KERNS and I share a common background: we both served as Administrative Assistant to the Member we replaced. Of course, Cong. KERNS was also a TV reporter, so our work histories diverge there.

Cong. THUNE represents the state of South Dakota and he has been a consistent advocate for rural America and the Great Plains. I have had the opportunity to share an occasional workout with Cong. THUNE in the Members' Gym. Let me tell you, when Cong. THUNE approaches the weight machines, the machine start to shudder.

Cong. STEVE HORN has not only effectively advocated the interests of the Long Beach and Los Angeles ports, but he has also spent the last decade in Congress working to improve the accountability and management of the Federal government and its agencies. His thoughtful, academic approach to these issues will be greatly missed by our Committee and this institution, as will his historical perspective on the legislative process, reading back to his service on the staff of California's highly respected Senator Tom Kuchel.

On the Democratic side, we are losing five colleagues, each of whom has contributed enormously to the work of our Committee.

Cong. JOHN BALDACCIO—Cong. BALDACCIO was elected in 1994—a real accomplishment for a Democrat in a year when the Republicans were sweeping to control of the House and Senate—and joined our Committee in 1998. He has served as an active Member of our highway and aviation subcommittees. Cong. BALDACCIO has been an aggressive advocate on behalf of Maine. Whether it's ensuring that the Federal Aviation Administration Reauthorization Act includes funding for the Essential Air Service program or clarifying that the Committee's airline antitrust immunity bill does not adversely affect small communities, Cong. BALDACCIO has actively worked to help Maine keep its air service.

Cong. FRANK MASCARA—Cong. MASCARA is another one of the rare Democrats elected in 1994 and joined our committee at the beginning of his tenure. Prior to being elected to the House of Representatives, Cong. MASCARA served as Chairman of the Pennsylvania Regional Planning Commission. As this Committee developed TEA 21, we called upon FRANK MASCARA's planning expertise and seasonal understanding of highway issues to help ensure that our Federal highway, transit, and highway safety policy would achieve the intended objectives.

Cong. JIM BARCIA—Cong. BARCIA joined our committee in 1993. As a Member from Northern Michigan, whose district runs along the shores of Lake Huron, JIM has played an active role in water resources issues throughout his service. He spent the last several years aggressively working on a program to improve our Nation's wastewater infrastructure and authorize grants to states and cities for combined sewer overflow and sanitary sewer overflow projects. In the 106th Congress, his efforts paid off and we included his bill (H.R. 828) in the omnibus Labor-HHS appropriations act at the end of the Congress. The Wet Weather Quality Act authorizes $1.5 billion to control overflows from combined and sanitary sewers and $45 million in EPA assistance for an urban wet weather watershed pilot program.

Cong. BOB CLEMENT—Cong. CLEMENT, elected in 1988 and currently Ranking Member of the Railroads Subcommittee, has worked on a bipartisan basis with his counterpart, Subcommittee Chairman JACK QUINN, to rebuild our Nation's railroad infrastructure. They have worked together to move the Shortline Railroad Infrastructure bill, the Amtrak Reauthorization bill, and RIDE 21. Although movement on those bills has stalled, BOB CLEMENT hasn't given up and continues to work to improve our Nation's rail infrastructure. In addition, Cong. CLEMENT and Chairman QUINN have had numerous meetings with the Office of Management and Budget and the Department of Transportation regarding the Administration's failure to approve any rail loans or loan guarantees under the Railroad Rehabilitation and Infrastructure Financing (RRIF) program.

Cong. CLEMENT has also aggressively worked on behalf of the Tennessee Valley Authority and commuter rail. His bill (TRAIN 21) would help resolve a growing problem in Nashville and throughout the Nation—the ability of commuter railroads to get access to freight railroad rights-of-way.

He leaves us to seek a seat in the Other Body, and I pass onto him the advice I received many years ago when I myself heard the Sirens' call to that body: There are more bleached bones scattered along the path between the House and Senate Office Buildings than there are on the Old Chisholm Trail.

Cong. BOB BORSKI—BOB BORSKI has spent two decades serving this Committee. From 1995 to 2001, Cong. BORSKI served as Ranking Member of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment. BOB BORSKI was raised in the great bipartisan tradition of this Committee and he brought that willingness to work together to the Clean Water, Brownfields, and Superfund issues of the Subcommittee—the issues that are often the most difficult for our Committee to bridge the partisan divide. He spent countless hours working with then-Subcommittee Chairman BOEHLERT, then-Chairman SHUSTER, EPA Administrator Browner, and me to bridge the divide on the Superfund bill. In the end, this Committee passed a Superfund bill (H.R. 1300) that reauthorized the program; provided for the redevelopment of brownfields; provided exemptions and limitations on Superfund liability for small businesses, innocent landowners, and recyclers; and called for funding the program with a reauthorization of the Superfund Trust Fund taxes. Our committee approved the bill on a vote of 69 to 2—a tribute to Cong. BORSKI's perseverance, patience, and willingness to find common ground.

In this Congress, Cong. BORSKI has served as Ranking Member of the Highways and Transit Subcommittee. He and Subcommittee Chairman PETRI have held more than a dozen hearings on TEA 21 reauthorization and Cong. BORSKI has aggressively worked to ensure that we have a balanced transportation system. Earlier this week, Cong. BORSKI attended the American Public Transportation Association's annual conference where he received its distinguished person of the year award. How often does an association, with a major reauthorization bill just around the corner, honor a retiring Member of Congress? It is a tribute to Cong. BORSKI that APTA rightly recognized the role that he has played in ensuring that our communities have transportation choices, like transit rail systems, pedestrian walkways, Amtrak, and bike paths.

I will miss him, not only for his policy expertise but also for his friendship. I have always considered BOB a close friend and a kindred spirit. I know his heart and home are in Philadelphia but I hope he will often come back to see us here.

And that sentiment is true for each of our departing colleagues. On behalf of all Democrats on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, I thank them for their distinguished public service and wish them well in their new careers.

RECENT RAIDS ON SINN FEIN OFFICES IN STORMONT

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join in spirit with several of my constituents and hundreds of other Irish Americans in the New York Metropolitan area, as they stage a protest outside the New York City consulate of Great Britain. I wish I could be there in person to join in their fight.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the PSNI, formerly the RUC, raided the government offices of Sinn Fein in the Northern Ireland Assembly at Stormont. This unprofessional and haphazard raid appears to be politically motivated—with those involved hoping to unravel the power-sharing government established under the Good Friday Agreements.

The raid of these offices and several homes of Sinn Fein party workers once again show that the PSNI/RUC remains nothing more than a political tool of unionists hoping to undermine a just and lasting peace in Northern Ireland. These raids were obviously done to publicly embarrass Sinn Fein, with the hope that this will be the final straw that will force the demise of the Good Friday Accords.

Soon after these raids, both Ian Paisley of the DUP and David Trimble of the UUP called for Sinn Fein to be excluded from the power sharing government. Also, Mr. Paisley, withdrew his party's support from the government. These actions show the unionists true feelings—they hope that by excluding Sinn Fein the Accords will collapse and force the Crown to retake complete control of the North.

It is quite obvious to me that the only way a lasting peace can occur in Northern Ireland is by protecting the power sharing institutions and fully implementing the Patten Commission's recommendations. The actions of the PSNI last Friday shows that the police as a whole are still quite loyal to the crown and quite often use their influence and authority for political purposes. Northern Ireland is in dire need of a police service that is more representative of the community and is responsive to the needs of all the citizen of Northern Ireland.

These raids are just another example of how the PSNI has not moved away from the tactics of the RUC in the '60s, '70s and '80s. The PSNI is anti-Catholic, anti-Sinn Fein and anti-Good Friday Agreement. PSNI must be forced to stop its sectarian efforts and truly protect all parties.

I hope that Mr. Trimble, Prime Minister Blair and all the other parties involved continue their commitment to peace in Northern Ireland by standing by the original Good Friday Accords and most importantly fully implementing the Patten Commission's recommendations. Patten and the Accords are our only true hope that peace can survive in Northern Ireland.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE ACT OF 2002

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Environmental Justice Act of 2002. I am proud that my colleague Congresswoman HILDA SOLIS is joining me as an original cosponsor of this bill.

Representative SOLIS and I long have been concerned about the fact that past federal actions have had disproportionately adverse effects on the health, environment and quality of life of Americans in minority and lower-income communities. Too often these communities—because of their low income or lack of political visibility—are exposed to greater risks from toxins and dangerous substances. It's a regrettable commentary on our society that too often it has been possible and convenient to locate waste dumps, industrial facilities, and chemical storage warehouses in these communities with less care than would be taken in other locations.

Too often these communities are thought of as expendable—without full appreciation that human beings, who deserve to be treated with respect and dignity are living, working, and raising families there. Instead, by providing clean, healthy and quality environments within and around these communities, we provide hope for the future and enhance the opportunities that these citizens have to improve their condition.

Our bill would help do just that. The bill essentially codifies an Executive Order that was issued by President Clinton in 1994. That order required all federal agencies to incorporate environmental justice considerations in their missions, develop strategies to address disproportionate impacts to minority and low-income people from their activities, and coordinate the development of data and research on these topics.

Although federal agencies have been working to implement this order and have developed strategies, there is clearly much more to do. We simply cannot solve these issues overnight or even over a couple of years. We need to "institutionalize" the consideration of these issues in a more long-term fashion—which this bill would do.

In addition, as this issue was addressed through an administrative order, that federal policy could be swept away with a stroke of a pen by new administrations. Thus, we need to make these considerations more permanent—which is also what this bill would do.

It would do this by requiring all federal agencies to: make addressing environmental justice concerns part of their missions; develop environmental justice strategies; evaluate the effects of proposed actions on the health and environment of minority, low-income, and Native American communities; avoid creating disproportionate adverse impacts on the health or environment of minority, low-income, or Native American communities; and collect data and carry out research on the effects of facilities on health and environment of minority, low-income, and Native American communities.

It would also establish two committees: an Interagency Environmental Justice Working Group to develop strategies, provide guidance, coordinate research, convene public meetings, and conduct inquiries regarding environmental justice issues. Makes permanent the group set up by the Executive Order; and a Federal Environmental Justice Advisory Committee, appointed by the President, including members of community-based groups, business, academic, state agencies and environmental organizations. It will provide input and advice to the Interagency Working Group.

In a nutshell what this bill would do is require federal agencies that control the siting and disposing of hazardous materials, store toxins or release pollutants at federal facilities, or issue permits for these kinds of activities to make sure they give fair treatment to low-income and minority populations—including Native Americans. What this bill does is say to federal agencies, "In the past these communities have endured a disproportionate impact to their health and environment. Now we must find ways to make sure that won't be the case in the future."

Both Representative SOLIS and I recognize that it likely will not be possible for the Congress to complete action on this measure in this Session. But we are today taking the first step toward its enactment, and will persist in our efforts to accomplish that goal.

For the information of our colleagues, I am attaching a brief outline of the provisions of the bill.

ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE ACT OF 2002
REPRESENTATIVES MARK UDALL AND HILDA
SOLIS

Summary: This bill would essentially codify a Clinton Administration Executive Order which directed a number of federal agencies and offices to consider the environmental impact of decisions on minority and low-income populations.

Background: On February 11, 1994, President Clinton issued Executive Order 12898, "Federal Actions to Address Environmental Justice in Minority Populations and Low-Income Populations." The President also issued a corresponding Memorandum to all federal departments and agencies further explaining the order and how the agencies should implement it to address environmental justice issues. The Order and Memorandum called for the creation of an interagency working group to provide guidance on identifying disproportionate impacts on the health and environment of minority and low-income populations, develop strategies to address this disproportionate impacts, and provide a report on that strategy. Since the order was promulgated, the affected agencies have developed reports and strategies.

Need for the Bill: Although federal agencies and offices have been complying with the Executive Order, disproportionate impacts related to human health and the environment still exist for many minority and low-income communities. These impacts must be addressed over the long term. In addition, due to the lack of resources and political clout of many of these impacted communities, vigilance is required to make sure that disproportionate impacts are reduced and do not continue. As the effort to date has been primarily administrative based on the presidential order and memorandum, these strategies need to be incorporated into the routine functioning of federal agencies and offices through federal law.

What the bill does

Requires federal agencies and offices to: include addressing environmental justice concerns into their respective missions; conduct programs so as not to create disproportionate impact on minority and low-income populations; include an examination of the effects of such action on the health and environment of minority and low-income populations for actions that require environmental analyses under the National Environmental Policy Act; create an environmental justice strategy to address disproportionate impacts of its policies and actions, and conduct and collect research on the disproportionate impacts from federal facilities.

Creates an Interagency Environmental Justice Working Group to develop strategies, provide guidance, coordinate research, convene public meetings, and conduct inquiries regarding environmental justice issues.

Creates a Federal Environmental Justice Advisory Committee composed of members of community-based groups, business, academic, state agencies and environmental organizations which will provide input and advice to the Interagency Working Group.

HONORING A TRUE PUBLIC SERV- ANT: SENATOR THOMAS KUCHEL

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, fifty years ago this December, California Governor Earl Warren appointed Thomas Henry Kuchel of Anaheim to the United States Senate seat vacated by Vice President-elect Richard Nixon.

A proudly progressive Republican from Orange County, Senator Kuchel represented the Golden State in the Senate with great distinction from 1953 to 1969 and played key roles in ratification of the 1963 nuclear test ban treaty, passage of the Interstate Highway Act, the Landrum-Griffin Act, Medicare, and the 1965 Voting Rights Act. With Senator Hubert Humphrey, he was co-floor leader for the 1964 Civil Rights Act, arguably the most important piece of domestic legislation in the latter half of the twentieth century. As ranking member of the Senate Interior committee, Senator Kuchel sponsored numerous laws that created and expanded reservoirs, wildlife refuges, wilderness areas, and national parks. He was a fine lawyer, particularly on water law.

Senator Kuchel's Republican colleagues elected him Assistant Minority Leader five times—a record that remains unsurpassed today—and he was literally Minority Leader Everett Dirksen's "right-hand man" during the decade that he served as Whip. Senator Kuchel was also a formidable politician—he was the last U.S. Senate nominee to win all 58 California counties, a feat that he accomplished in 1962 as fellow Republican Richard Nixon decisively lost his gubernatorial bid.

From 1960 to 1966, I served as legislative assistant to Senator Kuchel. I had the sad duty of announcing his death to the House on November 29, 1994.

As a memorial to this distinguished public servant, Congress designated the "Thomas H. Kuchel Visitor Center" at Redwood National Park as part of the Interior Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1999. I requested this action at the suggestion of Jason Bezis, a young Californian who has done extensive research on Senator Kuchel's career and accomplishments. Certainly, naming the visitor center is a fitting tribute and I want to provide my colleagues with some of the history behind this action.

In February of 1966, Senator Kuchel introduced S. 2962, a bill to authorize a Redwood National Park in California. He helped to shape this legislation in meetings with Secretary of the Interior Stewart L. Udall, National Park Service Director George B. Hartzog, Jr., and other concerned parties in 1965. He reintroduced the bill in 1967, after aiding in negotiations with timber companies on an agreement that halted "spite cutting" of trees within the proposed park's boundaries. In October of 1967, Senators Tom Kuchel, Henry Jackson, and Alan Bible jointly introduced S. 2515, the bill that established Redwood National Park when President Lyndon Johnson signed it on October 2, 1968 (Public Law 90-545).

Senator Kuchel tirelessly advocated establishments of Redwood National Park through both words and actions. On July 29, 1966, he addressed the U.S. Senate: "I have introduced S. 2962 to establish a Redwood National Park because God's magnificent, awe-inspiring northern California virgin redwood giants ought to be preserved for humanity, rather than be chopped down from mountainsides to be made into 2 by 4's."

When logging companies accelerated their harvest of trees that were to be within the park, he informed their executives that they had a "moral obligation" to refrain from cutting in areas that Congress was attempting to preserve. In his "A Plea for Responsibility" Senate address on August 10, 1966, Senator Kuchel said, "Some of these redwoods have taken 2,000 years to grow into their present grandeur. Those who would sever them from the earth are not answerable to Congress or the courts. They are, however, answerable to the people of this country, and to posterity. These giant trees belong to the ages."

Senator Kuchel repeated his "moral obligation" argument during debate on the Senate floor on October 31, 1967: "The redwoods are a national treasure which must be preserved. We, who are living when the last great primeval redwood forests are diminishing, have an obligation to preserve an area of national park stature where all Americans for now and the future, can experience the wonder of walking among these living remnants of past centuries."

When passage of the Redwood National Park bill was imminent in fall 1968, many credited Senator Kuchel. The San Francisco Examiner dubbed it "Kuchel's Park." The Sacramento Bee lauded Senator Kuchel's advocacy for the park as "an exemplar of political statesmanship."

Senator Kuchel's final legislative accomplishment was the Redwood National Park Act, signed by President Johnson just two weeks before the Senator delivered his Farewell Address. Rarely has a "lame-duck" senator achieved so much.

I believe that Senator Thomas H. Kuchel was among the most eminent legislators that my state of California has ever sent to our national Capital. To his wife Betty and daughter Karen, let me say, "Thank you for sharing this great man with us."

I asked that the following be placed in the RECORD: a eulogy by San Diego Union-Tribune columnist Lionel Van Deerlin, a distinguished member of this body from 1963 to 1981, and editorials from the Sacramento Bee and San Francisco Examiner about Senator Kuchel's role in establishment of Redwood National Park.

[From the Office of U.S. Senator Thomas H. Kuchel, Senate Office Building, Oct. 2, 1968]

STATEMENT BY U.S. SENATOR THOMAS H. KUCHEL (R., CALIF.), ON THE SIGNING INTO LAW BY PRESIDENT JOHNSON OF A BILL TO CREATE A REDWOOD NATIONAL PARK

(Senator Kuchel Was Co-Sponsor of the Senate Bill and Is Senior Republican on the Senate Interior Committee)

This is a most satisfying note on which to close my Senate career. This new law is a capstone of my 16 years in Washington. It involved California local and State government, and the far-flung conservation groups, all with their divergent views, and helping to bring them all together. It meant close cooperation with the California delegation in the House of Representatives, and long, productive and happy hours with Chairman Henry Jackson and other valued friends on the Senate Interior Committee. The result, the Redwood National Park, represents one of conservation's most dramatic victories—a long unyielding and finally successful struggle against civilization's rampant destruction of natural beauty. This is a nostalgic day. It is a proud day, for the Congress, for California, and for the people.

KUCHEL, A COURAGEOUS PUBLIC SERVANT

(By Lionel Van Deerlin)

It's a statistical fact that more than 10 million of California's present population arrived since Tom Kuchel served in the U.S. Senate. But this man, for whom there will be a memorial service in Beverly Hills tomorrow, may have done more than any other, living or dead, to make our state habitable, our lives gentler.

Kuchel (pronounced "Kee-chul"), who died last week at age 84, was one the last of what sometimes seems a vanishing breed: a truly moderate Republican. His Senate service stretched from 1953 to 1968, an era remembered for truly middle-road leadership and ideology in a state party that also gave us Earl Warren, Goodwin Knight, Robert Finch—and their progenitor, the great Hiram Johnson.

Tom Kuchel's was perhaps the strangest, and certainly the saddest story of all. Born and reared in ultra-conservative Orange County, he became a state legislator at 26 and U.S. senator at 43, replacing Richard Nixon. But he was cut down 15 years later while still in the prime of a productive and highly useful career.

Kuchel didn't meet defeat like most public figures, beaten by the other side. He was a victim of skullduggery within his own ranks—made to walk the plank by Republican king-makers whom Kuchel had refused to accompany to the radical right.

Their real parting came in 1964. That's when an all-white and mostly male California delegation to the Republican National Convention helped nominate Barry Goldwater on a historically extremist platform for president. Kuchel stayed out of the campaign, refusing to endorse Goldwater. Two years later, when Ronald Reagan first ran for governor, Kuchel conditioned his endorsement on a demand that Reagan renounce support for the semi-secret John Birch Society. Reagan refused, and so did Kuchel.

Then still in his mid-50s, Kuchel seemed at his political zenith. As assistant Republican leader of the Senate, he helped enact Medicare, voting-rights legislation enfranchising millions of Southern blacks and federal aid to education. He supported the first Atomic Test Ban Treaty.

These landmark accomplishments held scant appeal for party faithfuls—the Henry Salvatoris, the Walter Knetts, the Herbert Kalmbachs or others bent on shedding the GOP's moderate image in California. But Kuchel was guilty of a greater sin: He couldn't accept the almost pathological fear of communism that seized so many in the post-McCarthy era.

Along with other members of Congress, Kuchel was targeted by intensive mail from members in the John Birch Society. After striving to respond calmly to the society's scare talk—which included a complaint that the government was doing nothing to deter “thousands of Chinese Communists who are preparing to invade California from Mexico”—the senator eventually responded in a widely publicized Senate speech.

In it, he blasted “the fright peddlers” and a mind-set that could prompt well-to-do, presumably educated Americans to disseminate or even to countenance such nonsense. Kuchel had checked the facts carefully with military authorities and the FBI.

“We have no evidence of Communists gathering in Mexico, Chinese or otherwise,” he said. “I rise today to speak of another danger we confront . . . the danger of hate and venom, of slander and abuse, generated by fear and heaped indiscriminately upon many great Americans by a relative handful of zealots.”

Referring to a frequent use of the word treason in his incoming mail, the Senator let loose.

“Treason!” he shouted. “I still cannot believe my eyes when I stare at the ugliest word in the American lexicon tossed about in a letter as casually as the ‘Dear Senator’ or ‘Dear Congressman’ salutation and the ‘Respectfully yours’ with which one letter to me closed.”

For the self-styled conservative involved in scare-mongering, Kuchel had this message: “The big lie, the smear and witch hunts are not the hallmarks of conservatism, but are the trademarks of communism and fascism.”

That did it. The senator's home-state enemies began circling the wagons for the 1968 election, when he would be seeking a fourth term. A right-wing state superintendent of schools, the late Max Rafferty, was persuaded to enter the Republican primary, heavily bankrolled.

Kuchel through the years had built enough cross-party support to be sure of holding the seat in the general election. But the stealth campaign within his own party worked. He lost Republican renomination by 69,000 of the 2.2 million votes cast.

Rafferty, as it developed, played only the role of spoiler. His nomination enabled Democrat Alan Cranston to win the Senate seat in November of that year, when Nixon was being elected president. It seems inconceivable that Cranston could have beaten Kuchel.

The GOP couldn't forgive him. Through a quarter-century in retirement, Tom Kuchel continued to be treated as a political pariah—never honored as an elder statesman, never invited to party conventions. After his 1968 defeat, Kuchel joined the law firm headed by Eugene Wyman, a former Democratic National Committee member from California. Insofar as is known, he was never consulted on legislative matters.

Yet if we hear little today of John Birchers and their glint-eyed imitators, Kuchel is the person chiefly to be credited. He surely merits the praise on Brutus by an enemy, Marc Antony:

“This was a man.”

[From the Sacramento Bee, Sept. 12, 1968]

KUCHEL, PUBLIC WIN

A tremendous double-barreled victory is registered in the Redwood National Park bill which is expected to win easy congressional approval before the end of the month.

The first victor is the public interest. The Senate-House conference measure provides almost every feature sought by conservationists. The 58,000-acre park system in Northern California is ample to preserve this natural heritage for all the generations to come.

The second victory is the personal one of United States Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel who led the three-year fight for the park. In this as in so many other battles the California Republican was an exemplar of political statesmanship.

In the redwoods campaign Kuchel fought not only for the recreation and natural beauty heritage of this generation but for those voiceless citizens who comprise all the generations to come.

In the course of it he tangled with representatives of the lumber industry and other groups with lobbying muscle.

The people, the general public for whom Kuchel fought, could not bring to bear the same well-organized pressures. Only in time will many of them come to appreciate the momentousness of the issue. For had these priceless, irreplaceable monarchs of the California forests been lost, their like would not be seen again by man.

Now they will continue to stand as a monument to Kuchel's concern for tomorrow.

[From the San Francisco Examiner, Sept. 12, 1968]

KUCHEL'S PARK

The long battle for establishment of a Redwoods National Park is over, or nearly so. A Senate-House conference committee has agreed on details; acceptance by both houses seems certain.

Much of the credit goes to California's Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel whose tireless concentration on the project defied all discouragement. Though other dedicated conservationists in the Congress share the laurels, this park can fairly be described as a splendid climax to Kuchel's outstanding senatorial career.

The park constitutes an elaborate compromise between the claims of ardent conservationists and equally ardent timber operators. A compromise can be defined as a settlement that falls short of the ideal, but in this case the shortcomings from both points of view must, in fair appraisal, be considered minimal.

Sen. Kuchel said, “The bill preserves the finest remaining specimens of the coast redwoods and protects the timber-based economy by spreading the impact of land acquisition among four companies and two counties. It makes some additional federal redwood timberland available to the companies as compensation.”

An unexpected bonus is the inclusion in the park of a 33-mile strip of wild headlands and beaches.

The park will contain 58,000 acres composed of new purchases and existing state park lands. Management—perhaps a form of partnership—remains to be worked out. We hope state and federal authorities can approach this in the same spirit of amity and concord that marked their relations when the federal government established Yosemite National Park and the state continued in ownership of the valley floor for 20 years.

O.C. POLITICIAN AND EX-SENATOR KUCHEL, 84, DIES

(By Kenneth Reich)

Thomas H. Kuchel, U.S. senator from California for 16 years and the last major officeholder from the progressive Republican line in state politics that stretched back to Earl Warren and Hiram Johnson, has died at age 84.

The Orange County politician died Monday night at his home in Beverly Hills of lung cancer, Dick Arnold, Kuchel's law partner and friend, said Tuesday.

A friend and protege of Warren, Kuchel was appointed by Gov. Warren as state controller and as U.S. senator before he was elected to those posts in his own right.

Kuchel first was elected to public office at 26, winning an Assembly seat from Orange County. By 52, he was the Republican whip in the Senate—the second most powerful Senate leadership post in his party. But for the four years he held that office, he refused to endorse four leading Republican candidates for public office in those years: Richard M. Nixon for governor of California in 1962, Barry Goldwater for President and George Murphy for the U.S. Senate in 1964, and Ronald Reagan for governor in 1966.

In 1968, Kuchel lost his bid for a third full term, beaten in the Republican primary by right-wing educator Max Rafferty, who was then defeated by Democrat Alan Cranston in the general election.

Rafferty's defeat of Kuchel was the Republican right-wing's revenge for Kuchel's recalcitrance toward conservative candidates, and it spelled the end of the proudly outspoken progressive era in California's Republican Party. Later, when the essentially moderate Pete Wilson was elected to the U.S. Senate as a Republican, he was careful to support Reagan and other candidates of the Republican right.

Kuchel never apologized for being out of step with the rightward drift of the GOP, which was particularly marked in California.

In an interview long after his retirement, he extolled the virtues of progressivism, the essence of which he said had been defined in the 19th Century by British statesman Benjamin Disraeli, who remarked that the main purpose of government was to “distribute the amenities of life on an ever-increasing scale to an ever-increasing number.”

“Progressive Republicans brought to politics the philosophy of governing for the many,” Kuchel said. “What comes particularly to my mind is Medicare. If it weren't for Medicare today, there would be tens of thousands of Americans living in the poorhouse, with no care. It was a baker's dozen progressive Republicans in the Senate who agreed we would vote for Medicare. . . . I was their spokesman, and we provided the necessary margin for passage."

Kuchel also expressed particular pride in the progressives' support of civil rights bills for the enfranchisement of blacks and desegregation of public facilities during the 1960s.

By contrast, he said with characteristic disdain, the main feature of "right-wing Republicans," as he understood them, "was militant anti-communism. . . . They seemed convinced we were about to be invaded by the communists."

Kuchel was born Aug. 15, 1910, in Anaheim, where his father, Henry Kuchel, was a newspaper publisher who had crusaded against the Ku Klux Klan. His father became blind the year the senator-to-be was born, and as a boy Kuchel used to read the Congressional Record to him.

When Kuchel spoke at a graduation ceremony at UC Irvine in 1969, he talked about his ties to Orange County.

"This county has been my family's home since before the Civil War," he said. "My immigrant forebearers came here seeking freedom. And the kind of guidelines they sought to give their descendants would surely not be dissimilar from those on which the University of California was founded."

Graduation from USC in 1932 and from USC Law School in 1935, Kuchel's debut in politics came in 1936 when he was elected to the State Assembly to replace Edward L. Craig of Brea. In that year of the Roosevelt landslide, he was the only Republican candidate to be elected to partisan office in Orange County, a fact he credited largely to the good name of his father, who was publisher of the Anaheim Gazette for 48 years.

Kuchel defeated his Democratic opponent, James H. Heffran, a sports writer for the Anaheim Bulletin, by a mere 1,159 votes.

Kuchel's next move up the political ladder came in 1940 when he won a State Senate seat vacated by Democrat Harry Westover.

When he was 30, Kuchel was elected chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, the youngest man ever to hold that position.

When World War II erupted, Kuchel joined the Naval Reserve and was called to active duty.

In 1944, when his Senate term ended, Kuchel was still in the Navy. However his friends nominated him for a second term in the Senate. Although his mother had to do his campaigning, he was easily reelected and became senator in absentia. He was known as Orange County's Phantom Senator until 1945, when he was able to return to office.

It was during his legislative years that he first met Warren, who became state attorney general in 1939 and governor in 1943.

"I saw him quite often," Kuchel later recalled. "I was single and living in the Sutter Club during the legislative sessions, and he'd stay there too when he was in Sacramento. We developed a good friendship."

It was to be the decisive relationship in Kuchel's career. When state Controller Harry B. Riley died in 1946, it was Gov. Warren who called Kuchel, then a state senator fresh from World War II Navy service, and told him, "It's a fine job, and I think you have the qualifications." Six years later, when then-Sen. Nixon was elected vice president, it was Warren who insisted, despite some reluctance from Kuchel, on appointing him to the U.S. Senate.

Warren was shortly to go to Washington himself, as chief justice of the United States, where he became a leading judicial liberal and eventually came under bitter attack from the far right. It was appropriate that his protege, Kuchel, was to emerge as the Senate's most outspoken Republican foe of the far right.

In fiscal matters, the senator was a conservative. He strongly supported American involvement in Vietnam for a long time. Even after the devastating Tet offensive by the North Vietnamese in 1968, he remarked, "I don't want this senator, or any U.S. senator, to indicate by his words that there is dissension among us" on Vietnam policy.

But he worked hard for such moderate causes as the 1964 Civil Rights Act and favored the atomic test ban treaty and other steps toward detente with the Soviet Union.

Kuchel always traced his trouble with the political right to his response to a surge of mail that he got from members of the then-obscure John Birch Society shortly after John F. Kennedy became President.

"I got thousands of letters telling me that Chinese communists were in Mexico preparing to invade California," he recalled. After checking with military authorities, Kuchel penned a short form letter in response. "We have no evidence of communists gathering in Mexico, Chinese or otherwise," it said.

Shortly thereafter, Kuchel learned that he was being labeled a "Comsymp," a term he had not heard of until then.

"I got a little teed off, and prepared a carefully researched speech critical of the John Birch Society and that kind of mentality," Kuchel remembered. "I kicked them around, and they never forgave me."

About the same time, Kuchel's refusal to endorse his fellow Republicans began to nettle not only the party's right wing, but also many of the more orthodox conservatives who made up the majority of the GOP rank and file.

When Nixon announced his plans to run for governor of California, the same year that Kuchel was standing for reelection to the Senate, the former vice president said he would run an independent campaign and endorse no one else on the Republican ticket.

Kuchel, feeling turnabout was fair play, decided to avoid endorsing Nixon. But when Nixon ran into trouble against Democratic incumbent Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, the senator was pressured to give him a hand.

Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower wrote Kuchel a pointed letter, asking what kind of Republican he was for not giving such support. Eisenhower backed off when Kuchel responded forcefully that in California it was traditional to run one's own campaign and not get involved with others and that Nixon had been first to restate the tradition.

"Dear Tom," Eisenhower responded. "Thanks for straightening me out."

Kuchel was reelected that year, 1962, by more than 700,000 votes. Nixon lost to Brown by 300,000.

Two years later, when Goldwater ran against President Lyndon B. Johnson, Kuchel refused to endorse him, explaining later, "I would have been a hypocrite if I had campaigned for Goldwater, so I kept my mouth shut and campaigned for other Republicans across the country. I consider myself the Republican. I considered what Barry Goldwater was saying was hardly Republican doctrine."

On his refusal to support George Murphy, who ran successfully as the Republican candidate for the other Senate seat from California that same year, Kuchel said, "I never coveted public office enough to become a wholesale hypocrite."

Two years later, when Reagan ran for governor, Kuchel withheld his endorsement. He said he had given a Reagan emissary, Leonard Firestone, an assurance that he would endorse the future President but only on condition that Reagan repudiate the John Birch Society. When Reagan would not do so, Kuchel made no endorsement, even though he said he had been told at one point that if he did, Reagan would guarantee that he would have no primary opposition in 1968.

That certain elements of the far right would stop at nothing to get Kuchel was indicated during his last term of office, when his Los Angeles assistant received an affidavit claiming that the senator, who was married and had a daughter, was homosexual.

Kuchel was shaken. "My God," he said years later, "I almost dropped. I flew out to California within two days, and I asked for a meeting with the district attorney and the Los Angeles chief of police. They said they would undertake an investigation."

Quietly, with little press notice, a Los Angeles police officer who had assisted in preparing the affidavit was fired. He and a New Jersey publisher pleaded no contest to charges of libel filed by the authorities. They claimed that it had been a case of mistaken identity.

But Kuchel later said, "It damaged me. Even though the perpetrators took a plea, it hurt me."

Some political insiders felt that the senator lost much of his zest for political life after that episode. But there appeared to be other reasons as well for his inability to put on a dynamic defense of his seat when he was challenged by Rafferty in the 1968 GOP primary.

As Kuchel admitted, "My Achilles' heel was money raising. I hated to indulge in it, and my campaign expenditures usually were the lowest amount of anyone."

With Rafferty charging hard, declaring up and down the state that Kuchel was not a true Republican, the senator seemed on the defensive, and often inarticulately so. A dispatch by then-Times political writer Richard Bergholz said of the incumbent:

"He talked in generalities, haltingly, with little force or emphasis. . . . (He) later conceded that he was something less than brilliant. . . . 'I was tired,' he explained. . . . It was midafternoon on the campaign day which had only one appearance earlier in the day."

When the votes were in, on a primary day most remembered for the assassination that night in Los Angeles of Democratic presidential contender Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, Rafferty had defeated Kuchel by 69,000 votes of 2.2 million cast.

The senator went to New York to attend Kennedy's funeral. There, he ran into an aging Warren, who only a year later was to retire as chief justice. He told Kuchel, "I just feel so badly about your defeat, I can't talk about it."

As he left the Senate, Kuchel expressed pride in his record, even though it appeared to have contributed to his loss.

"Some of the votes I have cast I know have been very costly to me politically," he told the Senate on Oct. 14, 1968, in his formal farewell. "I think, however, if there is one measure of satisfaction in the life of a legislator, it comes at the time he tallies the votes which he believed in his own mind were right, just and appropriate, even if he knew that the balance of public opinion was against him, and, sometimes, violently against him. . . ."

"I think it is not only permissible but, indeed, vital that the Senate of the United States lead public opinion instead of following it. That is the difficult path but the only one to tread if our republic is to remain."

Shortly afterward, Kuchel joined the law firm headed by Eugene Wyman, a former Democratic National Committee member from California. After several years of representing the firm in Washington, he returned home to California and practiced law with the firm in Los Angeles until his retirement as a partner in 1981, although he continued to be active.

TWO SIKH MEN DETAINED AFTER FLIGHT—RACIAL PROFILING MUST BE STOPPED

HON. CYNTHIA A. MCKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mrs. MCKINNEY Mr. Speaker, I was disturbed to read that two Sikh men were detained after a flight simply for using the bathroom. This is ethnic profiling of the worst kind and it must be stopped.

Apparently, what happened was that the two men, Gurdeep Wander and Harinder Pal Singh, were flying to Las Vegas for a convention and they missed their connection. They were a bit late the next morning so they ran onto the plane. Apparently, this made the flight crew suspicious.

Then Mr. Singh, Mr. Wander, and another man, who was Hispanic, used the same bathroom on the plane. When Mr. Singh, the last of the three, went to use it, the flight attendant tried to convince him that it was locked and unavailable. She claimed that she had read that people could make bombs in the bathrooms by bringing the parts on separately. I wonder if three white people using the bathroom in quick succession would have made her think the same thing.

After the plane made an emergency landing, the two Sikh men and an Egyptian man were detained on the plane while police dogs surrounded it and sniffed for weapons. Then the Sikh men were arrested for interfering with a flight crew.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Transportation must take appropriate action against this airline and its discriminatory employees. This kind of racial profiling cannot be allowed. I call on the Secretary of Transportation to take appropriate steps to end this racist practice and to make sure that the victims of this incident are fully compensated. We must make it clear that we will not tolerate racial profiling.

Mr. Speaker, the Council of Khalistan has written a letter to Secretary Mineta asking him to take appropriate action in response to this incident. I would like to place that letter into the RECORD now.

COUNCIL OF KHALISTAN,
Washington, DC, October 8, 2002.

Hon. NORMAN MINETA
Secretary of Transportation,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY MINETA: I am writing to you to protest an incident of racial profiling against Sikhs that occurred on a Northwest

Airlines flight on September 11. Gurdeep Wander and Harinder Pal Singh, two men of Sikh descent, were headed to a convention in Las Vegas on a Northwest Airlines flight after missing a previous connecting flight in Minneapolis.

Mr. Wander and Mr. Singh chose to fly on September 10 to avoid flying on the anniversary of the September 11 attacks. However, they missed their connecting flight so they had to stay overnight in Minneapolis. They were then placed on a flight on the morning of the September 11. Mr. Wander and Mr. Singh were late for their flight. They rushed on board the plane, which the flight attendant apparently regarded as suspicious. All that the two Sikh men carried was the shaving kits that they had been given by the airline. Their luggage had already been forwarded to Las Vegas. Would the flight attendants regard white men rushing onto the flight as suspicious? I don't think so.

The flight attendants' suspicion was apparently further aroused when right after Mr. Singh and Mr. Wander, a Hispanic man named Carlos Nieves rushed onto the plane.

Shortly before departure, Mr. Wander got out of his seat and got the shaving kit the airline had given him. He took it with him to the bathroom. When Mr. Wander had been in the bathroom a few minutes, a flight attendant asked him to sit down. He asked for a minute to finish up what he was doing. When Mr. Wander came out, Mr. Nieves went to use the bathroom. Mr. Singh was next to use it. The flight attendant tried to prevent Mr. Singh from using the restroom, claiming that it was locked. She later claimed that she had read that explosive devices could be assembled on the flight if separate individuals carried the components.

After the plane made an emergency landing in Fort Smith, Arkansas, Mr. Singh, Mr. Wander, and a Muslim from Egypt named Alaaeldin Abdelsalam were detained. The plane was surrounded by bomb-sniffing dogs and all the luggage was taken out of the plane.

Secretary Mineta, this is clearly racial profiling and it must not be allowed. I urge you to take appropriate corrective action to correct the abuse of Mr. Singh, Mr. Wander, Mr. Abdelsalam, and Mr. Nieves. I also respectfully request that you issue an urgent directive banning racial profiling on any U.S. flight. Since these airlines are regulated by your department and your department controls airport security, you must act to ensure that every passenger is treated equally and fairly. Please take appropriate action to correct this situation today. Thank you in advance for your help.

Sincerely,

GURMIT SINGH AULAKH,
President.

JOE SKEEN FEDERAL BUILDING

SPEECH OF

HON. WES WATKINS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 7, 2002

Mr. WATKINS Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5427, the Joe Skeen Federal Building Designation Act, which names the federal building in Roswell, New Mexico after JOE SKEEN.

After over two decades serving in this House, JOE SKEEN is retiring and heading back to his ranch in New Mexico. JOE SKEEN has had a truly impressive career here in the U.S. House. He came to Congress as a write-in candidate, one of the few Members that have been elected in this manner. In 2001, JOE SKEEN became the longest serving New Mexico House Member.

I have had the honor of serving with JOE SKEEN through most of his career, and I have had the pleasure of working with him on the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee. He has been stalwart in protecting private property rights for our citizens, and understands the needs for striking a balance between conservation efforts and for supporting local economies. JOE SKEEN is a friend to both farmers and ranchers, and has been a champion to the lamb and wool industry.

In his 22 years in the House, JOE SKEEN has been one of the most ardent supporters of states' rights. He has kept the mind set that those closest to the people make the best decisions on how to use federal dollars. He has worked diligently to improve business development in southern New Mexico by incorporating private industry, various federal agencies and New Mexico's institutions of higher learning into partnerships. Such examples of this can be seen in the establishment of the International Law Enforcement Academy in Roswell, and the landmine detection and disarming program and the New Mexico Institute of Technology.

One can say that JOE SKEEN never backed away from something that was important to him and his home. We saw this when he was instrumental in overturning the newly acquired line-item veto of President Clinton, which threatened 38 defense projects. He showed us his strength again in his work to repeal the 55 mile-per-hour federal speed limit, and the development and implementation of the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant in Carlsbad, New Mexico—the first repository for defense waste in the nation.

He's been the "Top Shepard" for his flock and I am sure that the "Top Shepard on High" will keep a watchful eye over him as he heads back to his home in New Mexico. Good luck JOE and God bless you. You will be missed.

HONORING DR. JOHN FENN FOR HIS BREAKTHROUGH WORK IN MASS SPECTROMETRY THAT LED TO HIS RECEIVING THE NOBEL PRIZE IN CHEMISTRY

HON. ERIC CANTOR

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mr. CANTOR Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. John Fenn, an analytical chemistry professor at Virginia Commonwealth University, for his breakthrough work in mass spectrometry that led to his receiving the Nobel Prize.

Dr. Fenn is being recognized for developing a new way to quickly identify and analyze proteins through mass spectrometry, which allows scientists to analyze a substance through its mass. Dr. Fenn's work has aided researchers in their need to learn more about the interactions of the hundreds of thousands of different proteins that show up in the human body. His development has revolutionized the hunt for new medicines and can help in the early diagnosis of cancer.

While Dr. Fenn, who is 85, stopped riding his bicycle to work a few years ago, he still has plenty of energy. He runs his own laboratory at VCU, maintains a full work schedule, and mentors two graduate students. He is known for arriving at work early and generating countless ideas. It is reported that his students have a hard time keeping up with him.

Dr. Fenn's vision and commitment to his work are invaluable, and we are all grateful for the hope that he has generated. I am honored that such a remarkable citizen resides in the seventh district of Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in honoring Dr. John Fenn.

TAYLOR MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 4546—BOB
STUMP NATIONAL DEFENSE AU-THORIZATION ACT FOR FY 2003

HON. CHARLIE NORWOOD

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the freedom we enjoy here in America is anything but free. Our Nation's disabled military retirees have paid the ultimate price for that freedom. Yet today we show our gratitude to these heroes by denying them the benefits they have earned through their service. I'm speaking of the dollar-for-dollar offset of military retired pay and VA disability compensation that is currently being imposed.

A law passed in 1891 requires a disabled career military veteran to waive the amount of his retired pay equal to the amount of VA disability benefits he is rightfully owed. Mr. Speaker, this is a poor way to show our gratitude to America's disabled veterans. During my time in Congress, I have remained a strong advocate for correcting this law and bringing an end to the prohibition that exists with concurrent receipt.

I think it is particularly appropriate that on this day—the day when this body rightfully granted the President the authority to call on our Armed Forces in dealing with Saddam Hussein's wicked regime—we have a unique opportunity to keep our promise to the service men and women who have served so bravely in defense of freedom and this Nation throughout the years.

We in Congress do have a unique opportunity and more importantly, a responsibility, to do the right thing for America's disabled retired veterans through the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act of FY 2003 (H.R. 4546). By addressing the inequity that exists through this legislation, we can take a major step towards ending this injustice and sending a strong message of support for these true American heroes.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING THE 50TH ANNIVER-SARY OF THE SIDEWINDER MIS-SILE PROGRAM

HON. WILLIAM M. THOMAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the 50th anniversary of the development of the Sidewinder Missile—the world's most accurate, reliable and successful dogfighter missile in use today.

Fifty years ago, the research and development phase for a new fighter missile began at the Naval Ordnance Test Station (now the Naval Air Warfare Center Weapons Division) at China Lake, California. A team of technicians, scientists, and fleet-experienced operators worked endless hours to produce a new type of weapon—one that sought out the heat exhaust from an enemy aircraft's engine.

China Lake's vast test ranges in the Mojave Desert afforded researchers the ability to test new theories almost immediately. They eventually developed the design we have today: a heatseeking, short-range, air-to-air missile carried by fighter aircraft. The missile was named after a desert rattlesnake, the Sidewinder, which detects its prey by sensing an animal's heat emissions.

Early versions of the Sidewinder proved its lethal accuracy and effectiveness in Southeast Asia. During Operation Black Magic in the Formosa Straights, Chinese Nationalist Air Force F-86s shot down eleven of the Chinese communist air force's MiG fighters. In Vietnam, the U.S. Navy and Air Force successfully used the Sidewinder in countless missions. My colleague and a highly-decorated naval aviator, Representative Randy "Duke" Cunningham, used the Sidewinder missile to become Vietnam's first fighter ace.

The Sidewinder's early successes proved the weapon's capabilities, affording many opportunities to increase the effectiveness of the Sidewinder. Newer generations of the missile were developed and have seen action in many theatres, including over the Gulf of Sidra to shoot down a Libyan fighter aircraft during a dogfight in the early 1990s and during the Persian Gulf War, where twelve Iraqi aircraft were shot down using the Sidewinder. The current version of the Sidewinder, the AIM-9M, arms a wide range of American fighters, including the U.S. Navy's F-14 and F/A-18, the U.S. Air Force's F-15 and F-16, and the AH-1 W helicopter.

The Sidewinder's newest version, the AIM-9X, is currently in development phase. To date, over 110,000 missiles have been produced for 28 nations and it is, by far, the most widely used air-to-air missile in the West.

In celebrating its golden anniversary this November, the Sidewinder program is testament to American ingenuity and innovation. I am confident that the Sidewinder program will continue to be a leader in the field of missile technology for the warfighter of today and tomorrow.

HEALTH CARE SAFETY NET IMPROVEMENT ACT

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3450, The Health Care Safety Net Improvement Act which amends the Public Health Service Act to increase authorization for health centers. Reauthorization of this bill will help to improve, strengthen and expand delivery of health care services for community health centers (CHC). I am particularly in favor of this bill because CHC's have been pivotal towards improving access to health care for my uninsured and disadvantaged constituents of New Mexico. Without these centers, too many New Mexican's would go without essential preventative health care and primary care services.

Recent studies have demonstrated that the disparity in access to health care has contributed to poorer health and shortened life span of the uninsured. Often, the reason for not seeking medical attention is because the cost of treatment is too expensive. Therefore, these patients forgo the preventative and often life saving treatment because they cannot afford it. Instead, only in extreme life or limb cases do they seek treatment. Sadly, only after the disease has advanced and progressed into precarious stages leaving little opportunity for a healthy recovery. Time and again they seek treatment in a hospital setting hoping to temporary ameliorate their condition so they can continue to live their normal lives. Not once thinking about how they will control their condition upon discharge because they know that they are uninsured and cannot afford ongoing treatment of their condition. So they settle for a temporary bandaid to alleviate the pain.

There are too many Americans with inadequate access to health care. Whether they are uninsured or come from disadvantaged backgrounds, these individuals should have the right to access to quality health care. That is why I support community health centers. These safety-net health care centers provide health care for predominately uninsured individuals, Medicaid beneficiaries and other vulnerable patients regardless of their ability to pay. Without CHC's many of my constituents that suffer from chronic disease like diabetes or cardiovascular disease would not have access to health care. They would not have the eye and foot exams to prevent blindness or amputation or the medications to help them control their blood glucose levels, blood pressure or cholesterol levels. Pregnant women would not have access to prenatal care and children would not have the vaccinations they require.

Until we can find a solution to universal health care, we must continue to support other systems of care that treat vulnerable populations. Safety-net health centers provide the essential preventative and clinical healthcare treatment services aimed at controlling and preventing the onset of chronic diseases, cancers and other anomalies that continue to plague New Mexican's in growing numbers.

TRIBUTE TO THE JENKINTOWN
UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

HON. JOSEPH M. HOFFEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Mr. HOFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Jenkintown United Methodist Church which is celebrating its 100th anniversary on November 1, 2002. One hundred thirty five years ago, the Jenkintown United Methodist Church was established to provide the people of Jenkintown with a local Methodist place of worship. The congregation is now celebrating its 100th anniversary in its current location.

Led by Rev. Jay R. Newlin, the church continues to be a vital and thriving community of faith. The Jenkintown United Methodist Church places a strong emphasis on outreach. It operates foreign missions in Africa and Indonesia, national missions in Appalachia, New Mexico, and works with several inner city Philadelphia churches.

With the local Jenkintown community, the church is home to several ministries and missions. "Loaves and Fishes," a food cupboard established by the church in 1985 assists more than 40 families per week. The church is also host to weekly meetings to help those who struggle with addiction as well as their friends and family. A Community Teen Center was organized in 2000 as a drug-free and alcohol-free safe haven for local teenagers. The church also works with a retirement home on the Adopt-a-Grandparent program providing the opportunity for children and youth to participate in the local ministry.

I congratulate the Jenkintown United Methodist Church on its 100 years of service to the local, national and world community.

AUTHORIZATION FOR USE OF
MILITARY FORCE AGAINST IRAQ
RESOLUTION OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. BENNIE G. THOMPSON

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2001

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the past thirteen months have presented challenges on several international and domestic fronts. The current economic conditions facing our Nation are impacting the very day-to-day activities of all Americans. In addition, America has enlisted in a war to prevent future terrorist attacks on our homeland. The events of 9-11-01, have opened our eyes to the kind of terror from abroad that many have endured from within.

Let me be clear—we must use our able resources to stop Al Qaeda from further terrorizing freedom-loving people.

After listening intently to the case for action that the Bush Administration has presented and talking with many of my constituents, I believe that there is insufficient information to warrant sending our young men and women into harm's way. I oppose the current Congressional resolution for the following reasons:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

- (1) Lack of international support and cooperation;
- (2) Over-extension of military resources;
- (3) War against Al Qaeda is continuing;
- (4) No exit strategy has been defined; and
- (5) Cost is yet undetermined.

The Bush Administration has failed to provide sufficient evidence linking Saddam to Al Qaeda; therefore, a preemptive unilateral strike is not warranted at this time. The Administration has failed to define its goal with regard to the use of force in Iraq. Until that definition is outlined and the aforementioned points are addressed, a preemptive strike against a sovereign state is premature.

AUTHORIZATION FOR USE OF
MILITARY FORCE AGAINST IRAQ
RESOLUTION OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. WILLIAM D. DELAHUNT

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Speaker, now that the House and Senate have both authorized the President to use military force against Iraq, it is more important than ever to listen to voices of wisdom about the costs of waging war and the challenges of keeping the peace. With that in mind, I commend to my colleagues the admonitions of a dozen older constituents—retired bankers, diplomats, journalists and college presidents—published recently in the Cape Cod Times:

TWELVE OLD MEN (ON CAPE COD) SAY "NO" TO A UNILATERAL STRIKE

"Older men," Herbert Hoover told the 1944 Republican National Convention, "declare war. But it is youth that must fight and die."

Our nation was, when Mr. Hoover made that statement, defending itself against fascists and militarists who had unleashed the dogs of war on us and our allies.

Most of us served in that war, and we have vivid memories of it. Many of our friends—youth at the time—fought and died in defense of their country. But we and our allies prevailed, and freedom survived.

Then, with the Marshall Plan, our nation waged peace, helping rebuild and democratize the countries we had defeated. In time, those countries became staunch allies.

Today we are on edge of a different sort of war. Our President, under pressure from our allies and a few members of his own party, has with apparent reluctance asked the U.N. to pressure Saddam Hussein to live up to a number of Security Council resolutions. But Mr. Bush's vice-president, his national security adviser, his secretary of defense, and others, have made it clear that even though Iraq has agreed to let arms inspectors do their work, the White House objective still is a so-called "pre-emptive strike" intended to bring about the Iraqi regime change we failed to accomplish when we went to the defense of Kuwait, when the first President Bush was in the White House.

Now—before more young men and women are ordered into battle by those older men who see war as a solution to the world's problems—is a time for the other older men, such as ourselves, to raise our hands and say to those who lead our nation: "No!"

"No" to the pre-emptive war Mr. Bush and Mr. Cheney are, for whatever reasons, seeking to justify.

"No" to those in Washington who would rain death and destruction on the Iraqi people in order to rid them of their leader.

"No" to the notion that the immediate rewards such a war might accomplish will outweigh the furies it surely would incite, and the long-term chasm it would create between the West and the Muslim world.

"No" to plunging into a new war and taking on the responsibility of occupying a conquered Iraq, while we still have not rolled up the Al Qaeda terrorist network, while Afghanistan shows signs of slipping into a bloody anarchy, and while there still is no real progress toward calming the violence in Israel/Palestine.

We believe that as a member of the family of nations, the United States of America must, rather than rushing headlong into war, help establish an international consensus on dealing with whatever threat Iraq poses.

We agree with our President that the U.N. resolutions against Iraq need to be respected and enforced. But such resolutions must be enforced by the U.N., or by U.N. approval of action by its member nations.

We have seen too many wars. One Vietnam experience was enough. We believe that now, as always, war should be our nation's last option, not our first. And we believe that waging war on violence must begin at home, by raising our voices against a unilateral "pre-emptive strike."

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3295,
HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2001

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, today we consider legislation that was intended to fix the problems in our election system. As the Chair of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I have been particularly concerned about how such election reform would protect the voting rights of Hispanic American citizens. And I thank Congressman CHARLIE GONZALEZ, who chairs the Hispanic Caucus' Civil Rights Task Force, for his leadership and assistance on this issue. His dedication to advancing the interests of current and future Latino voters deserves great praise.

Today, I join my colleague in urging this House to vote against the conference report of the Help America Vote Act. Last year, I voted against this bill because despite some of the progress it made, it failed to provide key safeguards that would ensure every voter would be able to cast a ballot and have that ballot counted.

Now, almost one year later, we have a bill that has emerged from conference which includes some major improvements but also unfortunately includes some major new obstacles to Latino voters. Some of these obstacles came from the bill passed by the other body, and others were added in conference for the first time and at the last minute.

Together, these obstacles create a bill that on balance will hurt Latino voters more than it will help. It is a sad irony that this is the end result of a process that began as an effort to address the voting difficulties of the 2000 general elections, where many minority voters were denied their right to vote because of faulty voter lists, intimidation, a lack of voter education, or other obstacles. Rather than take bold, unequivocal strides towards expanding civil rights protections and welcoming our nation's fastest growing bloc of minority voters, this bill is full of half-steps and backward steps that will dampen the voice of the Hispanic American electorate.

The major obstacle to Latino voters in this bill is the inclusion of a new voter identification requirement. This will be the first time in contemporary election law history that an identification requirement is federally mandated. The bill requires a voter to show valid photo identification, a copy of a current utility bill, a bank statement, government check or other government document that shows the name and address of the voter.

While it sounds reasonable to require identification at the polls in order to combat fraud—an effort I certainly support when done with genuine intent to make the voting process fair—the requirements in this conference report would particularly disenfranchise low income people, especially women and the elderly, who, for example, live in multi-person households and are less likely to drive, and therefore do not possess a driver's license, do not receive a utility bill in their name and may not have any of the other forms of identification listed in the bill.

In the past, such provisions have been overturned in federal court for violating the Voting Rights Act. Furthermore, the U.S. Department of Justice has prohibited such identification requirements because of the disparate impact they have on minority voters.

In addition to the identification requirement, which was in the other body's bill, new impediments to Latinos were added into the bill at the eleventh hour during conference. The most egregious of which is the creation of the "citizenship check-off box" mandate.

The conference agreement now imposes on states a new mandate that they cannot register voters who inadvertently miss checking off the citizenship box on their voter registration forms. This mandate does not apply to those who fail to mark the age check-off box. This inconsistency makes no sense, as both citizenship and age are equal requirements to being eligible to vote. There is no acceptable reason why one criteria should be treated differently than the other.

Under this provision, it is entirely plausible that a citizen who is otherwise eligible to vote, who mistakenly misses the check-off box on citizenship, will either not be notified of the error or not be notified with sufficient time to rectify the mistake before the state cut-off date for registration.

Therefore, this change in the law could result in a state or local registrar targeting the voter registration forms of those with surnames that some people consider "foreign," to find any that left the citizenship box blank and then invalidate them, without ever telling the applicant. When the voter shows up to vote, he or she will not be on the voter rolls and then if offered a provisional ballot, that ballot will never be counted, because only the provisional ballots of successfully registered voters are counted.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, this conference report adds barriers to voter registration efforts through adding needless administrative red tape. Under the conference report, someone who registers to vote, who has been issued a current and valid driver's license, must include the license number on the registration form. Therefore, if citizens happen not to have their license with them when they register to vote, their voter registration form will not be processed. This constitutes a weakening of existing voter rights law, and creates barriers to the effectiveness of voter registration drives, as citizens would have to register at a later time if they happen not to have their driver's license with them on their first attempt to register.

For those who have not been issued a driver's license, the bill requires the last four digits of their social security number, which is then cross-checked against the Social Security Administration database—a database riddled with errors, especially in recording the names of Hispanic women.

And for those people with weak memories, who could easily forget their Social Security number, incorrectly record that number, they will have their voter registration form invalidated.

Besides these obstacles, the bill does include some improvements to our election system: more access to provisional ballots; the ability to verify a ballot before casting it; the required posting of voting information; and the creation of statewide voter list databases. However, a great deal of the bill's new benefits will be unavailable to many Latinos and others because of the new barriers the bill erects.

On balance, this bill does not deserve our support. It is not better than no bill at all. I urge all my colleagues to vote against this conference report and revisit election reform in the next Congress, where we can hopefully do the job right.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3295, HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act of 2002.

Chairman BOEHLERT and Chairman EHLERS of the Science Committee have already spoken about the need for voluntary, technology-neutral standards that address the accuracy, integrity and security of voting products and systems. They have explained and clarified the intent of the standards and research and development provisions in H.R. 3295. I fully agree with and support their statements.

In 1975, long before any other federal agency had looked at our voting equipment, the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) reported on the technical deficiencies of voting systems in use. If we had heeded the recommendations of the 1975 report and NIST's subsequent 1988 report, we wouldn't be debating this bill today. The National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) will be an objective and technically qualified voice in the development of performance-based technical standards and guidelines. In addition, NIST will provide needed technical guidance on the research and development projects needed to improve our voting systems.

I would like to thank Chairman BOEHLERT and Chairman EHLERS for working with me in the initial development of the provisions related to technical standards and a research and development program. I especially want to thank my good friend STENY HOYER, the Ranking Member on the House Administration Committee, and Chairman NEY for their strong advocacy in retaining these provision in the final conference report. I also want to congratulate them on successfully concluding a long and difficult conference.

In closing, I would like to remind everyone that the basic cornerstone of trust that Americans place in our government is their belief and faith in the accuracy, integrity, and reliability of our voting systems. H.R. 3295 will strengthen the public's confidence in our voting systems.

I would urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on H.R. 3295.

SPEECH OF

HON. PETER HOEKSTRA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are here today to consider H.R. 5601, the "Keeping Children and Families Safe Act of 2002" which reauthorizes and improves the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA), the Adoption Opportunities program, and the Abandoned Infants Act.

While I recognize and am disappointed that we were not able to come to agreement on all issues of the original bill, H.R. 3839, the bill before us shows our effort and commitment to ensure that programs aimed at the prevention of child abuse and neglect continue. I would like to thank my colleagues on both sides for their hard work and efforts in developing this mutual compromise in the bill before us for consideration today.

I especially want to thank the full committee chairman, Mr. BOEHNER, for his support of this bill, and Mr. GREENWOOD for his diligence in ensuring that infants born addicted to alcohol or drugs receive necessary services.

I want to also thank the ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. ROEMER, and the ranking member of the full committee, Mr. MILLER, for their cooperation in working towards this alternative bill before us today.

This bill provides for the continued provision of important federal resources for identifying and addressing the issues of child abuse and neglect, and for supporting effective methods of prevention and treatment.

It also continues local projects with demonstrated value in eliminating barriers to permanent adoption and addressing the circumstances that often lead to child abandonment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill emphasizes the prevention of child abuse and neglect before it occurs. It promotes partnerships between child protective services and private and community-based organizations, including education, and health systems to ensure that services and linkages are more effectively provided.

The bill retains language that appropriately addresses a growing concern over parents being falsely accused of child abuse and neglect and the aggressiveness of social workers in their child abuse investigations. It retains language to increase public education opportunities to strengthen the public's understanding of the child protection system and appropriate reporting of suspected incidents of child maltreatment.

The agreement continues to foster cooperation between parents and child protective service workers by requiring caseworkers to inform parents of the allegations made against them, and improves the training opportunities and requirements for child protective services personnel regarding the extent and limits of their legal authority and the legal rights of parents and legal guardians.

It also ensures the safety of foster and adoptive children by requiring states to conduct criminal background checks for prospective foster and adoptive parents and other adult relatives and non-relatives residing in the household.

Lastly, this bill expands adoption opportunities to provide for services for infants and young children who are disabled or born with life-threatening conditions, and requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a study on the annual number of infants and young children abandoned each year.

I again want to thank my colleagues for their work on this bill and urge them to join me in support of this effort to improve the prevention and treatment of child abuse by supporting H.R. 5601, the Keeping Children and Families Safe Act of 2002.

KEEPING CHILDREN AND FAMILIES SAFE ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. JAMES C. GREENWOOD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the adoption of H.R. 5601, The Keeping Children and Families Safe Act. I am pleased that after the House passed a similar version of this bill in the Spring with overwhelming support, we have the opportunity to make this critical legislation a reality.

The Keeping Children and Families Safe Act, in combination with other federal child welfare statutes, assists in our national efforts to protect children from abuse and neglect. The Act requires that the Federal-State child welfare system supports and improves the infrastructure of child protective services, develops statewide networks of community-based family support and child abuse prevention programs, and supports demonstration projects to determine how best to improve the well being of abused or neglected children.

The bill continues to provide important Federal resources for identifying child abuse, neglect, and family violence, and for supporting effective methods of prevention and treatment. It also continues local projects with demonstrated value in eliminating barriers to permanent adoption and addressing the circumstances that often lead to child abandonment.

I believe this bill strikes a successful balance between providing appropriate treatment services, such as a plan of safe care for infants affected by illegal substance abuse, and accountability, such as the report that the Secretary of Health and Human Services must submit describing the extent to which States are implementing the policies outlined in the bill.

I want to thank Congressmen PETE HOEKSTRA and TIM ROEMER in this effort, Chairman and Ranking Member of the Subcommittee on Select Education, as well as Chairman BOEHNER and ranking member MILLER of the full Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5601, and I reserve the balance of my time.

NATIONAL FOREST ORGANIZATIONAL CAMP FEE IMPROVEMENT ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5316 is the culmination of a year and a half of work by parents and volunteers who wanted to save the camps that serve under-privileged children and disabled adults.

The Forest Service is in the midst of pricing off forest lands, the very camps that serve these children and adults. Government should not be making a profit on disadvantaged children. We should charge these camps a modest fee that pays for the paperwork and maybe a little extra if the camps use a lot of land. But not $71,000 per year, which could happen in at least one instance if this bill is not enacted.

If we, the Congress, cannot change a law that requires the Forest Service to charge exorbitant use fees on youth camps and camps for disabled adults, fees that almost certainly will lead to the camps closing down their operations, then what laws should we pass?

This bill before us today reforms and improves the fee structure used by the Forest Service for non-profit recreational camps—camps operated by organizations such as the Girl Scouts and church groups. Blame should not be attached to “Scrooge-like” Forest Service officials. Let's face it; the re-calculation of fees is required by a law enacted by Congress. But the result is the same. Fees will dramatically increase for camps across the nation. In one case in Tucson, Arizona, the fee would go from $4,500 to $71,000 per year.

The Tucson Citizen put it well in a recent editorial:

With so many arms of government raising fees on just about every service known to taxpayers, one might start to wonder how their general tax dollars are being spent . . .

Ever vigilant for new revenue-raising opportunities, the Forest Service then proposed raising the rents on national forest land that is used by nonprofit organizations for summer camps. Targeted cash cows include the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, religious and men's groups. The Forest Service pulled that one off by borrowing a trick from local governments loathe to commit political suicide by raising tax rates. They accomplish the same thing, however, by reappraising the value of land, making it subject to higher taxes under the old rates once it's deemed more valuable.

We must establish a new, common-sense fee system that is rational and will allow camps to remain on forest lands while providing a fair return to the American taxpayer. Surely, there can be no better use of Federal land than by under-privileged children and disabled adults.

The National Forest Organizational Camp Fee Improvement Act will establish a new fee system based on acreage used by the camps, providing incentives to make the most efficient use of the Federal lands. To prevent large spikes in fees, the camp's fee would be 5%—a reasonable rate of return to the U.S. Government—of the value of the land based on rural land values, not developable land values.

Therein lies the key. We are not going to turn these camp sites inside our beautiful national forests into suburban housing tracts. So, why should the fee be based on a value of the land which will never be realized, rather than the only alternative use to a camp site, which is agricultural uses?

The land value we propose to use is a statistic calculated by USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS). NASS is not part of the Forest Service, thus ensuring it is independent and appraises the value fairly. The NASS valuation is based on previous sales of farmlands. This is a departure from the current methodology, where valuation is determined by future probable sale prices of land for development. Further, the land value is a 5-year rolling average of agriculture lands by County, thereby taking into account geographical differences and the need to even out large fluctuations in fees over time.

This legislation also provides two discounts to the base fee to maximize the number of under-privileged children and disabled adults who attend camp. There is a 100% reduction proportionate to the number of participants who are physically disabled or children at risk, and there is a discount of 60% to recognize the benefits to the community of organizational camps serving certain character-building youth programs.

But even worthy organizations operating camp sites should pay the administrative cost of a permit. So, there is a minimum fee required that represents, on a regional forest basis, the average cost to the Forest Service to administer the permit. This fee is expected to be approximately $300 to $500 per year.

Our Federal lands are an important resource for our Nation. It's only right that we should give priority to children to learn, play, and enjoy these areas. We want them to grow up appreciating outdoors and environmental values, and to have a childhood filled with positive wilderness experiences.

This bill benefits camps of all types in every corner of America.

There are 320 camps in 25 States and Puerto Rico affected by this bill—from Arizona and California in the west, to Minnesota in the north, Florida and Tennessee in the south, and New Hampshire in New England.

This bill is supported by the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, various church groups, and the Forest Service. Even the Forest Service agrees that the current law is not fair. The administration supports this bill. In a letter dated October 9, 2002, USDA Under Secretary Mark Rey wrote:

The Administration supports H.R. 5316 and your efforts to revise the existing Forest Service organizational camp permit fee structure. . .

The Forest Service became concerned last year when it learned that some camp permit fees in Arizona would increase substantially as a result of the new appraisals and fee calculations required under the current system. Such increases would create significant financial burdens for many permit holders and could cause a number of sponsoring organizations to terminate and close their camps. These fee increases and possible camp closures are unacceptable to the Forest Service, just as they are to you. . .

Enactment of H.R. 5316 would provide sponsoring organizations and the Forest Service the mechanism to set and adjust the fee in a manner that would continue these important, long-term relationships that provide immeasurable benefits to America's youth.

Finally, I would be remiss if I did not express my thanks and appreciation to the many folks in Tucson, Arizona, who have advised me and my staff on this fee structure change.

Dillard Broderick from the Church of Latter Day Saints has been an especially strong, stable force in the effort to Save the Camps.

Gail Gurney from the Sahuaro Girl Scout Council has worked tirelessly to do whatever was necessary to help.

Lou Salute from the Boy Scouts, David English from Southern Pines Baptist Camp, Bob Lofgren from Amphitheater Men's Club, and Lori Block from St. Mark's Presbyterian Church round out the phenomenal people who volunteer part of their lives to help children and want nothing more than to give back to the community.

I am proud that the House of Representatives is doing its part to help these kids, their parents, and the volunteers.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill.

BENIGN BRAIN TUMOR CANCER REGISTRIES AMENDMENT ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 10, 2002

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to have witnessed real, grass root's effort and hard work come to fruition in the passage of S. 2558, The Benign Brain Tumor Cancer Registries Amendment Act, by unanimous consent of the House this evening.

In January of 2001, I introduced H.R. 239, The Benign Brain Tumor Cancer Registries Amendment Act. A little over a year later, Senator JACK REED introduced the Senate companion, S. 2558.

The origin of this bill goes back to my constituent, Lloyd Morgan, a brain tumor survivor. Lloyd is from Berkeley, and I first met him at a town hall meeting.

That day, Mr. Morgan brought to my attention the fact the National Program of Cancer Registries does not collect data on benign brain tumors and the critical problems that this public health oversight creates.

I agreed to introduce legislation to correct the problem and soon after introduced The Benign Brain Tumor Cancer Registries Amendment Act.

The bill is very simple. With the passage of S. 2558, "benign" brain tumors will for the first time be included in the data collection of cancer registries. Medical system organizations use cancer data in funding decisions, investigations, research, and care facilities. Because data is not being collected on benign brain tumors, these tumors do not receive critical research funding. Of course, lack of research directly impacts both survivors and patients.

Additional research is vital because of the threat to life that both benign and cancerous brain tumors present. Brain tumors are the second leading cause of cancer death for children and the third leading cause of cancer death in young adults ages 15–34. The greatest increase in brain tumors has been among people 75 years of age or older.

Only 37 percent of males and 52 percent of females survive five years following the diagnosis of a primary benign or malignant brain tumor. Each year, approximately 100,000 people in the United States are diagnosed with a primary or metastatic brain tumors. Nationwide, the incidence of brain tumors has increased by 25 percent since 1975 and the reasons for this increase are unknown.

For many types of tumors, the distinction between benign and malignant is significant. For tumors of the brain, this distinction is not as clear. A tumor, whether malignant or benign, is a collection of cells that grow as rapidly as malignant tumors, however based on location and size, even benign brain tumors can be life threatening.

Benign brain tumors account for almost 40 percent of all brain tumors. Not including these tumors in the cancer registry underestimates the incidence of brain tumors in the general population. All brain tumors, both cancerous and benign, are potentially life threatening.

What would the passage of the Benign Brain Tumor Cancer Registries Act mean for my constituent Lloyd Morgan? In his words it means: "that the doctors pronounced that would surely end my life within days or hours of discovery (they were afraid to move me by gurney to surgery because my brain was about to split in two) will now be counted. It also means that Jan McCormack who has watched her sister Carla deteriorate and is now on a death watch in hospice care from a "benign" brain tumor will be assured that her sister's tumors and ultimate death will also be counted. It means that Jeff Licht' situation where his "benign" brain tumor has come back 4 times after it was "completely" removed the first time will provide data on re-occurrence. And it means that for countless others who suffer devastating brain deficits and shortened lives because of "benign" brain tumors will now have their tumors and their untimely deaths count. And by counting and having information on these "benign" brain tumors we may finally find the information that has been missing to point the way toward causation and therefore prevention of these devastating illnesses."

I sincerely appreciate Mr. Morgan for bringing this significant public health oversight to my attention, and for his tireless efforts in support of the legislation we initiated and ultimately passed here on the floor of the House tonight.

The passage of this bill truly represents democracy in action.

CONGRATULATING THE COUNCIL OF KHALISTAN ON 15 YEARS OF WORKING FOR FREEDOM

HON. CYNTHIA A. MCKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 11, 2002

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, one of the things I have been proud of in my time in Congress is the opportunity I have had to help inform people about human rights and the struggle for freedom in the world. In that light, I would like to take this opportunity to note the fifteenth anniversary of the declaration of independence by the Sikh Nation of Khalistan which occurred on October 7, 1987, and the formation of the Council of Khalistan at that time.

The Council of Khalistan leads the Sikhs in their struggle to free themselves from repression, corruption, and tyranny imposed on them by India. It has always conducted that struggle in a peaceful, democratic, nonviolent way and has explicitly rejected militancy. I am proud to have been able to help the Council inform people about the Sikhs' struggle for freedom.

The President of the Council of Khalistan, Dr. Gurmit Singh Aulakh, has been tireless in fighting for freedom in the subcontinent. I am proud to know him. I wish everyone in Washington were so tireless, and I wish him success in his endeavors.

I would like to congratulate Dr. Aulakh and the Council of Khalistan on this occasion and I would like to wish them a successful convention this coming weekend in Philadelphia. Last year's convention was in my home town, Atlanta.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in congratulating the Council of Khalistan on this important milestone.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, October 15, 2002

The House met at 12:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PENCE).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 15, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable MIKE PENCE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3389. An act to reauthorize the National Sea Grant College Program Act, and for other purposes.

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12, rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 2 p.m.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p.m.) the House stood in recess until 2 p.m.

□ 1400

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PENCE) at 2 p.m.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer: Lord God of land and seas, as well as the heavens and the earth, You sustain us in troublesome times. You guide the destiny of this Nation and companion each of us in the journey of life.

The Columbus holiday reminds us, Lord, of the determination and great courage You gave the great navigator and explorer, Christopher Columbus. His four voyages to the new world continue to inspire hope.

Ward off any hesitation and remove all obstacles, O Lord, that prevent us from realizing our dreams and making great discoveries in our times.

Enable the Members of Congress and all Americans whom they represent in government to look beyond the familiar and the comfortable so to move into the future unafraid.

Grant all the humility to place their trust in You, O God, and ready themselves to embrace the surprises You have prepared for our discovery today, tomorrow and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. CULBERSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

DISPENSING WITH CALL OF PRIVATE CALENDAR ON TODAY

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

WHY NOT PEACE?

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, many of us had an opportunity to be in our districts over the last couple of days and to engage our constituents on what might have been the most momentous debate and decision that this Congress would make, at least in the early part of the 21st century, and that was debate we engaged in last week on the question of going to war with Iraq. All of us acknowledged that we came to this floor and expressed our viewpoints as we thought was best for the American people.

Over the weekend, of course, an enormous tragedy occurred in Indonesia. Americans are missing. Some lost their lives. But one of my constituents asked the question that I think is so very important that we raise again today: What about peace and the ability to be able to have that as a clarion call? Why is that so shameful that we as Americans, the most privileged and the most powerful, cannot raise the question of what about peace? What about discussions of peace and reconciliation?

Helen Thomas, one of the press persons at the White House, pressed that question to Ari Fleischer. Of course, there was not an answer. Yes, there is terrorism of which we have the world supporting our efforts against terrorism. But why can this Nation not, as it has done in the past, in the tradition of Jimmy Carter who won the Nobel Peace Prize, likewise begin a discussion of world peace, speaking to our allies and enemies as well, as my constituent asked the question, why not peace? Why is there shame in bringing that to the forefront of the American public so that even as we fight the issue of terrorism, we can stand aside from this question of war, allowing the U.N. inspectors to go in?

Why not peace? Why not a discussion?

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 11, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
The Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 2(h) of Rule II of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received the following message from the Secretary of the Senate on October 11, 2002 at 10:42 a.m.

That the Senate agreed to conference report H.R. 5011;

That the Senate passed without amendment H.J. Res. 113;

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

That the Senate passed without amendment H.J. Res. 114;

That the Senate passed without amendment H.J. Res. 122;

That the Senate passed without amendment H. Con. Res. 411.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely,

JEFF TRANDAH, Clerk of the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker signed the following enrolled joint resolution on Friday, October 11, 2002:

House Joint Resolution 122, making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken tomorrow.

PER-PUPIL EXPENDITURE REQUIREMENTS FOR HEAVILY IMPACTED LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5599) to apply guidelines for the determination of per-pupil expenditure requirements for heavily impacted local educational agencies, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5599

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PER-PUPIL EXPENDITURE REQUIREMENT FOR NEW HEAVILY IMPACTED LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8003(b)(2)(C)(i)(II)(bb) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7703(B)(2)(c)(i)(II)(bb)) is amended to read as follows:

“(bb) for a local educational agency that has a total student enrollment of less than 350 students, has a per-pupil expenditure that is less than the average per-pupil expenditure of generally comparable local educational agencies (determined according to the procedures described in section 222.74(b) of title 34, Code of Federal Regulations, as such section was in effect on January 1, 2000) in the State in which the local educational agency is located; and”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall be effective on September 30, 2001, and shall apply with respect to fiscal year 2002, and all subsequent fiscal years.

SEC. 2. ELIGIBILITY OF BONESTEEL-FAIRFAX SCHOOL DISTRICT IN BONESTEEL, SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Secretary of Education shall deem the local educational agency serving the Bonesteel-Fairfax school district, 26-5, in Bonesteel, South Dakota, to be eligible in fiscal year 2003 for a basic support payment for heavily impacted local educational agencies under section 8003(b)(2) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7703(b)(2)).

SEC. 3. APPLICATION OF CENTRAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, SEQUOYAH COUNTY, OKLAHOMA.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Education shall treat as timely filed an application filed by Central School District, Sequoyah County, Oklahoma, for payment for federally connected students for fiscal year 2003, pursuant to section 8003 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7703), and shall process such application for payment, if the Secretary has received such application not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON) and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5599.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to rise in support of H.R. 5599, which is a noncontroversial and very straightforward piece of legislation to make technical amendments to the Impact Aid program. I want to thank the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE) for sponsoring this legislation and for his diligence in bringing this bill before the House today.

This legislation makes three technical and, as I say, very noncontroversial corrections to the Education Code. First, the bill will correct a drafting error that occurred during the reauthorization of the Impact Aid program. This technical correction will allow the Department of Education to continue to use their current methodology in interpreting regulations, the process by which they determine which small school districts qualify for heavily impacted status.

Secondly, the bill will allow the Bonesteel-Fairfax School District in South Dakota to continue to remain eligible to receive Impact Aid funding for 1 year, to allow them to resolve a financing issue at the local level that would otherwise have a significant impact on their budget. Districts such as this one have a great deal of federally or nonprivately owned property. Therefore, this Impact Aid funding is essential for them to continue to operate at funding levels that they have already budgeted for. So this is a very, very important correction that is vitally necessary.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this legislation requires the Department of Education to accept as timely filed a late application from a school district in Oklahoma that will allow them to continue to receive their Impact Aid funding on time.

This legislation is very simple and straightforward, Mr. Speaker. It is a technical bill that contains technical corrections to the Education Code. We on the Committee on Education and the Workforce wanted to be certain that any errors that occurred during the drafting process were corrected and any school district that might suffer as a result of changes or potential misinterpretation of the Impact Aid formulas would be corrected by this legislation.

I again want to thank the gentleman from South Dakota for offering this legislation, and I want to urge my colleagues in the House to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5599. This legislation makes several technical fixes to the Impact Aid program.

First, the bill clarifies Department of Education policy that small school districts can use other local school districts to determine their eligibility for heavily impacted payments. This corrects a technical error in the 2000 reauthorization of Impact Aid.

Second, the bill maintains the eligibility of a school district in South Dakota for heavily impacted status for 1 year.

Third, H.R. 5599 permits Central School District in Oklahoma to file their fiscal year 2002 Impact Aid application despite having not filed this application before the deadline.

This legislation is similar to other bills this House has passed when technical fixes to the Impact Aid statute were needed in the past. I urge all Members to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I urge support for this important legislation by the Members of the House. It is noncontroversial and simply technical corrections.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Impact Aid Coalition Steering Committee, I want to thank Chairman BOEHNER for supporting this bill to make technical corrections to Impact Aid as it applies to two small local education agencies in South Dakota.

My state places a high emphasis on quality public schools, and South Dakotans know the value of a quality education. The federal Impact Aid Program plays a big role in improving schools on or near Federal lands in my state.

South Dakota is proud to be home of the Mt. Rushmore National Memorial Black Hills National Forest, Buffalo Gap and Fort Pierre National Grasslands, Badlands National Park, and nine Sioux Indian reservations. In fact, nearly 17 percent of South Dakota is Federal land—we rank 13th in the nation.

Thirty-four school districts throughout South Dakota rely heavily on Impact Aid funding to provide education to children on or near the Federal lands in my state. In all, this program in South Dakota impacts over 32,000 students.

While H.R. 5599 makes only small technical corrections, the impact of this bill on the Isabel and Bonesteel-Fairfax School Districts in South Dakota will be significant.

The Isabel School District is located in the Cheyenne River Sioux Reservation in north-central South Dakota. H.R. 5599 will ensure that the Impact Aid Program Office correctly follows the methodology for determining comparable per pupil expenditure levels for heavily impacted school districts as provided in current regulations. This will guarantee placement in the correct "heavily impacted" category where they belong.

The Bonesteel-Fairfax School District in south-central South Dakota will lose one-third of their total budget unless H.R. 5599 provides a waiver that allows them to correct a mistake made when calculating their local funding request.

These provisions within H.R. 5599 will have a real impact on hundreds of students in some of the poorest, most heavily impacted school districts in America.

Mr. Speaker, I want to again thank Chairman BOEHNER and his staff for their help to ensure that these students will receive adequate Impact Aid funding.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5599.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSIAN GULF WAR POW/MIA ACCOUNTABILITY ACT OF 2002

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 1339) to amend the Bring Them Home Alive Act of 2000 to provide an asylum program with regard to American Persian Gulf War POW/MIAs, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1339

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Persian Gulf War POW/MIA Accountability Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. AMERICAN PERSIAN GULF WAR POW/MIA ASYLUM PROGRAM.

(a) ASYLUM PROGRAM.—The Bring Them Home Alive Act of 2000 (Public Law 106-484; 114 Stat. 2195; 8 U.S.C. 1157 note) is amended by inserting after section 3 the following new section:

"SEC. 3A. AMERICAN PERSIAN GULF WAR POW/MIA ASYLUM PROGRAM.

"(a) ASYLUM FOR ELIGIBLE ALIENS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Attorney General shall grant refugee status in the United States to any alien described in subsection (b), upon the application of that alien.

"(b) ELIGIBILITY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), an alien described in this subsection is—

"(A) any alien who—

"(i) is a national of Iraq or a nation of the Greater Middle East Region (as determined by the Attorney General in consultation with the Secretary of State); and

"(ii) personally delivers into the custody of the United States Government a living American Persian Gulf War POW/MIA; and

"(B) any parent, spouse, or child of an alien described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—An alien described in this subsection does not include a terrorist, a persecutor, a person who has been convicted of a serious criminal offense, or a person who presents a danger to the security of the United States, as set forth in clauses (i) through (v) of section 208(b)(2)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1158(b)(2)(A)).

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) AMERICAN PERSIAN GULF WAR POW/MIA.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the term 'American Persian Gulf War POW/MIA' means an individual—

"(i) who is a member of a uniformed service (within the meaning of section 101(3) of title 37, United States Code) in a missing status (as defined in section 551(2) of such title and this subsection) as a result of the Persian Gulf War, or any successor conflict, operation, or action; or

"(ii) who is an employee (as defined in section 5561(2) of title 5, United States Code) in a missing status (as defined in section 5561(5) of such title) as a result of the Persian Gulf War, or any successor conflict, operation, or action.

"(B) EXCLUSION.—Such term does not include an individual with respect to whom it is officially determined under section 552(c) of title 37, United States Code, that such individual is officially absent from such individual's post of duty without authority.

"(2) MISSING STATUS.—The term 'missing status', with respect to the Persian Gulf War, or any successor conflict, operation, or action, means the status of an individual as a result of the Persian Gulf War, or such conflict, operation, or action, if immediately before that status began the individual—

"(A) was performing service in Kuwait, Iraq, or another nation of the Greater Middle East Region; or

"(B) was performing service in the Greater Middle East Region in direct support of military operations in Kuwait or Iraq.

"(3) PERSIAN GULF WAR.—The term 'Persian Gulf War' means the period beginning on August 2, 1990, and ending on the date thereafter prescribed by Presidential proclamation or by law."

(b) BROADCASTING INFORMATION.—Section 4(a)(2) of that Act is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (A);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) Iraq, Kuwait, or any other country of the Greater Middle East Region (as determined by the International Broadcasting Bureau in consultation with the Attorney General and the Secretary of State)."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on S. 1339, the Senate bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in the 106th Congress, the Bring Them Home Alive Act was enacted as Public Law 106-484. This law, sponsored by Senator BEN NIGHORSE CAMPBELL and the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY), offers refugee status to any national of Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, China, or any of the independent states of the former Soviet Union, who personally delivers into the custody of the United States Government a living American prisoner of war from the Vietnam War. It grants similar status to any national of North Korea, China, or states of the former Soviet Union who differs delivers a living American prisoner of war from the Korean War. Information regarding the act is broadcast by the International Broadcasting Bureau over the Voice of America and other broadcast services.

The Bring Them Home Alive Act signals our continuing dedication to all the Americans who served in the Vietnam and Korean wars. It shall be needed until all of our soldiers are accounted for. This bill amends the Bring Them Home Alive Act to broaden its coverage for the Persian Gulf War and any future hostilities in Iraq. There have been recent reports that Michael Speicher, a Navy pilot shot down over Iraq in 1991, may still be in Iraqi hands. We owe it to him and to all those who may be called to serve in the coming months to pass this bill.

The bill provides refugee status to a national of Iraq or a nation in the greater Middle East who personally delivers into the custody of the United States Government a living American prisoner of war from the Persian Gulf War or any successor conflict. To receive refugee status, the alien cannot be eligible for asylum on account of being a criminal, a terrorist, or a danger to the security of the United States. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the climate that we now face, calling upon our men and women in the United States military once again to defend our freedom and in the backdrop of the motion to instruct last week that recognized the importance of allowing our veterans to receive both their retirement benefits and other benefits simultaneously, there is no doubt that this Congress believes strongly in the fighting men and women of this Nation, and so I rise with enthusiastic support for this bill which will encourage the safe return of Navy pilot Captain Scott Speicher, the only person classified as a POW/MIA from the Gulf War of the early 1990's.

His status was changed from dead to MIA, and as well it was based upon last year's intelligence information that he survived his plane crash and is in prison in Baghdad, Iraq. Recently, he was reclassified as missing and captured. The amendment could also be used to encourage a return of POWs and MIAs if President Bush initiates a war against Iraq, as he currently plans to do.

A few years ago as a member of the Houston City Council, I was very proud to raise the first flag above Houston City Hall to recognize POWs and MIAs. This is an important component to recognizing but also dealing specifically with an individual now still lost. This bill will provide refugee status to the United States to any national of Iraq or certain other Middle Eastern countries if they safely return an American POW/MIA from the Gulf War into the custody of the U.S. Government. The bill amends the Bring Them Home Alive Act of 2000, which provides the same benefits to citizens of Asian and former Soviet countries who safely return POW/MIAs from the Vietnam and Korean wars. The Senate Judiciary Committee already made an important amendment to the original language offered by Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL to exempt alien terrorists, persecutors, and people who have been convicted of a serious offense and people who present a danger to the security of the United States from these benefits.

I know many Korean War veterans, including the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member of this particular committee; and I want to commend Senator CAMPBELL, a fellow veteran of the Korean War, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), fellow veteran and ranking member, for his initiative to ensure that our POW/MIAs come home.

Let me conclude by saying that we enthusiastically offer our support for this legislation initiative, and I ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I support this bill which will encourage the safe return of Navy pilot, Captain Scott Speicher, the only person classified as a POW/MIA from the Gulf War in the early 1990s. His status was changed from dead to MIA last year based on intelligence information that he survived his plane crash and is imprisoned in Baghdad, Iraq. Recently, he was reclassified as Missing/ Captured. The amendment could also be used to encourage the return of future POW/MIAs if President Bush initiates a war against Iraq, as he currently plans to do.

This bill will provide refugee status in the United States to any national of Iraq or certain other Middle Eastern countries if they safely return an American POW/MIA from the Gulf War into the custody of the U.S. government. The bill amends the "Bring Them Home Alive Act of 2000" which provided this same benefits to citizens of Asian and former Soviet countries who safely returned American POW/MIAs from the Vietnam and Korean wars.

The Senate Judiciary Committee already made an important amendment to the original language offered by Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL to exempt alien terrorists, persecutors, people who have been convicted of a serious criminal offense, and people who present a danger to the security of the United States from these benefits.

As a Korean War veteran, I commend my fellow veteran Senator CAMPBELL for this initiative to ensure that our POW/MIAs come home.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 1339.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2155

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to remove my name as a cosponsor of H.R. 2155.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SOBER BORDERS ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2155) to amend title 18, United States Code, to make it illegal to operate a motor vehicle with a drug or alcohol in the body of the driver at a land border port entry, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2155

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MAKING IT ILLEGAL TO OPERATE A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A DRUG OR ALCOHOL IN THE BODY OF THE DRIVER AT LAND BORDER PORTS OF ENTRY.

Section 13(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

- (1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and
- (2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) Whoever with a drug or alcohol in his or her body operates a motor vehicle at a land border port of entry in a manner that is punishable, because of the presence of the drug or alcohol, if committed within the jurisdiction of the State in which that land border port of entry is located (under the laws of that State in force at the time of the act) shall be guilty of a like offense and subject to a like punishment.

"(3) Any individual who operates a motor vehicle at a land border port of entry is deemed to have given consent to submit to a chemical or other test of the blood, breath, or urine of the driver by an officer or employee of the Immigration and Naturalization Service authorized under section 287(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1357(h)) for the purpose of determining the presence or concentration of a drug or alcohol in such blood, breath, or urine.

"(4) If an individual refuses to submit to such a test after being advised by the officer or employee that the refusal will result in notification under this paragraph, the Attorney General shall give notice of the refusal to—

"(A) the State or foreign state that issued the license permitting the individual to operate a motor vehicle; or

"(B) if the individual has no such license, the State or foreign state in which the individual is a resident.

"(5) The Attorney General shall give notice of a conviction of an individual under this section for operation of a motor vehicle at a land border port of entry with a drug or alcohol in the body of the individual, to—

"(A) the State or foreign state that issued the license permitting the individual to operate a motor vehicle; or

"(B) if the individual has no such license, the State or foreign state in which the individual is a resident.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'land border port of entry' means any land border port of entry (as defined in section 287(h)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1357(h)(3))) that was not reserved or acquired as provided in section 7 of this title."

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZING OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE TO CONDUCT TESTS FOR A DRUG OR ALCOHOL.

Section 287 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1357) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h)(1) If an officer or employee of the Service authorized under regulations prescribed by the Attorney General is inspecting a driver at a land border port of entry and has reasonable grounds to believe that, because of alcohol in the body of the driver, operation of a motor vehicle by the driver is an offense under section 13 of title 18, United States Code, the officer or employee may require the driver to submit to a test of the breath of the driver to determine the presence or concentration of the alcohol.

“(2) If an officer or employee of the Service authorized under regulations prescribed by the Attorney General arrests a driver under this section for operation of a motor vehicle in violation of section 13 of title 18, United States Code, because of a drug or alcohol in the body of the driver, the officer or employee may require the driver to submit to a chemical or other test to determine the presence or concentration of the drug or alcohol in the blood, breath, or urine of the driver.

“(3) For purposes of this subsection:

“(A) The term ‘driver’ means an individual who is operating a motor vehicle at a land border port of entry.

“(B) The term ‘land border port of entry’ means any immigration checkpoint operated by the Immigration and Naturalization Service at a land border between a State (as that term is used in section 13 of title 18, United States Code) and a foreign state.”

SEC. 3. REQUIRING NOTICE AT LAND BORDER PORTS OF ENTRY REGARDING OPERATION OF A MOTOR VEHICLE AND DRUGS AND ALCOHOL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Immigration and Nationality Act is amended by inserting after section 294 (8 U.S.C. 1363a) the following:

“NOTICE AT LAND BORDER PORTS OF ENTRY REGARDING OPERATION OF A MOTOR VEHICLE AND DRUGS AND ALCOHOL

“SEC. 295. At each point where motor vehicles regularly enter a land border port of entry (as defined in section 287(h)(3)), the Attorney General shall post a notice that operation of a motor vehicle with a drug or alcohol in the body of the driver at a land border port of entry is an offense under Federal law.”

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The first section of the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended in the table of contents by inserting after the item relating to section 294 the following:

“Sec. 295. Notice at land border ports of entry regarding operation of a motor vehicle and drugs and alcohol.”

SEC. 4. IMPOUNDMENT OF VEHICLE FOR REFUSAL TO SUBMIT TO TEST FOR DRUG OR ALCOHOL.

Not more than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall issue regulations authorizing an officer or employee of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to impound a vehicle operated at a land border port of entry, if—

(1) the individual who operates the vehicle refuses to submit to a chemical or other test under section 13(a)(3) of title 18, United States Code; and

(2) the impoundment is not inconsistent with the laws of the State in which the port of entry is located.

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 2155, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2155 helps prevent drunk driving at and around our borders. The bill authorizes INS inspectors at the border to take drunk or drugged drivers into custody based on their impaired state. Currently, border inspectors do not have the authority to do so other than as private citizens making arrests. Typically, inspectors now have to alert State or local law enforcement that an impaired driver is headed their way, wave impaired drivers through the port of entry, and hope that State or local law enforcement will pick them up before the driver does any harm.

This bill makes it a Federal crime for a person to operate a motor vehicle at a land border patrol entry in an impaired manner because of the presence of drugs or alcohol. The bill deems any such driver to have given consent to submit to a chemical test by the INS to determine the presence or concentration of alcohol or drug in the driver's body. The bill authorizes INS inspectors at land border ports of entry to perform chemical tests upon drivers if the INS has reasonable grounds to believe that a driver is dangerous because of a drug or alcohol in the driver's body.

If the individual refuses to submit to such a test, the bill requires the Attorney General to notify the driver's State or foreign state of the driver's refusal to submit to the test. The Attorney General is also required to notify the driver's government of a conviction of the driver for impaired driving. The bill requires the Attorney General to issue regulations authorizing INS officers and employees to impound a vehicle if the driver refuses to submit to a chemical or other test.

Finally, the Attorney General is required to post a notice that operation of a motor vehicle with drugs or alcohol in the driver's body at a land border port of entry is a Federal offense. This bill will help prevent drunk driving and impaired driving tragedies in border areas, and I urge a “yes” vote on it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the intentions of this legislation certainly have merit, but I rise in opposition to the measure on the floor today, H.R. 2155, the Sober Borders Act.

This bill authorizes officers and employees of the INS to conduct tests for drug or alcohol consumption when they have reasonable grounds to believe that a driver is operating a motor vehicle while under the influence. Second, to ensure travelers are fully aware of this policy, the bill further requires the INS to post notices at each land border port of entry, informing motorists that operating a vehicle while under the influence is an offense under Federal law.

The major problem with this proposal is a matter of policy and procedure. At the time when their workload is heavy and the lines and waits for border traffic are already causing huge burdens to border economies, this legislation will impose new duties unrelated to terrorism on immigration inspectors at the border. Essentially, H.R. 2155 is enlisting INS officers to enforce State law. Furthermore, 18 U.S.C. section 13, the Assimilative Crimes Act, currently incorporates State criminal law into Federal law for issues for which there is no applicable Federal criminal law in places in Federal jurisdiction such as military bases and, no doubt, ports of entry. So a criminal offense such as a DUI under State law is already also a Federal criminal offense in a Federal area, areas not in State jurisdiction. This law would extend that by incorporating noncriminal sanctions, examples, suspension of license or failure to agree to a drug test, into Federal law. It also seems a questionable use of the admittedly broad authority the INS has at the border to conduct searches to expand this to blood, breath, or urine testing.

Finally, during the subcommittee markup and the full committee markup of this legislation, after being assured that the majority would work with the minority on concerns with the legislation, an amendment was offered that would require the General Accounting Office to conduct an annual study concerning the exercise of the new authorities by officers and employees of the INS. It is well taken by this Congress, Mr. Speaker, that the GAO is an independent body. Republicans and Democrats alike have been known to ask and use the GAO for studies and to include such studies as language in legislation. This is not, if the Members will, a killer of the bill. The study would assemble and analyze the numbers of times the officers exercise this authority; the race, gender, and national origin of the driver involved; and the results of the exercise of this new authority.

Mr. Speaker, the border is used not only by noncitizens, but it is used by American citizens and we have stood on this floor of the House just last week to talk but our freedoms and our values and the justice and equality that we render. Then why not, why not, make sure that any legislative initiative that we pass has the ability to serve all Americans fairly, and those who may be unfairly stopped should be addressed as well while we also are committed to protecting the lives of our frontline officers at the border. A GAO study, simple, precise, and efficient, could have made this amendment of this legislation more effective.

The amendment further directed the General Accounting Office to submit a report to Congress no later than March 31 of each year. It was important to include this amendment because the legislation raises the potential for abuse of authority to stop and detain individuals at the border. The amendment would have ensured that the new authorities granted the officers and employees of the INS to test for the use of alcohol and drugs by a driver at the border is carried out in an efficient, fair, and equitable manner without targeting any group of people specifically pertaining to prevent racial profiling. It could have been an instructive tool.

Mr. Speaker, I have been to the borders of our country; and I have seen the very fine workers who are there. They want to do the right thing, and they want to do it well and efficiently. This information could have given them guidance on how to be effective and, of course, successful in doing the job.

□ 1430

Racial profiling occurs when the police target someone for investigation on the basis of that person's race, national origin, or ethnicity. Examples of profiling are the use of race to determine which drivers are stopped for minor traffic violations, often referred to "driving while black and brown," and the use of race to determine which motorists or pedestrians are searched for contraband.

Racial profiling is still prevalent in America; and as I indicated, the borders are used by immigrants and citizens alike. Why could we not consider this as reasonable on behalf of the citizens of this country? In large cities across the country, African Americans and Hispanics and other people of color still move about with the fear that at any time they can be stopped and detained simply because they fit a broad profile characterized by little more than the color of a person's skin. Today, skin color makes one a suspect in America. It makes one more likely to be stopped, more likely to be searched, more likely to be arrested and imprisoned.

In a recent General Accounting Office study of March 2000, it found that persons of particular races and genders were generally more likely than others to be subjected to more intrusive searches. For example, black women were nine times more likely to be searched than white women. Based on x-ray searches, however, the black women were less than half as likely to be caught carrying contraband than white women.

During the debate on H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act, authorizing appropriations for fiscal year 2002, detailed the story of Yvette Bradley, a 33-year-old advertising executive and her sister who arrived at Newark Airport from a vacation in Jamaica, and she is an African American woman, and a United States citizen to my knowledge. Upon encountering Customs agent, Ms. Bradley recalled that she, along with most of the other women on the flight, were singled out for searches and interrogation where she experienced one of the most humiliating moments of her life. Ms. Bradley was searched throughout her body, including her private parts. Mr. Speaker, no drugs or contraband were found.

I happen to be a strong supporter of our INS, Customs, and other border security agents and the responsibilities that they have. I happen to be a strong supporter of adhering to the laws of this Nation. But I also believe that civil justice and civil liberties are important for those noncitizens and citizens alike. We have the responsibility of adhering to the values and the laws of this land.

This bill, however, adds substantial provisions so that they already have all they need to ensure the safety of this Nation. To take away, to give a pass or a bye on the Bill of Rights and the Constitution, the understanding of unreasonable search and seizures is unfair.

This bill, without protection against racial profiling, at least a study, is unfair and is not a solution.

Organizations like the ACLU have conducted reports that one of the ACLU's highest priority issues is the fight against the outrageous practice of racial profiling. In its report "Driving While Black, Racial Profiling on Our Nation's Highways," the ACLU documents the practice of substituting skin color for evidence as grounds for suspicion by law enforcement officials. Tens of thousands of innocent motorists on highways across the country are victims of racial profiling. It could be happening at our borders as well.

These discriminatory stops have reached epidemic proportions in some recent years, fueled by the war on drugs and potentially fueled by bills like this.

We want to make sure that our good police officers have the skills and tools to do the job. A study would provide them that instruction.

We put an end to the practice of racial profiling with my amendment. My amendment, most importantly, through the collection of data, would, in fact, assist the agency in being instructive and constructive. Is that not why we are here, Mr. Speaker, to be constructive and instructive? Unfortunately, after vigorous debate, we were not able to include such an amendment. I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker; and for these reasons, among many others, I rise to oppose this legislation.

I rise in opposition to the measure on the floor today H.R. 2155, the Sober Borders Act. The amendment would have ensured that the new authorities granted the officers and employees of the INS to test for the use of alcohol and drugs by a driver at the border is carried out in a efficient, fair, and equitable manner without targeting any group of people—specifically to prevent racial profiling.

"Racial profiling" occurs when the police target someone for investigation on the basis of that person's race, national origin, or ethnicity. Examples of profiling are the use of race to determine which drivers to stop for minor traffic violations ("often referred to driving while black") and the use of race to determine which motorists or pedestrians to search for contraband.

Tens of thousands of innocent motorists on highways across the country are victims of racial profiling. And these discriminatory police stops have reached epidemic proportions in recent years—fueled by the "Wars on Drugs" and potentially fueled by bills like this, bad police officers have been given a pretext to target people who they think fit a profile. We must put an end to the practice of racial profiling. My Amendment, most importantly, through the collection of data, the amendment by its very nature would curb any tendency toward this abuse and help prevent this legislation from being used as a tool for racial profiling.

Unfortunately, after a vigorous debate during the markup, however, the majority refused to accept the amendment arguing that the measure would place an extreme burden on the officers carrying out the provisions of the amendment. My attempts to have something in the bill to address this problem have been ignored.

While I firmly believe something must be done to lower the rate of alcohol-related car accidents that take place on our nation's highways and in close proximity to our nation's borders there are concerns raised by the bill. It is unfortunate, because had minimal efforts to make the bill acceptable to the Democrats, as the majority had committed to doing during the Committee process, this bill could have passed without opposition.

Mr. Speaker, in its current form, I must urge my colleagues to oppose H.R. 2155.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the Bradley case that the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) cited is not relevant to this bill. She talked about a search of a woman who arrived at the Newark Airport. This bill only applies to land border crossings, not ports of entry that are not land border crossings. So the argument that the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) relies on is irrelevant to dealing with the issue of this bill.

The gentlewoman from Texas complains about the fact that people might be unduly targeted for stops. Everybody who crosses the border between the United States and Mexico and Canada has to be stopped. Mr. Speaker, 100 percent of the people do, regardless of what their race is or their national origin. I do not understand what the gentlewoman's complaints are because she should know that one must stop for inspection and the law requires it.

Now, finally, during the markup of the Committee on the Judiciary, as chairman, I gave the gentlewoman from Texas my commitment to ask for a GAO study once this bill is signed into law. The gentlewoman from Texas should know that any Member of the House can ask for a GAO study. It does not have to be an amendment adopted by the committee; it does not have to be legislation on the floor of the House. She can ask for one, I can ask for one, and anyone of the other 433 Members of the House of Representatives can ask for one. So nobody is preventing a GAO study from being done should this bill be passed by both Houses and signed into law by the President.

The issue is very simple, and that is that if somebody comes to a land border crossing at the United States who is drunk or who is under the influence of drugs and is not capable of safely operating a motor vehicle, should the immigration inspector who stops that individual be allowed to detain them and to administer a chemical test. We cannot do that now, but this bill does give the immigration inspectors the authority to do that. And if this bill fails and this hole in the law is not plugged, then the drunk driver or the impaired driver will go on his or her merry way at a border crossing which is, of necessity, crowded by people who are stopping and submitting to inspection as required by Federal law and vulnerable to injury or death simply because the INS inspector had to call up the local police and it is only when the local police arrive on the scene can there be a stop.

This is a good bill. The arguments of the gentlewoman from Texas are complete red herrings. It should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I want to thank and pay tribute to the chairman for bringing this bill to the floor and for working it through the committee in such a deliberative fashion. We debated this at the subcommittee level, at the committee level; and we had a great debate on it. Many Members shared their support for the bill.

As mentioned, this is simply closing a glaring loophole in the law that allows someone in a border port of entry, at a land port of entry to drive totally intoxicated, and INS officers are powerless to stop them, unless they want to do it as a citizen for which they risk liability that they are unwilling to assume. We asked INS officers what happens when someone who is visibly drunk crosses a border. They said, we let them go on a wing and a prayer and just hope that somebody, hope that a law enforcement officer at the municipal or State level is able to stop them.

Well, that has not been good enough. In California, in the past 2 years, we have had two law enforcement officers killed, killed when drunk drivers drove up, under-age drivers who drove to Mexico with the express purpose of drinking because they can, because of lax enforcement, drink underage, drive across the border knowing full well that they will not be stopped by the person who sees them right inside the window, who stops them, who cannot stop them when they are drunk, who will just let them go on through. They killed two California highway patrol officers. Several fatal car crashes in my home State of Arizona are blamed on drunk drivers going to Mexico to drink, coming back across the border, knowing that they cannot be stopped. This is wrong.

This is what this law is about. We have to change that. We have to close this glaring loophole. I do not know about my colleagues, but I do not want to stand and tell the widow or the widower of the next highway patrol officer or the next person who is killed on the border that we could have had this bill passed, we could have done it were it not for extraneous language that is purely secondary to the bill.

As the chairman mentioned, we have offered and are more than willing to have a letter to the GAO. This need not be in statute as they are asking. We can do the same by a letter to the GAO. But let us get this bill passed. We need it. There is a glaring loophole now. Lives are being lost on the border in my State and others. I would ask for support of this bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I gives me great pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary, who knows a lot about racial profiling inasmuch as he has authored legislation on that issue.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas for her leadership as ranking member of the subcommittee, and I want to thank the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) for his leadership as chairman of the subcommittee.

The question that the gentleman from Arizona has raised is a very disturbing one: two police officers from his State killed in connection with activity involving people driving under the influence. And that should be disturbing to everybody in Arizona as well as everybody in this Congress. Then why, I say to the gentleman from Arizona, would he jeopardize the passage of this bill over, and I will accept his description of it as an irrelevant addition to it, when the gentleman knows full well that one-third of the Members of the Congress can turn back a bill that is on suspension? This means that the gentleman is rolling the dice big time, I say to my friend. I do not want to take that chance. If the gentleman does, then we will have a vote shortly that will determine which one of us was more correct.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I too fear that this bill will be imperiled, but I fear it if we attach such language. That is why we had a debate in the committee. The chairman is correct. That is where we debate bills like this. We had the debate in committee, we put that amendment up to a vote and it failed. Were we to accept the unanimous consent request or to amend this on the floor, we would be going and stepping over the committee. That is not the process. That is the relevant process we have to follow.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman. I appreciate that procedural explanation. If the gentleman is going to risk police officers' lives in the gentleman's State based on a vote in the committee, then that, my friend, is a choice that the gentleman has who, as a Member, has as much right to cast that opinion as anybody else. I wish the gentleman good luck, frankly, because police officers' lives are at stake.

Mr. Speaker, I have just approached the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), my good friend, who has informed me that unfortunately we are not able to remove this bill from the suspension calendar to have this amendment repaired because this is the last suspension day for bills under suspension that we will have in this Congress. And if he is right, that puts us in a more difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, the reason that we are in this position is that the subcommittee ranking chairperson had assumed that there had been an agreement worked out on this amendment, and it was not until we came to the full committee markup that we found that there was a serious difference still outstanding.

All I stand here in the well of the House today to do is to work in every way that I can with the chairman of my committee and the chairman of the subcommittee to see that we can repair this so that we can get a bill out to protect the lives of all of our law enforcement people at the border. This is a bill that we support, a bill we support, a bill that we want to get to the Senate and enacted into law as quickly as possible.

We think that it is a lifesaving measure. But because of this disagreement over the importance of a study on racial profiling, we are not able to do that.

The Members of this House, before they vote on this measure tomorrow, should be fully aware of the fact that the reason we put the GAO in the amendment was that the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), is the one that asked that it be included. The original provision of the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) referred this to the Attorney General's office, and they objected.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Members, what are we doing here? Where we are now, I say to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), is that the American Civil Liberties Union, and this is not a funny matter, I say to the gentleman from Arizona. Please listen to me.

The American Civil Liberties Union announced this morning that they are in opposition to the bill in its present form. That is not a laughing matter. The Leadership Council on Civil Rights has announced their opposition to the bill. This is not a laughing matter. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, with a-half-a million members, has announced that until this bill is repaired they are against the bill. It is not a laughing matter.

So if it does not matter to the Members, okay. If it is funny, okay. If they have the votes, okay. But I think they are doing a grave disservice to an excellent piece of legislation that they and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) have crafted.

If they choose to roll the dice on it in the way they apparently have, then I will have to live by that decision, because I am not in the House leadership, and I cannot assure the Members that if the bill is pulled off the floor, there will be another Suspension Calendar.

The reason I will not yield is because the chairman controls all the time on the gentleman's side.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), who is not a chairman.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the gentleman from Michigan's point about this not being a laughing matter, certainly I do not make a laughing matter out of it. The only humor I found is in being elevated to the status of chairman of the subcommittee, which I am not. The chairman just informed me if I am, it has been revoked. That is the only part that I find humorous. This is not a laughing matter at all.

When the ranking minority member mentions that in the subcommittee we had discussions about where the authority ought to rest for a study, we simply pointed out that the amendment, as drafted, mentioned the INS Commissioner when, under our own language out of the committee, that position will no longer exist. So that would not be the proper place for the study.

What we suggested was that that responsibility would lie with the GAO.

As the chairman mentioned, we have offered again and again and again, at the gentleman's suggestion, I say to the ranking minority member, that we draft a letter to the GAO and to ask them to conduct such a study, to do that. I stand ready to do that, and I hope that we can.

This is an important issue. We simply need not have it in statute because that would imperil the bill. We cannot, for every law enforcement action taken in this House or in this body, attach racial profiling language. We simply cannot. That would imperil too much good legislation going forward.

It is not a laughing matter at all; this is serious. People are dying in the border towns every day, and a lot of it is linked to drunken drivers coming across the borders. This is a serious matter, we ought to take it that way, and move this bill forward without secondary amendments.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Members are reminded that they should direct their comments to the Chair, and avoid dialogue in the second person.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter. It really saddens me that we have come to this.

I notice that there was some discussion that no one seems to understand racial profiling. There is a bill that we wish had moved through this House with some 95 or more cosponsors that if we could have gotten a hearing on it in the Committee on the Judiciary, maybe we could have educated our colleagues about this issue.

The fact is that we have to live the way we live, many of us who come from different walks of life, to understand racial profiling. One has to live in our skin as an American and be able to acknowledge this is the best country we could ever live in, but every day we work to improve that country. So I think it is important for those who do not live as many of us do to recognize that, as legislators, we try to work together.

In this instance, I think it is important to note that the INS border inspectors, by State law that is already codified, in complete disagreement with my colleagues, have the authority to stop those whom they might feel are impaired. This study only allows instruction, giving them the ability to do their job better, and to be able to recognize that all of us have the right to be treated fairly, no matter who we are, and that this Nation is founded on those who escaped persecution so they could be treated fairly.

I am sorry that my colleagues believe this to be frivolous and a laughing matter, and refuse to exercise the comity of this House and work with those of us who are sincere in promoting legislation that works for everyone. It is a great disappointment to me. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is hurting, because I have constituents who have felt the abuse of this process.

So I would offer to say that a letter does not equate to legislation. Mr. Speaker, I would simply say, we have been fighting to pass racial profiling legislation in this House. Of course, as a minority, we have not been successful.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS). It really goes to the legislation that he has had filed in this House for a period of time.

I recall traveling with the gentleman throughout the Nation on a series of racial profiling hearings. I think the persons appearing came from all walks of life, if I am correct; and I know that it was a searing issue to the extent that we had sponsors and supporters of legislation in the Senate, the other body, because it was so clear that this Nation needed to address this question.

I would ask the gentleman simply to expand on that point. There seems to be some question of the seriousness and the need for having at least an instructive amendment that allows us to be instructed by a study that will give guidance to having us do our jobs better.

I know the gentleman has spent a lot of time on this issue, so I would ask him to speak on this point, on this legislation that he filed and the need for its hearing; but more importantly, the work that he did in coming to the point of drafting this legislation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Border Security, and Claims of the Committee on the Judiciary, for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, racial profiling cannot be considered irrelevant anywhere in the country, but particularly in a circumstance where we are giving additional powers to law enforcement agents on the border. For us not to include a study is sending a very dangerous signal to them, especially after this debate.

I frankly do not see how a measure like this, after this kind of discussion, could possibly clear the House of Representatives in consideration of the times and the problems with law enforcement and the minority community that plague the criminal justice system and law enforcement all over the country. I plead with my colleagues to please withdraw this measure until we can work out some rapprochement.

I can say that the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) has been totally willing to cooperate, and I think, up until the day of the hearing, I would have said the same thing about the subcommittee chairman; or if he is not the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE). He has been totally cooperative, as well.

I know that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Chairman SENSENBRENNER) and I have been working together in a very fine spirit to try to resolve this, and maybe the leadership of the House would schedule another session for suspensions, which would give us the time to at least bring this one back to the floor.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his comments.

I would just simply close by saying that there is a throng of legislation passed on racial profiling. What we tried to do here is work in a bipartisan manner to enhance our Border Patrol agents, and, as well, protect the liberties of all of our people.

I would simply ask that my colleagues vote against this legislation, for it stands for nothing as it relates to being able to protect our Border Patrol agents and enhance their lives in contrast to diminishing the lives of others. I ask for a no vote on this legislation.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is regrettable that my two colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) have decided to make this very meritorious bill into a debate on racial profiling.

I have offered, as has the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), to send a letter to the Comptroller General asking for the precise study that the gentleman from Michigan and the gentlewoman from Texas have asked for.

As I said previously, every Member of Congress can get GAO studies on any relevant issue that they desire. We do not need to clutter up the statute books by requiring the Comptroller General to do a study on this subject or on any other subject. It merely requires sending a letter signed by a Member of Congress.

Now, if the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), who represents a border community, and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), who represents a district which is pretty close to the other border, if their idea becomes law, I am afraid that every immigration inspector who has to stop everybody who is legally crossing the border and ask them questions, they are going to have to compile this data for the GAO study, and the lines behind the border are going to get longer and longer, and people are going to be more frustrated, whether they are coming across the border to go to school, which we are going to talk about in a few minutes, or to further commerce, or just to visit the United States of America as a tourist, which is something that I think we encourage, as well, because we like foreigners spending their money here.

I am going to work with the gentleman from Michigan and the gentlewoman from Texas. But that is no reason, just because the issue of racial profiling is brought up, and a process where everybody has to be stopped and detained and questioned as they cross the border, that this very meritorious bill should be voted down.

Anybody in law enforcement will tell us that the quicker a drunk driver or a driver whose ability is impaired by drugs is stopped, the fewer people are placed at risk; so why not stop them on the border, and if they are drunk or impaired, do the appropriate chemical tests?

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good idea. It might save lives. I commend the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) for keeping this a clean bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2155, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

BORDER COMMUTER STUDENT ACT OF 2002

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4967) to establish new nonimmigrant classes for border commuter students.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4967

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Border Commuter Student Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF BORDER COMMUTER NONIMMIGRANT CLASS.

(a) CLASS FOR ACADEMIC OR LANGUAGE STUDIES.—Section 101(a)(15)(F) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(F)) is amended by striking "and (ii)" and all that follows through the end of subparagraph (F) and inserting the following: "(i) the alien spouse and minor children of any alien described in clause (i) if accompanying or following to join such an alien, and (iii) an alien who is a national of Canada or Mexico, who maintains actual residence and place of abode in the country of nationality, who is described in clause (i) except that the alien's qualifications for and actual course of study may be full or part-time, and who commutes to the United States institution or place of study from Canada or Mexico;".

(b) CLASS FOR VOCATIONAL OR NONACADEMIC STUDIES.—Section 101(a)(15)(M) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(M)) is amended by striking "and (ii)" and all that follows through the end of subparagraph (M) and inserting the following: "(i) the alien spouse and minor children of any alien described in clause (i) if accompanying or following to join such an alien, and (iii) an alien who is a national of Canada or Mexico, who maintains actual residence and place of abode in the country of nationality, who is described in clause (i) except that the alien's course of study may be full or part-time, and who commutes to the United States institution or place of study from Canada or Mexico;".

(c) LIMITATION.—Section 214(m) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1184(m); as redesignated by section 107(e)(2)(A) of P.L. 106-386) is amended by striking "section 101(a)(15)(F)(i)" both places it appears and inserting "clause (i) or (iii) of section 101(a)(15)(F)".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4967, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Immigration and Nationality Act permits foreign students to study in the United States on nonimmigrant student visas. Aliens must be full-time students to be eligible for F visas, which is academic or language studies, or M visas, which are vocational or non-academic studies, nonimmigrant student visas. However, some INS districts have paroled commuter students from Canada and Mexico into the United States as visitors to bypass this statutory requirement because no visa category exists for part-time commuter students.

Since September 11, 2001, the INS has issued memoranda regarding its intent to end this practice of accommodating part-time commuter students but permits its continuance through the end of this year for students already enrolled in border schools. On August 27, 2002, the INS issued an interim rule to expand the F and M student visa categories to permit Mexican and Canadian commuter students to obtain student visas.

However, such a rule is open to differing interpretations across administrations. By passing H.R. 4967, this bill would make Congress' intent clearer that the Canadian and Mexican students should be able to obtain student visas and attend U.S. schools along our borders.

The bill amends the F and M student categories of the Immigration and Nationality Act to expand student visa authorization only for nationals of Canada or Mexico who maintain actual residence and place of abode in the country of nationality, whose course of study may either be full- or part-time, and who commute to the U.S. institution or place of study from Canada or Mexico. These part-time students will be tracked in the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System, or SEVIS; and I would point out that if this bill is not passed, and they continue to be paroled in as visitors, they will not be tracked under SEVIS because they do not have student visas.

In practice, the INS has been allowing the students in for years but without proper authority to do so. This bill gives the INS that proper authority, and I urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in support of making part-time commuter students who are nationals of either Canada or Mexico and attend school in the United States eligible for special student visas. I especially congratulate the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE) for his untiring efforts to move this legislation forward.

Thousands of Canadian and Mexican nationals commute to attend schools part-time in the United States. According to the Institute of International Education, 25,769 Canadian students and 10,679 Mexican students are enrolled at U.S. colleges on a full-time basis. There are thousands of additional students that are part-time students.

Texas has a significant portion of students who commute to schools in Texas. For years now, border points like El Paso and Laredo have made exceptions for part-time Mexican students who enter on a daily visitor and travel visa. Schools in Texas, such as Texas A&M International, will benefit from this legislation. Texas A&M International University has approximately 50 to 60 students that benefit from this legislation. At the University of Texas Pan-American in Edinburg, Texas, 14 of the 425 international students are part-time.

According to university officials at both institutions, many more students would attend if they could be able to cross the border easily. Unfortunately, current law does not establish an appropriate visa for those part-time commuter students who, in fact, are coming to learn and then returning home to contribute to their communities.

Under the Immigration and Naturalization Act, aliens who reside in a foreign country and are pursuing a full course of study from a recognized vocational institution or an established college, university or other academic institution in the United States are eligible for student visas. For the purpose of granting student visas, the INS defines "full course of study" as 12 credits or more. So, therefore, part-time commuter students, those who might only be taking a class or two, are not currently eligible for student visas.

However, some INS district offices have permitted part-time commuter students to enter the United States as visitors to pursue their studies. I am encouraged by the INS' recent reversal of a May 2002 decision to eliminate this practice and enforce the full-time 12-hour credit requirement.

We do know that we live in different times since the horrific acts of 9-11. We do know our responsibilities for border security; and of course, as I have mentioned earlier, my commitment to such in cosponsorship of several bills, recognizing the balance, a balance in the previous bill to add a study on racial profiling, this bill is a balance. It recognizes that these students are coming to learn, to contribute, and to make a difference not only in their lives but in their communities.

It also recognizes the economic aspect of it, and these students will be contributing to the economy of the regions of which they participate in those academic institutions.

Fortunately, the agency recently postponed enforcement of the policy until August 15, 2002, while administrative and legislative remedies are considered. I consider that a balanced perspective on the part of the INS.

The legislation we are introducing today appropriately addresses the problem facing part-time commuter students without hoping for a new avenue for illegal immigration. Of course, this bill is on the floor of the House today and would amend 18 U.S.C. 1101 to make certain part-time commuter students eligible for student visas. The bill would allow nationals of Canada or Mexico who both maintain a residence and a place of abode in their country of nationality and who commute to school to enroll part-time in schools in the United States, and part-time commuter student visas are restricted to nationals of Canada or Mexico. The bill would not make political asylees, residents or others, who are nationals of third countries, who simply live in Canada or Mexico eligible for the visas; and I think that is an important point to make.

Again, I believe that we have an enormous responsibility to ensure the security of our communities, but I think this is a balanced and forthright legislative initiative to help all.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act, passed by the Senate in April and signed into law by the President on May 14, 2002, leads the way for full implementation of participation in services mandatory by January 30, 2003. However, SEVIS only tracks non-immigrant students and exchange visitors. Aliens admitted with visitor visas are not tracked through the system. This bill for the first time will ensure that part-time commuter students from Canada and Mexico are also tracked through the student tracking process, again in response to the new concerns we have after September 11.

I ask my colleagues to support this balanced initiative and support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in support of making part-time commuter students who are nationals of either Canada or Mexico and attend school in the United States eligible for special student visas. I especially congratulate Mr. KOLBE for moving this legislation forward.

Thousands of Canadian and Mexican nationals commute to attend schools part time in the United States. Part-time commuter students, those who might be only taking a class or two, are not currently eligible for student visas.

However, some INS district offices have permitted part-time commuter students to enter the United States as visitors to pursue their studies. I am encouraged by the INS recent reversal of a May 2002 decision to eliminate this practice and enforce the full-time, 12-credit hour requirement.

Fortunately, the agency recently postponed enforcement of the policy until August 15, 2002, while administrative and legislative remedies are considered.

The legislation we are introducing today appropriately addresses the problem facing part-time commuter students without opening new avenues for illegal immigration. This bill would amend 18 U.S.C. 1101 to make certain part-time commuter students eligible for student visas. The bill would allow nationals of Canada or Mexico who both maintain a residence and a place of abode in their country or nationality and who commute to school to enroll part-time in schools in the United States. Part-time commuter student visas are restricted to nationals of Canada or Mexico. The bill would not make political asylees, residents, or others who are nationals of third countries but simply live in Canada or Mexico eligible for the visas.

This legislation is also consistent with the current INS interim rule in that it ensures that part-time commuter students are tracked through the Student Exchange Visitor Information System. As we discussed in our Subcommittee hearing a few weeks ago on SEVIS, this system was set up to ensure that the Federal Government is aware of changes in a foreign student's status that could affect their eligibility to remain in the United States. The Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act, passed by the Senate in April and signed into law by the President on May 14, 2002, leads the way for full implementation of SEVIS. Participation in SEVIS is mandatory by January 30, 2003; however, SEVIS only tracks nonimmigrant students and exchange visitors. Aliens admitted with visitor visas are not tracked through the system. This bill will, for the first time, ensure that part-time commuter students from Canada and Mexico are tracked through SEVIS.

While I acknowledge new security concerns in the aftermath of September 11, I feel that we can meet those concerns without prohibiting all part-time commuter students from attending classes at schools in the United States. This legislation represents a bipartisan compromise that will allow us to meet these needs in a reasonable, thoughtful manner. This legislation represents the best type of legislation that results when members on opposing sides can put aside partisan differences and work for viable solutions. I am pleased to support this measure and I will work to see its passage in the 107th Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE), the principal author of this bill.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time, and I want to thank the chairman of the full committee and the ranking member, the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims, for their courtesies shown to me and my staff in the preparation of this bill and the consideration of it in the committee.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4967 will end years of frustration for colleges and universities, frustration made worse by the terrorist attacks of September 11.

The Border Commuter Student Act is simple in its purpose. It is to allow U.S. border colleges to teach Mexican and Canadian citizens who live near the border. It creates a new non-immigrant classification for Mexicans and Canadians who want to commute each day to U.S. college or school. The study can be full-time or part-time.

The people of Mexico and Canada who live and work in their home country but who want to attend a night class, such as business English for Mexicans, in the United States should be allowed to do this. Every day citizens of Mexico and Canada cross back and forth to shop, to do business, to visit relatives. They should also be able to further their education. On that, I think most of us agree.

Current law provides for two student nonimmigration categories. The F1 category is for academic studies and the M1 category is for nonacademic or vocational studies. These categories by law require that a student be enrolled full-time; but here is the loophole, or I should say the gaping hole, for commuting students.

A person can enter the United States only to study full-time; and if they enter for business or for pleasure, the law explicitly states that they cannot be enrolled in a study.

For decades, it has been the policy of the INS that these border commuter students were required to attend class full-time; however, it was loosely enforced prior to September 11, 2001. The INS recently pushed this law to its limit by allowing border commuter students to enter the United States to study on a reduced course load as long as they are a "qualified full-time student."

I commend the INS for expanding the number of students that can enter the U.S. as full-time students to include these quasi-full-time students. Although the INS did what they could under the law that limits students entering the country to full-time status, this simply is not enough.

We need to clarify the law so that there is no misunderstanding, no room for misinterpretation, and no room for further changes by future administrations to this policy. We need to give these colleges and students the confidence that a future INS commissioner is not going to change policy mid-stream in someone's studies.

The Border Commuter Student Act creates a new classification for Mexicans and Canadians to enter the United States. In other words, it provides additional options for the citizens of our neighboring countries to enter the U.S. It does not allow foreign children to attend public elementary or high schools; and it ensures national security by continuing the requirement that all foreign students be entered into the student tracking system; and that, Mr. Speaker, is very important.

It is in the interest of the United States to allow our neighbors to take courses in English and history and mathematics and philosophy or business or nursing or any other kind of vocation or profession at our Nation's colleges and schools along the border. In addition, it is in the interest of Mexico and Canada to allow their citizens access to an expanded area of educational opportunities.

I am very proud today that the House of Representatives is doing its part to help these schools and these students. I believe our neighbors to the south and the north deserve special treatment and the Border Commuter Student Act adds another option to enter the United States for Canadians and Mexicans who live along the border.

The bipartisan bill was voted out of the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously. It is supported by the administration, by the Mexican Government, the Canadian Government, the U.S.-Mexico Counties Coalition, the Arizona-Mexico Commission, the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, the Career College Association, the Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities, the University of Phoenix system, University of Texas system, and Texas Tech.

Mr. Speaker, this is, as the gentlewoman said earlier, good legislation. It is balanced legislation. It corrects a flaw we have had in our immigration law for some time, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just conclude by simply saying what we want in this legislation is to help our commuter students from Canada and Mexico come in, be trained, and contribute to their communities and societies. This is a balanced legislative initiative, and I ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4967, the Border Commuter Student Act. I applaud my colleague, Mr. KOLBE, for his hard work at addressing an issue that is critical along the U.S.-Mexico and Canada borders.

As you know, the situation on the U.S.-Mexico and Canada borders is unique in regard to foreign students who reside in their homelands and who cross at our Ports-of-Entries (POEs) to use American colleges and universities. Many of these students attend classes on a part-time basis. In the past, the interpretation of the meaning of part-time student varied from POE to POE resulting in inconsistent policy. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) District Directors used their discretion in allowing part-time students to cross at many POEs.

Recently, the INS began to enforce laws by stating that "aliens who seek to enter the United States regularly but primarily to pursue less than a full course of study are neither visitors nor students and are ineligible for student visa or visitor status." INS Commissioner Ziglar further clarified policy by stating that "the POEs are not to admit visitors for business or pleasure whose purpose for entering the United States is to pursue a part-time course of study at a college or university."

As we continue with our efforts to secure our homeland, I will be the first to admit that priority must be placed on improving the ability of the INS to enforce our laws and deploy technology necessary to secure our nation's borders. Having worked for many years in the U.S. Border Patrol, I understand the importance of increasing security at our nation's POEs and I also understand the need to carefully monitor student visas.

However, as you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, this situation would have created a great deal of confusion in my district and in many other districts along the U.S.-Mexico and Canadian borders and would have penalized law-abiding people who were taking steps to educate and improve themselves. In fact, there are over 2,000 students in my district alone who would have been adversely impacted by the implementation of this policy. Some of these students included professionals who work full-time in Mexico border cities and who cross regularly to attend colleges and universities part-time in pursuit of graduate degrees. Such individuals include skilled workers in maquiladoras, educators, and engineers. Many of these individuals contribute to the improvement and quality of life for sister cities along our borders.

The Border Commuter Student Act, of which I am an original cosponsor, creates two new non-immigrant student visa categories for Canadian and Mexican students who study part-time in the United States but who live in their home country. This legislation only applies to schools located within 75 miles of the border. Mr. Speaker, this is good, common-sense legislation that closes a loophole and allows students from the U.S.-Mexico and Canada borders to attend classes in the United States on a part-time basis. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4967.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OUR LADY OF PEACE ACT

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4757) to improve the national instant criminal background check system, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4757

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Our Lady of Peace Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Since 1994, more than 689,000 individuals have been denied a gun for failing a background check.

(2) States that fail to computerize their criminal and mental illness records are the primary cause of delays for background checks. Helping States automate their records will reduce delays for law-abiding gun owners.

(3) 25 States have automated less than 60 percent of their felony criminal conviction records.

(4) 33 States do not automate or share disqualifying mental health records.

(5) In 13 States, domestic violence restraining orders are not automated or accessible by the national instant criminal background check system.

(6) In 15 States, no domestic violence misdemeanor records are automated or accessible by the national instant criminal background check system.

TITLE I—TRANSMITTAL OF RECORDSSEC. 101. ENHANCEMENT OF REQUIREMENT THAT FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES PROVIDE RELEVANT INFORMATION TO THE NATIONAL INSTANT CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECK SYSTEM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 103(e)(1) of the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act (18 U.S.C. 922 note) is amended—

(1) by inserting “electronically” before “furnish”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: “The head of each department or agency shall ascertain whether the department or agency has any records relating to any person described in subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code and on being made aware that the department or agency has such a record, shall make the record available to the Attorney General for inclusion in the system to the extent the Attorney General deems appropriate. The head of each department or agency, on being made aware that the basis under which a record was made available under this section does not apply or no longer applies, shall transmit a certification identifying the record (and any name or other relevant identifying information) to the Attorney General for removal from the system. The Attorney General shall notify the Congress on an annual basis as to whether the Attorney General has obtained from each such department or agency the information requested by the Attorney General under this subsection.”.

(b) IMMIGRATION RECORDS.—The Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service shall cooperate in providing information regarding all relevant records of persons disqualified from acquiring a firearm under Federal law, including but not limited to, illegal aliens, visitors to the United States on student visas, and visitors to the United States on tourist visas, to the Attorney General for inclusion in the national instant criminal background check system.

SEC. 102. REQUIREMENTS TO OBTAIN WAIVER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Beginning 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, a State shall be eligible to receive a waiver of the 10 percent matching requirement for National Criminal History Improvement Grants under the Crime Identification Technology Act of 1988 if the State provides at least 95 percent of the information described in subsection (b). The length of such a waiver shall not exceed 5 years.

(b) ELIGIBILITY OF STATE RECORDS FOR SUBMISSION TO THE NATIONAL INSTANT CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECK SYSTEM.—

(1) REQUIREMENTS FOR ELIGIBILITY.—The State shall make available the following information established either through its own database or provide information to the Attorney General:

(A) The name of and other relevant identifying information relating to each person disqualified from acquiring a firearm under subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, and each person disqualified from acquiring a firearm under applicable State law.

(B) The State, on being made aware that the basis under which a record was made available under subparagraph (A) does not apply or no longer applies, shall transmit a certification identifying the record (and any name or other relevant identifying information) to the Attorney General for removal from the system.

(C) Any information provided to the Attorney General under subparagraph (A) may be accessed only for background check purposes under section 922(t) of title 18, United States Code.

(D) The State shall certify to the Attorney General that at least 95 percent of all information described in subparagraph (A) has been provided to the Attorney General in accordance with subparagraph (A).

(2) APPLICATION TO PERSONS CONVICTED OF MISDEMEANOR CRIMES OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.

(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), a person disqualified from acquiring a firearm as referred to in that paragraph includes a person who has been convicted in any court of any Federal, State, or local offense that—

(i) is a misdemeanor under Federal or State law or, in a State that does not classify offenses as misdemeanors, is an offense punishable by imprisonment for a term of 1 year or less (or punishable by only a fine);

(ii) has, as an element of the offense, the use or attempted use of physical force (for example, assault and battery), or the threatened use of a deadly weapon; and

(iii) was committed by a current or former spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, by a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, by a person who is cohabitating with or has cohabitated with the victim as a spouse, parent, or guardian, (for example, the equivalent of “common-law marriage” even if such relationship is not recognized under the law), or a person similarly situated to a spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim (for example, two persons who are residing at the same location in an intimate relationship with the intent to make that place their home would be similarly situated to a spouse).

(B) A person shall not be considered to have been convicted of such an offense for purposes of subparagraph (A) unless—

(i) the person is considered to have been convicted by the jurisdiction in which the proceeding was held;

(ii) the person was represented by counsel in the case, or knowingly and intelligently waived the right to counsel in the case; and

(iii) in the case of a prosecution for which a person was entitled to a jury trial in the jurisdiction in which the case was tried—

(I) the case was tried by a jury; or

(II) the person knowingly and intelligently waived the right to have the case tried by a jury, by guilty plea, or otherwise.

(C) A person shall not be considered to have been convicted of such an offense for purposes of subparagraph (A) if the conviction has been expunged or set aside, or is an offense for which the person has been pardoned or has had civil rights restored (if the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held provides for the loss of civil rights upon conviction of such an offense) unless the pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms, and the person is not otherwise prohibited by the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held from receiving or possessing any firearms.

(3) APPLICATION TO PERSONS WHO HAVE BEEN ADJUDICATED AS A MENTAL DEFECTIVE OR COMMITTED TO A MENTAL INSTITUTION.—

(A) For purposes of paragraph (1), an adjudication as a mental defective occurs when a court, board, commission, or other government entity determines that a person, as a result of marked subnormal intelligence, or mental illness, incompetency, condition, or disease—

(i) is a danger to himself or to others; or

(ii) lacks the mental capacity to contract or manage his own affairs.

(B) The term “adjudicated as a mental defective” includes—

(i) a finding of insanity by a court in a criminal case; and

(ii) a finding that a person is incompetent to stand trial or is not guilty by reason of lack of mental responsibility pursuant to articles 50a and 72b of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. 850a, 876b).

(C) EXCEPTIONS.—This paragraph does not apply to—

(i) a person—

(I) in a mental institution for observation; or

(II) voluntarily committed to a mental institution; or

(ii) information protected by doctor-patient privilege.

(4) PRIVACY PROTECTIONS.—For any information provided under the national instant criminal background check system, the Attorney General shall work with States and local law enforcement and the mental health community to establish regulations and protocols for protecting the privacy of information provided to the system. In the event of a conflict between a provision of this Act and a provision of State law relating to privacy protection, the provision of State law shall control.

(5) STATE AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a State may designate that records transmitted under this subsection shall be used only to determine eligibility to purchase or possess a firearm.

(c) ATTORNEY GENERAL REPORT.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the Attorney General shall submit to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives a report on the progress of States in automating the databases containing the information described in subsection (b) and in providing that information pursuant to the requirements of this subsection.

SEC. 103. IMPLEMENTATION GRANTS TO STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—From amounts made available to carry out this section, the Attorney General shall make grants to each State, in a manner consistent with the national criminal history improvement program, which shall be used by the State, in conjunction with units of local government and State and local courts, to establish or upgrade information and identification technologies for firearms eligibility determinations.

(b) USE OF GRANT AMOUNTS.—Grants under this section may only be awarded for the following purposes:

(1) Building databases that are directly related to checks under the national instant criminal background check system (NICS), including court disposition and corrections records.

(2) Assisting States in establishing or enhancing their own capacities to perform NICS background checks.

(3) Improving final dispositions of criminal records.

(4) Supplying mental health records to NICS.

(5) Supplying court-ordered domestic restraining orders and records of domestic violence misdemeanors (as defined in section 102 of this Act) for inclusion in NICS.

(c) CONDITION.—As a condition of receiving a grant under this section, a State shall specify the projects for which grant amounts will be used, and shall use such amounts only as specified. A State that violates this section shall be liable to the Attorney General for the full amount granted.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $250,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2004, 2005, and 2006.

(e) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall not charge a user fee for background checks pursuant to section 922(t) of title 18, United States Code.

TITLE II—FOCUSING FEDERAL ASSISTANCE ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF RELEVANT RECORDS

SEC. 201. CONTINUING EVALUATIONS.

(a) EVALUATION REQUIRED.—The Director of the Bureau of Justice Statistics shall study and evaluate the operations of the national instant criminal background check system. Such study and evaluation shall include, but not be limited to, compilations and analyses of the operations and record systems of the agencies and organizations participating in such system.

(b) REPORT ON GRANTS.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the Director shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of section 102(b).

(c) REPORT ON BEST PRACTICES.—Not later than January 31 of each year, the Director shall submit to Congress, and to each State participating in the National Criminal History Improvement Program, a report of the practices of the States regarding the collection, maintenance, automation, and transmittal of identifying information relating to individuals described in subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18, United States Code, by the State or any other agency, or any other records relevant to the national instant criminal background check system, that the Director considers to be best practices.

TITLE III—GRANTS TO STATE COURTS FOR THE IMPROVEMENT IN AUTOMATION AND TRANSMITTAL OF DISPOSITION RECORDS

SEC. 301. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—From amounts made available to carry out this section, the Attorney General shall make grants to each State for use by the chief judicial officer of the State to improve the handling of proceedings related to criminal history dispositions and restraining orders.

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—Amounts granted under this section shall be used by the chief judicial officer only as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2004, such amounts shall be used to carry out assessments of the capabilities of the courts of the State for the automation and transmission to State and Federal record repositories the arrest and conviction records of such courts.

(2) For fiscal years after 2004, such amounts shall be used to implement policies, systems, and procedures for the automation and transmission to State and Federal record repositories the arrest and conviction records of such courts.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Attorney General to carry out this section $125,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2004, 2005, and 2006.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4757, the bill currently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I was the principal Republican author of the Brady Act, which was signed into law in 1994. While much of the debate on the Brady Act was on the 5-day waiting period that was contained in there, the lasting good of the Brady Act was the establishment of the National Instant Criminal Background Check System, wherein people who are statutorily ineligible from possessing any type of firearm, such as a convicted felon or an adjudicated mental incompetent, could be identified instantly and a proposed firearm sale could be denied to that individual.

This part of the Brady Act is intended to keep firearms out of the hands of individuals who are prohibited by Federal or State law from possessing them. The NICS system was established by the Attorney General to enforce the provisions of the Brady Act. The mission of NICS is to ensure the timely sale of firearms to individuals who can legally possess them and to deny their sale to individuals who are prohibited from possessing or receiving a firearm.

But background checks can only be as effective as the records that are available to be checked, and most crimes of violence are prosecuted under State and local law rather than Federal law. So the NICS system cannot keep guns out of the hands of criminals and other dangerous individuals without receiving the most current records from the States.

NICS has not been operating in the most efficient way possible because of the failure of certain State and local governments to provide NICS with the current information regarding individuals who may be disqualified from purchasing or possessing a firearm. Despite the fact that the Federal Government has contributed more than $350 million since 1995 through the National Criminal History Improvement Program, called NCHIP, to help the States update their records and to improve reporting, some States still have not completely computerized their criminal records and do not maintain complete criminal history records.

Some States still do not have computerized records on mental health adjudications. And in some States domestic violence crimes and protective orders are not computerized or properly labeled as domestic violence related. Often, even States that do keep records fail to note the final disposition of arrest charges. This bill is designed to provide more money to the States to make these records as close to 100 percent perfect as possible, and I support it.

Although NICS will attempt to obtain information for any missing record, Federal law provides that if a delayed background check is still pending after 3 business days, the firearms dealer may proceed with the sale. So if the records are not in NICS and cannot be found in 3 days, the sale goes through even though the buyer might be an adjudicated mental incompetent or a convicted felon.

The NCHIP program has helped increase the records available for search by NICS by as much as 60 percent. But some States and local governments have failed to automate their records or otherwise make them available to next, and I am particularly troubled by States that have refused to join the Federal Government as partners to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and others who should not have them.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the State of Maryland's refusal to assist the FBI with these NICS checks, and I will enter four letters into the RECORD to highlight this problem.

In a March 12, 2002, letter to the FBI, the Maryland State Archives informed the FBI, "We can no longer provide the research and assistance your program requires without reimbursement for the work." The letter indicated that the annual cost of providing this research to support NICS would cost about $45,000 annually. It was not until August 27, 2002, that the Maryland Department of Public Safety reaffirmed its commitment to NICS. Then, on October 3, 2002, the Maryland Archives informed the FBI that it will provide NICS research assistance so long as NCHIP funding is available, thereby leaving the door open to once again discontinue cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, it is outrageous that the State of Maryland would let almost 7 months go by without assisting the FBI with these criminal NICS checks. And I do not know if this was the fault of the executive branch or the failure of the Maryland legislature to provide enough money to do the job, but 7 months went by and nothing was being done.

The Federal Government spends about $60 million annually on NICS, and as I have already said, about $350 million in the last 7 years on NCHIP. Maryland has received over $6,700,000 from NCHIP to improve its criminal history records. Are we to believe that Maryland could not find another $45,000 to assist with NICS checks? Maryland's shortsighted policy has made it the weak link in the NICS system.

Maryland's policy has endangered lives and threatened public safety. Maryland's failure affects every State because a Maryland felon might, for example, try to illegally buy a gun in Virginia. If the Maryland State Archives refuses to search its criminal history records, Maryland felons can purchase guns that they are otherwise prohibited from purchasing.

It is my understanding that the State of Maryland was the only State in the country to refuse to assist the FBI with NICS checks. Practically every State in the Union has a financial problem, but they have continued working with the FBI because they felt it was important. Only Maryland said no. Maryland is now, apparently, providing that assistance, but only if Federal funding is available, and this is not tolerable because of the amount of NCHIP and other Federal criminal justice assistance provided Maryland and the importance of keeping guns out of the hands of convicted felons and adjudicated mental incompetents.

The Washington Post, in an October 12, 2002, story, reported that Maryland Lieutenant Governor Kathleen Kennedy Townsend "is considering a plan to require ballistic fingerprints of high-powered rifles sold in Maryland." I would suggest that the folks in Annapolis start by assisting the FBI with a program that we know will keep guns out of the hands of criminals.

Mr. Speaker, the Lieutenant Governor's biography, which is posted on the official State of Maryland Web site, claims she is "Maryland's point person on criminal justice," and her biography lists a number of anticrime efforts for which she takes credit. As the point person for criminal justice matters, I would expect the Lieutenant Governor of Maryland to fully cooperate with the General Accounting Office investigation that I am requesting today for a complete audit of Maryland's use of NCHIP funding.

Mr. Speaker, more money to upgrade State criminal history records is all well and good, but Federal money and assistance is not always the answer. Sometimes public officials need to exercise a modicum of common sense, and that common sense dictates that we need to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and other dangerous individuals. NICS can only do that if it is provided the records on those individuals. Accordingly, funds provided to the States must be used to improve their recordkeeping and automate system to reduce delays for law-abiding gun purchasers and to prevent guns from falling into the wrong hands.

In 1998, the Brady Act required Federal Firearms Licensees (FFL) to initiate a background check on all persons who attempt to purchase a firearm. The Brady Act is intended to keep firearms out of the hands of individuals who are prohibited by Federal or state law from possessing them. The Attorney General established the National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS) operation center to enforce the provisions of the Brady Act.

The NICS mission is to ensure the timely sale of firearms to individuals who are not prohibited under Federal law and deny a sale to those individuals who are prohibited from possessing or receiving a firearm. However, background checks can only be as effective as the records available to be checked. The NICS system cannot keep guns out of the hands of criminals and other dangerous individuals without receiving the most current records from the states.

The current NICS system has not been operating in the most efficient way possible because of the failure of certain states and local governments to provide NICS with current information regarding individuals who may be disqualified from purchasing a firearm. Despite the fact the Federal government has contributed more than $350 million since 1995 through the National Criminal History Improvement Program (NCHIP) to help states update their records and improve reporting, some states still have not completely computerized their criminal records and do not maintain complete criminal-history records. MARYLAND STATE ARCHIVES,
March 12, 2002.

Ms. LINDA L. MILLER,
Federal Bureau of Investigation,
National Instant Criminal Background Check System,
Clarksburg, WV.

DEAR Ms. MILLER. We regret that we can no longer provide the research and assistance your program requires without reimbursement for the work. Orders received before March 18 will be the last we are able to process, unless the enclosed memorandum of understanding is signed before then.

Since July 1, 2001, the Maryland State Archives has responded to 1,800 requests for dispositions of criminal cases related to the National Instant Criminal Background Check System. Our staff researched the case numbers through an on-line system, or from docket book indices, or by contacting the courts. We then located, reproduced, and faxed the dockets that reflect the charge and disposition. Archives staff averaged next day response for requests received on weekdays, and always responded within three working days (unless we were dependent on the courts for case numbers which are reported after that time). The annual cost of providing this efficient service will approach $45,000.00 this year alone.

We have previously requested federal funding directly through NICS and through federal grants to this state, but no support has been forthcoming to date. Direct financial support for the staff and facilities to make this information accessible is required. Given the state imposed hiring freeze we are operating under and the loss of reference staff in the last four months, it is not possible for the Archives to continue providing this service to your agency unless funds are found to pay us a per unit cost of $25.00 for each request.

We estimate that the Archives has processed better than half of all the applications that your office receives from Maryland which require further information before the background check can be completed. If you are unable to secure funding to assist us in the research necessary to fulfill your requests, we foresee that you will have to assign an agent to research here on a full-time to continue to perform this work. We know from our own experience that each case requires approximately one hour of research. We will assist any agent in our public Search Room at the Hall of Records in Annapolis to locate the necessary documents on days that we are open. The Archives provides this level of service to anyone who visits our facility, although I should point out that budget cuts may force us to close the Search Room for one or more days during the week.

Sincerely yours,

CHRISTOPHER N. ALAN,
Deputy State Archivist.

MARYLAND STATE ARCHIVES,
Federal Bureau of Investigation,
National Instant Criminal Background Check System, Clarksburg, WV

Please note that the Maryland State Archives that as of March 18 the Archives is no longer providing remote criminal research for the National Instant Criminal Background Check System. You are invited to conduct this and any future criminal background research in the Archives' public Search Room. Please note that many criminal files or necessary indices may still be in the custody of the courts.

The public search room is open Tuesday through Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday, 8:30 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. and 1:00 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. The Archives is Closed on Mondays. On weekdays the search room remains open at lunchtime (12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m.) with reduced services. The Archives is closed on state holidays. The state holiday closings for 2002 are: Tuesday, January 1; Thursday, July 4; Tuesday, November 5; Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 28, 29 & 30; Wednesday, December 25. The Maryland State Archives is located at 350 Rowe Boulevard, Annapolis, MD 21401.

Sincerely,

R.J. ROCKEFELLER, PH.D.,

Re National Instant Check System (NICS)—
FBI Letter (May 9, 2002) to Maryland
State Archives and Response (May 31, 2002) from Maryland State Archives.

KIMBERLY DEL GRECO,
*Acting Section Chief, NICS Program Office,
Clarksburg, WV*

DEAR MS. DEL GRECO: I am writing on behalf of the Criminal Justice Information System (CJIS) Central Repository in response to the letter dated May 9, 2002, from Mr. Timothy Munson, NICS Program Office, to Mr. Christopher Allan, Deputy State Archivist of the Maryland State Archives. Mr. Munson's letter detailed some of the frustrations he was experiencing in obtaining Maryland criminal history record information on subjects under the purview of the NICS operations. I am also in receipt of the response from Mr. Allan.

The Secretary of Public Safety and Correctional Services and the Chief Judge of the Maryland Court of Appeals jointly oversee Maryland's Criminal Justice Information System (CJIS). It is established under the authority of the Criminal Procedure Article, §§10-201-10-234, Annotated Code of Maryland. The enabling statute is implemented by executive Code of Maryland Regulations (COMAR 12.15.01) and by judicial rules (Maryland Rules §§16-308 and 16-508). The CJIS Central Repository is housed for administrative purposes in the Information Technology and Communications Division of the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services.

The policy issues raised in both letters referenced above are of genuine concern to Maryland, and in particular to this Department. I apologize for the long delay in responding to the original letter. I felt it was important to first identify what created the issues identified by Mr. Munson and then, in consultation with NICS staff, to take immediate steps to reach a mutually agreed-upon resolution.

I think resolution has been reached, the result of several conference calls between our respective staffs. Consensus on procedural issues included, among others, the following:

Installation of a dedicated fax machine by the FBI,

Faxing completed response to the FBI within 24 hours of receipt of inquiry,

Use of standardized verbiage re: sources of dispositions,

Development of holiday/weekend work schedules, and

Identification of points-of-contact at the respective agencies.

I should also point out that, because Maryland was a "day-forward" participant when it joined the Interstate Identification Index (III) in March 1998, this State has not been able to electronically supply criminal history record information prior to March 1998. However, this Department is supporting the efforts of CJIS Central Repository to make these the pre-March 1998 records available for NICS investigations as soon as may be possible.

I am committed not merely to maintaining Maryland's criminal history record information in the CJIS Central Repository in a timely, complete, and accurate fashion, but also to utilizing procedures that will provide this information to authorized users in an efficient and effective manner. Please let me know if the attempt to improve our response with respect to NICS operations develops further problems or does not in any way satisfy the needs of NICS.

Sincerely,

JUDITH A. WOOD
Chief Information Officer.

MARYLAND STATE ARCHIVES,
October 3, 2002.

Gary Wick,
Asst. Operation Manager, U.S. Department of Justice, Clarksburg, WV.

DEAR MR. WICK: Thank you for your letter of September 19 regarding the Maryland State Archives and NICS research. Dr. Papenfuss asked me to respond on his behalf.

Your suggestions are welcome. We will immediately cease mailing copies after the fax transmissions. Some consider fax an unsatisfactory record, so we followed with copies. If you find the fax adequate, we will rely on that alone. Your staff may continue to contact us by telephone when the fax presents a legibility issue. We wish that the NICS staff had access to adequate email so that we might transmit the very fine image files we use to reproduce the documents.

You might occasionally receive contradictory reports when a first search yields nothing, but when further information provided by your agents or our own quality assurance steps locate a record at first not found. This happens rarely, but is not due to multiple staff member seeking the same record and passing by one another. I am pleased when we can follow up and report comprehensively, even if after the initial 72 business hours.

We are pleased to report that federal funds are available to pay for this service through the NCHIP FY 2002 Program and the Maryland Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services. So long as such funds are available, the Archives will endeavor to contribute to national and personal security in support of the NICS operation.

Sincerely,

R.J. ROCKEFELLER, PH.D.,
Director, Reference Services.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me first thank the proponents of this legislation, particularly the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) who has been waging a definitive and balanced and open effort to protect Americans all over this Nation as relates to gun safety.

The gentlewoman from New York is joined, of course, by the dean of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), who has shown the kind of diplomacy and openness to sharing in this legislation to get to the final point, and that is to save lives. So I rise with enthusiastic support and in appreciation of their leadership in support of the Our Lady of Peace Act, H.R. 4757.

Mr. Speaker, I might also commend the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), who offers his enthusiastic support, and the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security, the gentleman from Virginia

(Mr. SCOTT), who offers his enthusiastic support for this legislation.

The chairman of the committee makes a very vital point, particularly as we look at the enormous tragedy that the people of this particular region, the Washington, DC, area, are facing right now. All of us offer our deepest sympathy as we face a challenge, where lives are being lost, by a perpetrator which no one has been able to determine the basis of the actions or to determine the identity of that perpetrator at this time.

This is an important legislative initiative, and I would expand the request of the distinguished chairman and ask for an investigation or a requirement of a report from all the States, in addition to Maryland, to be able to determine the assessment that is so important. So that that could be a part of this legislation, we should join in asking for reports from all the 50 States.

Let me simply say because Federal law requires that a gun sale proceed after 3 business days, even a background check is inconclusive. A number of felons, fugitives, and stalkers received guns that we later have to retrieve. And while 95 percent of all background checks are completed within 24 hours, because of incomplete records the remaining 5 percent take more time. Those 5 percent are 20 times more likely to be a felon, fugitive, or stalker.

In fact, we learned from a recent GAO study requested by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) to look into the problem of domestic violence, it was determined that nearly 3,000 convicted domestic batterers and child abusers were able to purchase firearms between 1998 and 2001. Despite Federal laws designed to prevent this, nearly 10 percent of the annual homicides involving the killing of a spouse or partner, almost all the victims were women, and most were done by using a firearm. We must do better.

One part of the solution is to allow more time for background checks, and this would allow us to more fully investigate purchasers whose records raise a red flag. It would also allow a cooling-off period which has proven to be effective to deter heat-of-passion crimes.

Another part of the solution is this bill, and I am delighted to rise in support of this bill which will provide incentive for States to provide more complete records to the Federal Government. This will result in faster and smarter background checks.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the proponents of this bill. And as well, I would hope that we would support this bill enthusiastically.

I strongly support this legislation. A major problem with the instant check system has been the incomplete records of state and local governments. Because federal law requires that a gun sale proceed after three business days even if a background check is inconclusive, a number of felons, fugitives and stalkers receive guns that we later have to retrieve.

Ninety-five percent of all background checks are completed within 24 hours. Because of incomplete records, the remaining five percent take more time. Those five percent are twenty times more likely to be a felon, fugitive or stalker. This also will help keep guns out of the hands of those that would harm others such as the mentally disabled.

In fact, in a recent GAO study I requested looked at this problem in the area of domestic violence. I was extremely disturbed to learn that nearly 3,000 convicted batterers and child abusers were able to purchase firearms between 1998–2001, despite federal laws designed to prevent this. Nearly 10 percent of the annual homicides involving the killing of a spouse or partner, almost all the victims were women and most were killed using a firearm. We must do better!

One part of the solution is to allow more time for background checks. This would allow us to more fully investigate purchasers whose records raise a red flag. It would also allow a "cooling off" period, which has been proven effective to deter heat of passion crimes.

Another part of the solution is this bill. It will provide incentives for states to provide more complete records to the federal government. This will result in faster and smarter background checks.

Finally, I want to thank and congratulate my colleagues, Congresswoman MCCARTHY and the Dean of the House, JOHN DINGELL, for their work on this bill and their willingness to take constructive suggestions along the way, to make this an even better bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) for the purposes of control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4757, a bill that would close a loophole in the national instant background check system for gun purchases. As an original cosponsor of this bill, I am pleased to join my good friends, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), in supporting this important legislation. I want to take this opportunity also to thank the House leadership, the Speaker and the majority whip, and also the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for bringing this bill to the floor at this time. I am very appreciative.

Also, I want to point out the fact that Americans for Gun Safety, the Brady Campaign, and many other organizations have worked for its passage and applaud this time on the House floor.

This bill is long overdue. In 1993, Congress passed the Brady Act, which I strongly supported. The Brady Act gives the FBI 4 years to create a national instant background check system for purchasing a firearm. But unfortunately, 8 years after the passage of the Brady Act, the national background check system is still not instant or up to date, as on average, only 58 percent of the felony background check records have been computerized. This means felons, domestic abusers, and mentally infirm have been able to walk into a gun store and buy a firearm because of incomplete government records. In fact, nationwide because of poor record keeping by the government, 10,000 convicted felons and other prohibited buyers have been able to purchase guns.

In my home State of Maryland, 283 illegal buyers were able to buy guns because of incomplete background check records over a 30-month period. Overall, Maryland has the 15th worst record in the Nation of illegal buyers obtaining guns due to faulty records. Moreover, Maryland does not check the records of individuals with a history of severe mental illness when doing a background check.

This is incredible; but it is not unusual, as 33 States do not bother to do a mental illness background check. And it gets even worse. In 15 States, those convicted of a domestic violence misdemeanor can slip through a background check, because those States do not supply any of those records to the FBI. This bill will fix those gaping holes.

In my district, there is a sniper on the loose. He is killing people indiscriminately and shows no regard for human life. Nine innocent victims have died, and two people are critically injured. We do not know how he got the gun, if it was stolen, purchased at a gun show or a gun dealer. We do not know if a background check system with fully automated records would have stopped him, but we do know that 10,000 illegal buyers got a gun because of faulty records. This utterly depraved perpetrator may be number 10,001.

Mr. Speaker, this bill closes a loophole of a bill already on the books, the Brady Act, and increases public safety at a time when it is desperately need. I urge its passage by the House.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4757, Our Lady of Peace Act, and the assistance it offers States for automating their criminal history records. I would like to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for working with me from the beginning and giving suggestions on how to make this a better bill.

I also thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the distinguished ranking member, for working with me in helping pass this bipartisan bill through the Committee on the Judiciary.

I also thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) for all his hard work throughout this process. He and I actually started talking about this kind of legislation quite a long time ago, and I am glad to see that it is on the floor today.

It is not every day that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and I are on the same side of a gun debate, but we believe that this legislation helps close a loophole in our law that allows disqualified individuals to obtain a firearm.

In March of this year, a priest and a parishioner in my district at the Lady of Peace Church were fatally shot during mass by a disturbed gunman with a history of mental health problems and a restraining order issued by his mother. However, he was able to purchase a firearm 2 days before the attack because most States do not provide mental health and other disqualifying records to the FBI NICS database. The 1968 Gun Control Act bars nine categories of individuals, including those who are deemed mentally ill, from having a firearm. However, when a Federal background check is performed, only Federal databases are addressed. That means that the Federal background check is only as good as the records in it; and since many of these records are kept by the States and rarely provided to the FBI, the Federal background check may never spot the disqualifying factor, therefore allowing the purchase to proceed.

Right now, 35 million records of people who are prohibited by law from owning a firearm are missing from the various databases that make up the NICS system. That means it is nearly impossible to stop those under a restraining order, the severely mentally ill, and illegal aliens from passing a background check and obtaining a firearm.

The Our Lady of Peace Act seeks to enforce the 1968 Gun Control Act by providing States an incentive to automate and shared disqualifying records with the FBI. In addition, it authorizes grants to help States automate and improve criminal history records, mental health records, restraining orders and records of domestic violence misdemeanors.

It also requires Federal agencies, like the INS, to provide the FBI with records of individuals disqualified from purchasing a firearm. This legislation helps make the instant background check system truly the instant system we are looking for.

Whether a gun owner or not, this legislation will appeal to everyone who believes we should enforce our current gun laws and keep firearms out of the wrong hands. What I will say is what we have been seeing, especially in the last week or so in the vicinity of our area, we should be doing more to enforce the laws on the books. That is something I have been trying to do since elected to Congress. It has been my privilege and my honor to work with all Members bipartisanship to get this done. I think it is important, and I hope that we can all work together in the future to do more because there is more to be done. The bottom line is as long as we keep guns out of the hands of those that should not have them, we will be saving lives; and that is what we are all here about. That is what we all care about. I urge support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I add my congratulations to the author of this bill for the gentlewoman's efforts here and in the national media to make a case for keeping firearms out of the hands of criminals.

I would also add my congratulations to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for his excellent work on this bill and to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for seeing to it that we, at such a time as this, deal with this critical legislation. And lastly, I add my congratulations to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) for his efforts in advancing sensible laws having to do with gunownership while preserving the second amendment rights of every law-abiding American to keep and bear arms.

Mr. Speaker, I have said before on this floor, I believe the House of Representatives is the heart of the American government and in many ways should resonate with the hearts of the American people. The truth is we rise today not in a vacuum, as others have said before. The truth is that the hearts of the American people today are troubled, shots fired as recently as last night here in the vicinity of our Nation's Capitol, felling innocent women, men, and even children, in barbaric acts of terror. Whatever the motivation from wherever comes the source, these are acts of terror here in suburban Washington, D.C.

Mr. Speaker, my own family endured a brush with this violence when we learned last night of the attack on the Home Depot in Falls Church, Virginia. My wife informed me that it was there she had taken our 9-year-old daughter on Sunday night to purchase their fall mums and bring them home, happily reporting to me that she had parked safely in a covered garage at that Home Depot; and I can only stand with an unusual amount of identification and grieve with the family of she who was lost last night, and think there, but for the grace of God, goes my family.

The perpetrators seem to act with impunity. They defy civilized behavior and so far have defied the finest local, State, and Federal law enforcement in the world. They seem to say tauntingly, there is nothing you can do. How wrong they are. How wrong they are.

Today, because of the leadership of the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY), we rise in this institution to do something. We rise today to bring forth in Our Lady of Peace Act legislation which will provide States with the tools to comply with the 1968 Gun Control Act by providing additional funds to automate and share criminal mental health and domestic violence restraining order records with the FBI's NICS database.

This legislation, since its conception, was always designed to provide that instant background check, just like we are used to at the gasoline station pump, to know immediately who has a background that is consistent with the ownership of firearms and who does not. Under this legislation, all Federal agencies would transmit relevant records relating to persons disqualified from acquiring a firearm to the Attorney General for inclusion in the NICS database. To comply with the grants under this legislation, States also would provide more thorough and updated information, and there is a grant program to assist State courts to assess and improve the handling of proceedings related to criminal history.

Mr. Speaker, there is something we can do. As Americans and as family people, we can pray for justice in this case; and we can support our law enforcement as they seek to leave no stone unturned. Lastly, we can pass this critical and important legislation that will speed resources to the NICS database and make sure that those who possess firearms in America are only law-abiding Americans.

□ 1545

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4757. I thank the distinguished gentlewoman from New York for yielding me this time, and I commend her for her leadership and effort in this matter. It has been a privilege and a pleasure for me to work with her as a cosponsor of this legislation.

I want to note that this legislation is supported in a bipartisan fashion. On both sides, Members support this. The leadership on both sides of the aisle supports this legislation. And the leadership on both ends of the Capitol supports this legislation. It is supported by the NRA and by gun control groups. I want to commend my good friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and also the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) for their leadership and their support of this legislation.

I would note that the legislation is really very simple. It first of all protects the second amendment rights of the people of this country, and that was one of the criteria and tests that my good friends at the NRA, of which I am a very happy and proud member, provided our support for the undertaking. It is legislation, then, which protects the basic rights of the American people to own and use firearms for legitimate and responsible hunting, fishing, conservation and defense purposes.

I would note that it is legislation which requires the Federal Government and provides incentives to the States to make the record-keeping system, upon which the instant check is entirely dependent, work and to see so that it does speedily.

The practical result of this legislation will be two things: one, to keep guns out of the hands of criminals; and, two, to see to it that law-abiding citizens are better able to purchase firearms in a legitimate and proper fashion without delays occasioned by the failure of the States and the Federal Government to keep proper records.

As mentioned by my distinguished friend, the chairman of the committee, there is a long and complete list of disabilities by Federal and State statutes which preclude ownership of persons of firearms. Those include mental disabilities, they include also criminal misbehavior, of family abuse and things of that kind, as well as being a fugitive from justice, a convicted felon or an illegal immigrant. Those are matters which our policy of the United States and the Congress says that people may not then own firearms. This is a way that we use to strain so that firearms may not get through the net into the hands of illegal owners and persons who are precluded by law from owning them.

This will be a significant benefit to law enforcement. It also will be a protection to innocent citizens. It will, in like fashion, be a protection of the basic rights of the American people. More needs to be done, but it has to be done in a fashion which is consistent with protection of the basic second amendment rights of the American people.

I am proud that the distinguished gentlewoman from New York and I were able to work together to achieve something which could achieve the kind of broad support that H.R. 4757 has. It provides other protections, also, and I would note that it precludes the possibility of taxes being imposed upon law-abiding gun owners for the purposes of owning firearms and achieving that ownership through the instant check.

It is a good piece of legislation. I urge my colleagues to support it. I note that it has no opposition of which I am aware, and it is legislation which will enable Americans to feel better about their safety and about, at the same time, the protection of their firearms ownership rights.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for bringing this forward and also the gentlewoman from Maryland for her hard work on this subject; also the gentlewoman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan for their hard work on fashioning legislation here that protects the second amendment rights of all Americans, but also ensures that criminals cannot more easily get their hands on guns. And also, as the gentleman from Michigan mentioned, that law-abiding citizens are not denied or delayed their right simply because State officials have not the resources or the inclination to move ahead on this.

I am proud to support this legislation. I urge support of it.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As you can hear from the debate and a lot of people that might even be watching this debate, back and forth, even though we all support this legislation, it is strange to hear that the NRA and certainly all of our gun groups have worked together. I think that is the important key that we are talking about. We worked very hard to make sure that the privacy of citizens would also be protected.

Again, people have to understand that we are not picking on one particular group. Anyone that is denied access to getting permission for a gun only comes up as denied, so we do not go pinpointing, especially on mental illness or other things. They are just plainly denied. I think that is an important part because I think people out there are misunderstanding, and they actually thought we were targeting people with mental illness. We are not. We just want to make sure that people that should not own guns do not get their guns and people that should be able to have guns have the right to own guns. We will continue to work together on this.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I too would like to add my thanks to the gentlewoman from New York and the gentlewoman from Maryland for putting together this bill. I have been in the Congress for 24 years. This is the first bill on the subject of firearms that I can remember that is supported by both the NRA and most of the major gun control groups. That means we ought to seize this moment and pass this bill right away before this coalition unravels. I urge the Members to do that.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I support the passage of H.R. 4757, considered today by the House of Representatives on the Suspension Calendar.

H.R. 4757, the Our Lady of Peace Act, would amend the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act to require the Attorney General to secure directly from any U.S. department or agency information on persons who are prohibited by federal or state law from having a firearm, such as a convicted felon criminal or mental incompetent. In effect, to make the record collection system work more efficiently than it currently does. The measure provides more money to the States to make their information available to the federal government, making the partnership of the two governmental systems a better working arrangement.

Specifically, H.R. 4757 requires the Attorney General to make grants to each State: (1) to establish or upgrade information and identification technologies for firearms eligibility determinations; and (2) for use by the State's chief judicial officer to improve the handling of proceedings related to criminal history dispositions and temporary restraining orders as they relate to disqualification from firearms ownership under State and Federal laws. And the measure requires the Director of the Bureau of Justice Statistics to study and evaluate the operations of the System and to report on grants and on best practices of States.

As a member of the House Judiciary Committee in 1993 (and currently), I was the chief proponent of the National Instant Check System. And so I view passage of this measure as a positive step towards both preventing prohibited persons from acquiring firearms and protecting the rights of law-abiding gun owners.

A key provision added to this legislation is the prohibition of the federal government imposing a "gun tax," by charging fees for gun purchases through NICS. This is an important provision the National Rifle Association worked to secure. The NRA has been working for nearly a decade to improve NICS so that it works the way Congress intended it—instantly, without any delay or waiting period for gun purchases by law-abiding buyers.

The Second Amendment of the U.S. Constitution reads, "the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed." I firmly believe that the plain language of the Amendment guarantees the right of citizens to keep and bear arms and pledges to protect this right from being infringed upon. Instead of more gun control laws we must forcefully execute the laws that are already in place, while leaving law-abiding citizens alone.

As the chief proponent of the National Instant Check System as a substitute for "waiting periods," I know that the mandate of the NICS was to provide an instant screening of criminal history records in concert with the purchase of a firearm from federally licensed dealers. In this day of instant communications and nearly instant everything, it may not seem like such a feat. But ten years ago, even with the massive use of instant credit card transactions, the concept of using an instant check system for a firearm purchase was novel and somewhat groundbreaking. But in the decade since the mandate of the NICS, the system has needed many improvements. I have gladly welcomed each improvement, such as this measure, as another step toward the instant check system that will both protect and defend citizens and legal gun owners alike.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4757, bipartisan legislation which promises to greatly improve the Instant Check by encouraging states to automate and share disqualifying records with the FBI's National Instant Criminal Background System, NICS, database.

H.R. 4757 is a model of sensible, commonsense public safety legislation. It represents what we can achieve when we leave the rhetoric behind and concentrate on how to best keep guns out of the hands of criminals.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4757 manages to be both pro-gun owner and pro-law enforcement—stopping criminals in their tracks while permitting law-abiding citizens to be approved for purchases in minutes, not days or weeks. And it does so by focusing on enforcement of existing laws, on strengthening them.

Mr. Speaker, instant background checks serve little purpose if they are based on incomplete or inaccurate criminal history records. Today, we strive for accuracy, for completeness. H.R. 4757 goes a long way toward making the NICS system work the way we intended it to work, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4757, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMED FORCES DOMESTIC SECURITY ACT

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5590) to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide for the enforcement and effectiveness of civilian orders of protection on military installations.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5590

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Armed Forces Domestic Security Act".

SEC. 2. FORCE AND EFFECT OF PROTECTIVE ORDERS ON MILITARY INSTALLATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 80 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1561 the following new section:

"§ 1561a. Civilian orders of protection: force and effect on military installations"

"(a) FORCE AND EFFECT.—A civilian order of protection shall have the same force and effect on a military installation as such order has within the jurisdiction of the court that issued such order.

"(b) CIVILIAN ORDER OF PROTECTION DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'civilian order of protection' has the meaning given the term 'protection order' in section 2266(5) of title 18.

"(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations to carry out this section. The regulations shall be designed to further good order and discipline by members of the armed forces and civilians present on military installations."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1561 the following new item:

"1561a. Civilian orders of protection: force and effect on military installations."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) and the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First let me thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) for her presence, her leadership, her good humor and tremendous contribution to a very, very serious issue that a group of us from Congress traveled to Fayetteville to try and help provide some solutions.

Mr. Speaker, domestic violence is currently one of the greatest ills in our society. In both the civilian and military sphere, spousal abuse remains one of the most underreported and difficult crimes to detect and prosecute. Often victims are at a loss as to where to seek help, refuge and comfort.

Unfortunately, this past summer at Fort Bragg in my district in North Carolina, there were several homicides that resulted from domestic violence. Four military wives tragically lost their lives, Mr. Speaker. One case of domestic violence is one too many.

In order to address this grave problem and help stop domestic violence in all sectors of our society, four members of the House Committee on Armed Services and I recently spent the day at Fort Bragg and Fayetteville, North Carolina, in order to hear from many different individuals regarding this tragic problem. We met with military leaders, chaplains, civilian law enforcement, health care providers, advocacy organizations and women's groups, to name a few. We also met with victims.

One of the most salient things we heard during this session with survivors of domestic abuse is that safety is hard to come by. Finding resources to help one out of a desperate situation is an arduous challenge, and often victims feel trapped. For those who are able to come forward and take action, enforcement mechanisms within our legal system often remain inadequate.

We heard from local officials, notably Judge Beth Keever of Fayetteville, North Carolina, that presently there is a legal loophole that does not require protective orders issued by civilian courts to be enforced on military facilities. This means the victim could be without necessary, extra physical protection while on Federal property.

Mr. Speaker, today we help make sure that we provide safety and resources to victims of domestic violence. This legislation takes a step forward, moving our society in the direction to help stop domestic violence. Making protective orders enforceable on military installations will protect both civilian and military individuals on Federal property. They will know that no matter where they are, Fort Bragg, Fayetteville, the supermarket or the PX, the individual from whom the victim is protected will not be allowed to come near.

The recent murders at Fort Bragg are truly a tragedy. Domestic violence is wrong, and we must do everything we can to prevent it. This important legislation represents a small, initial step to address this problem. It is important that we close this loophole. This act was inspired by the courageous stories of former domestic violence victims, insight from those who have experience in the area, and others. Passage of this bill will appropriately honor the courage of these individuals and the dedicated work of their advocates.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 5590, the Armed Forces Domestic Security Act, and take a step forward in protecting the lives of individuals, both on and off military property.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this summer in the aftermath of news reports of murders in Fort Bragg, I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP), requesting the opportunity for us to start to understand exactly what impact domestic violence and other issues were having on our military families. The gentleman from New York (Mr. McHUGH), chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel, who is a great leader, and others traveled with me to Fort Bragg this past few weeks on a fact-finding mission which I hope will begin what I think will be very important work of our subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services.

In this time of asymmetrical warfare, this time of great uncertainty for military families and, frankly, for reservists around the country, where we have a war on terrorism where we have extreme PERSTEMPO and extreme OPSTEMPO, where families are double deployed around the world, it is important for us to understand what the trauma of this deployment means to military families, and I think it is very important for us to understand that the American people are not only supporting our military with the best training and the best leadership and the best materiel that we can possibly have, but we are also supporting the most important component of military families, the families themselves, by making sure that we have the kinds of programs that are found in the private sector. They are called employee-assisted programs.

And they do everything from helping families find child care, to helping to find elder care, to finding hospices when they have a sick family member, but also in the area that is very troubling, of domestic violence, to find a way to make sure that families are protected with anonymity and respect, to make sure that spouses of families do not have to worry about the chain of command when they are considering what they do about family violence in their own family.

So I thought it was very, very important that we took this trip to Fort Bragg. Fort Bragg was just a part of the problem. It is not about Fort Bragg or the Army. It is about the military. And I am very proud of the leadership that the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) has shown, and I am very proud of my friendship with the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES), the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE), and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. JEFF MILLER) who took this trip, because I think that it is important that we focus on what we can do for these military families. And that is why I rise in strong support of the Armed Forces Domestic Security Act H.R. 5590.

While the 1994 Violence Against Women Act requires certain protection orders to be enforced across State and tribal lines, it does not allow such protection orders to be enforced on Federal property or military installations. As a result, there is a gaping hole in our protection system. Military installations have become a place where there are no penalties for violating a protection order issued by a State or tribal court. The Armed Forces Domestic Security Act is intended to address this obvious oversight.

When a civilian order of protection is issued against, or to protect, a service member, there needs to be a system in place to enforce that order when the service member resides on a military installation. That system must be effective whether the order is issued by the State, tribe, or territory where the service member resides. It also must work in instances where the military installation lies in overlapping civilian jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, domestic violence is a complex and tragic issue, and this bill is not intended to be a cure-all or any kind of instant-fix measure for domestic violence; however, while there is no single solution to this problem, closing this loophole that has essentially made military installations a free zone for batterers is a necessary and common-sense step. A judge in North Carolina recently wrote that closing this loophole would certainly be beneficial nationwide but would be particularly helpful for judicial districts that are closely associated with a Federal facility like Cumberland County in North Carolina is with Fort Bragg.

Mr. Speaker, it would be irresponsible to allow a loophole like this to continue. I urge my colleagues to support the Armed Forces Domestic Security Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) for her leadership and her wisdom and her input.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Personnel. He made the trip possible, and his input and leadership were instrumental in getting us to this point; and he will take us further with the passage of time.

Mr. MCHUGH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I particularly thank him for his leadership and deep sense of concern on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the key question we should ask ourselves as Members of this House anytime we rise to ponder the proposal of legislation is simply, Is this bill needed? By now, as we have heard in the comments, far too many of us unfortunately have become personally acquainted with the tragic events surrounding the acts of domestic violence that occurred at Fort Bragg over this past summer. In a matter of days four military wives lost their lives and in a matter of days eight children lost a parent. Four of those children actually lost both parents. It is truly a tragic, tragic loss, one that certainly touched not only the Fort Bragg and Fayetteville communities but Army and military communities wherever they may be found.

In response, again as we have heard, Mr. Speaker, on September 30 the Subcommittee on Military Personnel of the Committee on Armed Services traveled with five of its members to try to learn a bit more firsthand about this tragic series of events. I want to pay particular respect and thanks and appreciation to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) who, along with the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE) who also joined us that day, represent the Cumberland County, Fort Bragg, and Fayetteville community; the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER), who has been a very early and very staunch proponent of addressing the demands of domestic violence in the military, who spoke so eloquently on this measure just moments ago; and also the gentleman from Florida (Mr. JEFF MILLER), who traveled with us that day, giving up their personal time for this extracurricular event that all of them collectively felt was so demanding and so deserving of our attention.

Simply put, today's military is a much different structure than it was even a few years ago. Particularly as a result of the volunteer force, we now have generally a much younger military, in this case of course a much younger Army, many more families than perhaps we have seen in the past. And when coupled with the fact that across military installations of all the services, some 70 percent of those families routinely live off base, we have found ourselves with a very, very difficult situation, that of addressing the concerns and demands of acts of domestic violence across the border of that specific military installation and the adjoining civilian community.

The Members have heard about the loophole. I happen to have been here in 1994 when I think the Congress took a very necessary, very bold, and a very appropriate step in passage of the Violence Against Women Act; but it did, as the speaker heard, create I think an unintentional, certainly a very unnecessary and very unworthy loophole, that of enforcement of civilian protection orders as issued outside the bases and their applicability on those military installations. And in our discussions with the victims, particularly of military violence, a very emotional, nearly 3-hour meeting that we held with previous victims in the Fort Bragg community, one of the primary concerns we heard about was that lack of continuity, that lack of guidance and clear legal authority to enforce domestic protection orders that were secured within the civilian community on the military base. And this legislation is intended to be, I might add, a first step, a first step towards erasing those boundaries and those barriers that exist.

The gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER), I think, very appropriately noted that this is not just a Fort Bragg problem, it is not just an Army problem. She noted it is a military problem. I would respectfully suggest, as she knows, and I am not correcting her by any means, that this is a societal problem; and when we have a circumstance as we do here where the societal approaches, the civilian approaches, to domestic violence are not coordinated adequately enough with the military community, people suffer; and as happened at Fort Bragg this past summer, people lose their lives.

So we are intending to continue forward with this effort to initiate a series of legislative remedies to ensure that these kinds of circumstances are not allowed to go forward into the future, but for now I think this is a very, very appropriate step, a very, very important initial step toward protecting those who sadly are least in a position to protect themselves.

So a final word of thanks to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) for her leadership; to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) and his deep, deep concern and for his initiative on bringing this measure to the floor at this moment; and to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. JEFF MILLER); and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE) for joining us that day and to I hope all of the Members of this House for their vote in support of this very, very worthy piece of legislation.

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I really appreciate the comments of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I want to thank again the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) for his leadership and for opening his community to us. I specifically want to take a moment of personal privilege to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) for setting up this first meeting and encouraging us to work together on future meetings.

When we were in Fayetteville, we had a jam-packed day, a day that was meant to be a day at home with our constituents. We had all traveled in late Sunday night, and we were going to be literally hitting the ground running; and what I was most impressed with was we found ourselves with the opportunity to talk to victims of domestic violence, and there were meant to be five or six women that were meant to come, and in fact eight showed up, and each one of them I thought deserved the respect to have themselves heard.

I really appreciate my colleagues, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES), facilitating that. It took 3 hours for us to sit there. Very painful stories, very emotional stories, very, very private stories; and I was I think honored not only to hear those stories and to understand what we could do as legislators on the Federal level to help support these spouses and their families, but I was very proud to sit with the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) especially since a lot of those women felt, I think, that they did not want to tell that story to strangers or to perhaps a man that they did not know.

But I think it really speaks a lot for his leadership on the committee and what we can do in the future because I think that they were very thrilled to talk to him and to me to make sure these stories are out so that this does not happen again. I think we all agree this is a societal problem. But the military in this country has led the country in many different ways, specifically in an area of civil rights. It was the military that led the ability for blacks and whites to work together in the military. And I am hoping on this issue of domestic violence, where we have so many families at risk in this country day to day, that our military families can lead, that we can find good programming for them across the military, not just one branch, that we can find the best practices, that we can work together to make sure that it is not only authorized but appropriated and that we can do the best for them because we know that they are trying to do the best for us every day.

And with that I urge my colleagues to support the Armed Forces Domestic Security Act.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAYES. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) who also, if I might add, celebrated his birthday in Fayetteville last Sunday night. So we appreciate his sacrifice in that regard too.

Mr. MCHUGH. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and pointing out to the Nation that I am older. I appreciate that.

I just wanted to very briefly say, first of all, I deeply from the bottom of my heart thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) for her gracious comments and to state for the record two things: first of all, this Nation should know that she intended to go to Fort Bragg on her own if that was necessary. Fortunately for us who gained from her participation, we were able to put together a subcommittee visit; but her concern is unequalled, certainly unsurpassed with respect to the cherished feeling she has towards the military and, in this instance, towards those who are the victims of violence.

I should also note, as she did, that we had more spouses show up that day than had been scheduled. It was a very tight schedule. It began at 6:30 in the morning with the first event that some of us were scheduled to do and went through until we left that early evening. She was very insistent and very appropriately so that we stay and listen to all of those spouses who again as she had noted had made the very painful decision to come and to share with us their stories that were so emotional. I have rarely, in my much older life including that recent birthday, spent a more moving, more emotional 3 hours. And thanks to her, we were able to hear all of them. So I just wanted to rise again and to underscore my deep admiration for her and to underscore as well the fact that military families have a real hero in the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER).

Mr. HAYES. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute for closing remarks.

Let me again thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) for her very well put, meaningful words; and I identify myself with her remarks. I would too like to take a brief moment to identify with and to thank personally the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE), my geographic Congress mate in the seventh, and myself in the eighth, for his participation and his consistent and constant service on behalf of our military in our State of North Carolina.

□ 1615

The moving testimony of these women, I cannot begin to tell my colleagues how heartwarming, but also how moving this testimony was. As I recall, one lady came on her own expense all the way from Kansas City. And in particular, one lady, Laura Sandler, I would like to pay particular tribute and thanks to her, whose written testimony I think burned a real moving, heartfelt impression on all of our hearts as she had the courage, along with her other colleagues, to come forward and bring us into a much clearer understanding of this problem.

Again, thanks to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH) and all of those involved, and I would strongly encourage unanimous support of this legislation.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5590.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

--- HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. HAYES. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at noon tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will alert Members to the possible resumption of legislative business later today, but any record votes, if ordered, would be taken tomorrow. The entertaining of Special Order speeches would be without prejudice to the possibility of further legislative business.

H. CON. RES. 486

Whereas over 30,300 people will be diagnosed with pancreatic cancer this year in the United States.

Whereas the mortality rate for pancreatic cancer is 99 percent, the highest of any cancer;

Whereas pancreatic cancer is the 4th most common cause of cancer death for men and women in the United States;

Whereas there are no early detection methods and minimal treatment options for pancreatic cancer;

Whereas when symptoms of pancreatic cancer generally present themselves, it is too late for an optimistic prognosis, and the average survival rate of those diagnosed with metastasis disease is only 3 to 6 months;

Whereas pancreatic cancer does not discriminate by age, gender, or race, and only 4 percent of patients survive beyond 5 years;

Whereas the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network (PanCAN), the only national advocacy organization for pancreatic cancer patients, facilitates awareness, patient support, professional education, and advocacy for pancreatic cancer research funding, with a view to ultimately developing a cure for pancreatic cancer; and

Whereas the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network has requested that the Congress designate November has requested that the Congress designate November as Pancreatic Cancer Awareness Month in order to educate communities across the Nation about pancreatic cancer and the need for research funding, early detection methods, effective treatments, and prevention programs: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress supports the goals and ideals of Pancreatic Cancer Awareness Month.

Amend the title so as to read: "A concurrent resolution supporting the goals and ideals of Pancreatic Cancer Awareness Month".

SENATE—Tuesday, October 15, 2002

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Lord and Sovereign of the United States, we come to you in prayer with two things gripping our minds. We have a new realization of the force of evil in our world. We are stunned by the continued evil acts of the cowardly, but cunning sniper who has taken the lives of nine people in our area. Dear God, intervene and bring this person or persons to justice. Comfort and sustain the victims' families. Reading the news and watching on television the aftermath of the massive attack of terrorism in Bali, further convinces us of our battle against an evil, world-wide terrorist movement. Lord, help us to deal with this insidious treachery. At the same time, Pakistan boils with anti-American sentiment. And we seem to have made little progress in negotiation with Iraq.

All this brings us to a deeper reliance on You. Quiet our turbulent hearts; renew our dependence on You. Thank You for the great women and men of this Senate. Strengthen them, give them courage, inspire their discernment, guide their decisions. With them we fall on the knees of our hearts and commit our lives to You. Reign supreme in this chamber and in the mind and soul of every Senator. You are our Lord and Saviour and are greater than evil. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable HARRY REID led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 15, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REID thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now begin a period of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11 a.m., with Senators allowed to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

In my capacity as a Senator from Nevada, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order for the quorum call is rescinded.

In my capacity as the Senator from Nevada, I ask consent that the order with respect to the consideration of H.R. 3295, the Election Reform legislation, be modified to reflect consideration of the conference report beginning at 3 p.m., Tuesday, October, today, under the same conditions as the previous order, with all other aspects of this order remaining in effect.

There being no objection, that is the order.

I also ask consent, in my capacity as a Senator from Nevada, the Senate stand in recess until 1 p.m. today; and at 1 p.m. the Senate proceed to a period of morning business until 2 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, and at 2 p.m. the Senate stand in recess until 3 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 10:34 a.m., recessed until 1:05 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. BENNETT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from Utah, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, it is my understanding that there is an order for the Senate to stand in recess between 2 o'clock and 3 o'clock today. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate be in a period of morning business until 3 o'clock, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ESTABLISHING PRIORITIES

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I come to the floor today to talk a little bit about where we are and, hopefully, about where we are going, and, more particularly, some comments about energy, which I think is one of the real important points that we must talk about.

First, let me say that certainly we find ourselves in a difficult position as we close this session. I think we have brought ourselves into that position by not moving more quickly on some of the issues that have been out there and that now we desire to have passed.

It is very difficult to resolve some of these issues in the ending moments of a session. Certainly, we are not going to be here much longer. Clearly, we are going to go into a recess before the election. Particularly those who are running are very anxious to do that. And, indeed, to be fair to voters, people who are running should be out in the country talking about their positions.

So it seems to me what we have before us is the chore of putting some priorities on the many issues that are out there and making the determination as to which of those are going to be the issues that we emphasize and indeed move to finish. And there are lots of them out there.

We can talk about the issue of bankruptcy which, of course, is something that has been ongoing for a long time. We have not been able to come together on the fairness of that. We can talk about reinsurance for construction, particularly for large buildings.

That issue is very important to the economy. It is one we have not been able to resolve, mostly because of a liability issue.

Certainly, an unemployment extension is something that needs to be dealt with, as it expires in the fairly near future. On the other hand, the points of view are quite different in terms of the most effective and efficient way to do that.

We have Medicare givebacks, as it is called, which is in relation to taking up the slack in hospital costs in provider payments over a period of time, which, if not corrected, very likely will cause some providers not to deal with Medicare patients. It is very important. I happen to be from a rural State. There are activities related to that which specifically have to do with rural health care. And we would like to do that.

And there are other issues. But there are a great many items, of course, which, when you come to the end of the session, everybody wants to take a look at. These are all items that have not been done during the year, and when putting them together it can become a very haphazard kind of approach. Frankly, I think the leadership responsibility, and the responsibility for all of us, is to cut through that and to establish some priorities and talk about those things that need to be done. It sounds increasingly as if we will be back in a lame duck session after the election is over to finish some of the items. Most apparent among them are appropriations bills.

We do not have a budget. It is the first time in many years we have not had a budget. A budget is very important, not simply because there would be a budget but because it is a process for holding down spending. And if the appropriations bills exceed the budget that has been agreed to, then you can ask for a point of order, and then have to have more votes to pass it than you do without it. So it is not just the idea of a budget for the sake of a budget; it is a mechanism that helps hold down spending.

I think we have passed just 1 out of 13 of those appropriations bills. Hopefully, in the next 2 days, we will pass another. We must pass the Defense appropriations bill, in my judgment, because the need for defense dollars certainly has increased over last year. And the continuing resolution we will pass will simply extend the authority of the other appropriations bills we passed last year at their levels.

So we have some items that have to be done. I think we are going to be dealing, of course, with election reform. It is very important. It is hardly our biggest priority, in my view, because it does not apply to this election. But it will apply in the next election. We have some time in that regard. Nevertheless, it is on the agenda.

As I said, we are going to be dealing with the Defense appropriations bill. It is a must-do piece of legislation, in my opinion. Certainly, then, in order to continue to have the Government operate, we have to pass a CR. I suppose maybe there are other items with which we need to deal. In my view, those seem to be the items that are necessary and that we need to do.

One of the issues out there that has been difficult—but I think we have worked at it for a very long time—is an energy policy. We have not had an energy policy in this country for a very long time. We need an energy policy. We need it particularly now in terms of the turmoil in the Middle East. A good deal of our energy is imported from the Middle East. We need an energy policy now because of our economic condition. Energy is certainly a big part of our economy and our security. Those are two issues that are most important to all of us. And to do that well, we need an energy policy.

The President asked for an energy policy nearly 2 years ago—a year and a half ago. He outlined an energy policy that he sent to us. We have been all this time trying to come up with our own energy policy. Certainly, we have a broad energy policy. We have talked about lots of things that go into it. We talked about production. We talked about the availability of energy sources.

We have gotten ourselves into the position of importing nearly 60 percent of our energy. And that situation is very iffy because of the condition we are now facing. So we do have to do some things.

We talk about production in the energy bill. We talk about production in terms of encouraging the production of oil, production of coal, the production of gas. Some of the proposals have to do with access to public lands where, such as in my State, for example, 50 percent of the State belongs to the Federal Government. And in many of the Western States more than that belongs to the Federal Government.

So we have to devise a plan where we can take advantage of those resources and, at the same time, of course, take care of the environment. We can do that. And we have shown we can do that.

We are particularly interested in coal as being a source of energy that we pursue more. People are in favor of that. We have to do more about clean air. We have to do some research on coal. We have to do what is necessary to provide clean-coal energy. More than 55 percent of electricity is now produced from coal. And 95 percent of our fossil fuel is coal. So coal is very important to our energy use.

In the bill there are a number of items that have to do with encouraging the clean use of coal, whether it be in research or whether it be incentives to build new plants or upgrade existing plants to make them more clean, including existing plant credits.

Oil and gas: Of course oil provides about 40 percent of our Nation's energy. Natural gas is providing more than it did in the past. But, nonetheless, we need to continue to work on that.

Oil has been a controversial issue, of course. The idea that you open up less than 2,000 acres out of millions has seemed not to be acceptable by environmentalists. Another opportunity would be, perhaps, to go from private land to cross some of the ANWR with a right-of-way. I don't know whether that will be acceptable.

Nevertheless, I think we have to move forward. And we have to have more geophysical research. We are working on that. We can do something about rental payments. All of these areas of concern encourage production.

Along with this, we have to continue to look at conservation: conservation in homes, conservation in the kinds of equipment that we have in our homes. We have to also take a look at automobiles to do something with CAFE standards to reduce energy use. But there are many things we can do in terms of conservation, and indeed we should.

One of the areas in which I have been particularly interested and one that is now under debate—and I don't know where we are in terms of the timing—is the electrical provisions. That is very important. All of us, obviously, depend on electricity in our homes and in our businesses. We have had electricity very reliably for a good long time. We found last year in the California experience some difficulties in reliability brought about for various reasons. Nevertheless, it raised the specter of unreliable electric service. So we deal with that in the bill, some reliability provisions.

We are changing the way we do electricity. In the past, you had an electric company that served an area in terms of its customers and also generated its own power and did its own distribution. Now we are moving to a situation where you have generators that are not in the distribution business and sell their energy where it is needed. It is probably a very efficient way to do things, but it is a change. During the process of that change, there have to be some changes in the rules as well—access to transportation and transmission, probably over time a transmission system that is made up of regional distribution organizations off nationwide transmission lines, for example.

As there is more market in the sale of electricity, there has to be transparency so we avoid some of the kinds of issues that allegedly occurred in California, and we can do that. There are things we need to do there, as well as in conservation, in terms of being able to renovate generation plants to make them more efficient without having to go back and redo the whole generator.

We are talking about mergers, doing away with some of the old laws with respect to mergers and dealing with energy as it exists now in the more modern phase and many of the things with which we need to deal. I hope we are able to do that.

One of them is Indian energy. There is a proposition in the bill that allows for easier access to Indian lands, should they want to do that, which is good for them economically as well as providing more energy for the country.

I mentioned clean coal. We have been doing a good deal more research so that coal can be used that way. We have talked about nuclear power. Nuclear power certainly is one of the cleaner powers we have, and indeed nearly 20 percent of the energy in Illinois, for example, is nuclear. So it is an opportunity for us to do many of the things we need to do and can do in a way that is acceptable, particularly to the environment.

Renewables have been one of the real areas of controversy. Renewables now, not including hydro, produce about 1 percent of our energy, our electric energy. So it is very small. But the opportunity to grow, of course, whether it be wind energy, whether it be Sun energy, whether it be other kinds of renewables, is out there. The question is, Do you mandate renewables that cause the consumers to have to pay more at this time or do you give incentives so that we can go forward in that way?

I always remember years ago—of course, Wyoming is an energy-oriented State. We had a meeting there. I believe the speaker was from Europe, but he made the point—and I think it is an excellent point—that through time we have never run out of a fuel; we move from one fuel to another as we find new, more efficient fuel. We used to have wood. Now we don't use wood. Then we had coal. Then we had gas. And we will continue to do that as science looks for new ways to provide energy. We need to do that.

Ethanol has been one of the issues as well: How much requirement is included in the ethanol and what percentage of it is in gas and so on. Those are the kinds of issues we have talked about a great deal.

Part of the bill also has to do with the pipeline from Alaska for natural gas so we can have that kind of resource available to us.

Many of these things are being considered in the tax title where there will be incentives for the kinds of production we need for the kinds of research we need and the things that can happen.

So we are down to, frankly, a stressful point in terms of timing. We have worked on this energy policy now for the better part of 2 years. We have worked on it here in the committee for a long time. Finally, unfortunately, it was pulled from the committee and put on the floor without a committee bill. I think we were 4 weeks here on the floor talking about energy. So we spent a good deal of time on it.

Obviously, different parts of the country have different points of view as to how energy bills ought to be structured and how they impact different parts of the country. Some States are more production oriented; others are more user oriented. And there are some differences there.

There is always a conflict about how much authority goes to FERC, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, as opposed to the States. That, of course, is one of the reasons that many of us are in favor of getting the regional transmission organizations going, so that the decisions that have to be made interstate in these areas can be made largely by the States and they come to an agreement as to how you do that.

Also, there are always some difficulties, of course, between the municipalities and co-ops as opposed to investor-owned utilities. It is not an easy project, but it is one that is very important to our comfort, very important to our economy, very important to our security, and one that has had a great deal of work on it this year.

I guess we will probably know tomorrow whether that committee that has been dealing with trying to bring together the House and the Senate will be able to put forth a bill. We are hopeful that indeed they will. Of course, it may lap over into a lame duck session, but that is fine. I suppose in the worst instance—at least I think it is the worst instance—if we don't do anything, then we can take this work and put it back into next year's efforts. But we do need to be more aware of doing the things in this body that need to be done. And, of course, we don't all agree, but we need to find ways to move forward.

We have found ourselves in the last several months without much forward movement, without much activity—still haven't done homeland security over relatively small differences of view.

I am hopeful that as we enter into these literally last few hours here before we have some kind of recess, we can set some priorities collectively, do those things that must be done and not try to do everything haphazardly, which will obviously result, if we do too many things to move forward—do what we have to do, go do our elections, come back, and then we will have to take up what is yet undone.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

ECONOMIC NEWS

Mr. BENNETT. Madam President, last Friday the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, along with the minority leader in the House, Congressman DICK GEPHARDT, presided over an economic summit and discussed the state of the economy. Since that summit was called, the Dow Jones average has gone up close to 800 points. I would like to congratulate them for their wisdom in calling such a summit and producing that result. I hope they will have another one and we will have the Dow go up another 800 points.

I was not planning to talk about this, but when I was on my way to lunch, I checked and discovered that at that time, at least, the Dow was at 8200, whereas it was down in the low 7000s just a week ago.

I know this will come as something of a disappointment to those who are hoping in the election that the economy will be seen as terribly under water and will do their very best to try to stir up a sense of blame for the lousy economy and blame it on one party or the other.

I am encouraged by the wisdom of the American people. According to the latest polls, the majority of the American people, who have a view on the economy and where it is, understand that we are not in a recession anymore. We are, in fact, in a recovery; all of the rhetoric is to the contrary here on the floor of the Senate.

Secondly, the recession that preceded this recovery was caused primarily by the business cycle and was not caused by President Bush's election or any other political event. As I have said here on the floor before, the business cycle has not been repealed. We would like to think we could repeal the business cycle. Indeed, if we knew how, both parties would do it because neither party wants to go into an election situation where the economy appears soft. So both parties—if they understood how to repeal the business cycle—would quickly take the steps to do that.

As a matter of fact, however, as we look at it throughout our history, Congress's record—indeed the administration's record—has not been all that good in terms of dealing with the business cycle. Usually, when we get into the business of trying to outguess it, we make things worse rather than better. I remember reading a book by Paul Johnson where he was talking about the Great Depression and the great efforts being expended by the New Deal. He said the efforts expended by the New Deal administration in the 1930s made the Great Depression last longer and go deeper than would have been the case if they had done absolutely nothing.

I commented on that to some Ph.D. economists and said that I understand that is heresy, and they said: No, quite the contrary, Senator. That is basically what has been understood and is being taught in the schools of economics around the country—that the intervention in an attempt to override the marketplace and the laws of economics, however well-meaning on the part of the Government, actually makes things worse rather than better.

As we look at our last recession, we know now pretty clearly what caused it. It was the bubble of speculation that surrounded the high-tech industry, and people got carried away with their conviction that the bull market was never going to turn to a bear; that we were always going to be going up, up, and up—as Lucy wanted to in the Charlie Brown cartoon. Charlie said, “Life has its ups and downs.” She said, “I want nothing but ups.” There were plenty of people in the 1990s looking at the market and the economy and saying: We want nothing but ups.

Sometimes that cannot be accomplished. We got out ahead of ourselves—there was too much capacity. The business cycle kicked in, as it always does, and there we were in a recession. The slowdown began—we now know—in the midyear of 2000. I remember, with some interest, because there was an election going on, there were those who criticized then-Governor Bush, who was saying that we were going into a slowdown. They said: No, no, we are not going into a slowdown. You are trying to pretend that it is for political purposes, and isn't it terrible for you to be saying there is a slowdown underway when, indeed, we are still having ups, ups, and ups.

We now know that then-Governor Bush was right; we were going into a slowdown in the last half of 2000. It turned into a recession that lasted for three quarters—the last three quarters of 2001. Then we started coming out of it. Well, those numbers don't add up. The recession started in the beginning of 2001. We have now had five quarters of growth—admittedly, not as strong as we would like to have. Admittedly, there are sectors of the economy that are still mired in recession. Talk to the people in the hospitality industry. Travel has not come back since September 11 to the degree that it was there before—particularly business travel. Airplanes are full, but the airplanes are not making any money because in order to get them full, the airlines are heavily discounting fares. So that portion of the economy is not doing well.

Housing has done extremely well. Consumer spending stays up because household income has held. The sense of wealth has held because people's houses are worth more. They have lost money in the stock market, but they have seen equity increases in housing, primarily because of lower interest rates. I think the lesson is that we can get carried away with our economic analysis. We can look back and say the economy boomed in the nineties because Bill Clinton was elected President or we can say, no, the economy boomed because Newt Gingrich was the elected Speaker.

The fact is, we need more humility as politicians and we need to understand the economy boomed because the American entrepreneurs and business people did a good job. Those of us in Congress and those in the White House contributed to it basically to the extent that we got out of the way and let it happen. Now, we need to have some of that same understanding.

I would like to pass the terrorism insurance bill. I think that would go a long way toward bringing the commercial real estate sector of the economy back. That sector is hurting, and one of the reasons is that people will not engage in major commercial enterprises if they cannot get terrorism insurance. We have been sitting on that bill in this body for close to a year. We passed it. It has gone to conference. The conferees have not been allowed to produce a product yet. I hope the majority leader will work with the conferees in allowing them to bring a conference report to the floor before we adjourn. I think that is one thing we can do that would make the recovery more robust than it is.

Basically, Madam President, I think we need, as I say, a little humility as politicians, and we need to understand the economy is very sound, very strong, and it is coming back—but a little more steady as she goes rather than a sense of panic is what is called for.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AKAKA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

JOBS FOR AMERICAN FAMILIES

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the state of our economy. I was heartened to read in this morning's Washington Post that the administration is finally acknowledging our economy is in trouble. Of course, it came as the Republican National Committee was writing a memo to send to its campaign, reporting that internal polling shows the economy is the most important issue to voters. Surprise. It seems the Bush administration is more interested in responding to recent poll numbers than responding to the economic indicators that have been staring them in the face for more than a year.

The economic statistics are most troubling. Business investment is down. The annual growth of business investment is 7.6 percent, the weakest business investment trend under any administration in the past 50 years. Consumer confidence is down. Between January of 2001 and August of 2002, consumer confidence dropped by nearly one-fifth. The stock market is down, as everyone knows. Between January 2001 and September 2002, stocks listed on the New York stock market exchange and the Nasdaq markets lost $5.2 trillion in market value, a loss of more than 35 percent, or more than $9 billion per day.

The 23 percent average annual decline in the S&P average index under the current administration is the sharpest decline since the Hoover administration. Last month was the worst September performance for the Dow Jones industrial average since 1937.

The Congressional Budget Office said last Friday the Federal Government 2002 deficit will hit $157 billion. This onslaught of red ink is truly remarkable. It is being driven by the largest percentage drop in individual tax revenues since 1947. That is over 50 years ago.

Let me give the folks a little Yankee economic wisdom. People pay less in taxes when their earnings go down. We are now spending Social Security revenues to balance our budgets for the first time since 1997. Ninety-four percent of the surpluses projected when President Bush took office have already disappeared. That is a $5.3 trillion drop in just 2 years. If the past is any guide, we can expect higher interest rates in the future as the Government competes with the private sector for capital.

With all of this, I was stunned to receive a letter from the Congressional Budget Office late Friday which indicates even more layoffs of American workers may be around the corner. These layoffs can be attributed to the lack of commitment from the administration to fully fund our Federal highway program. The CBO letter made clear that the continuing resolution, which the other body is working on now, will have the effect of cutting future spending on highway construction jobs by over $4.1 billion and cutting current spending by $1.1 billion.

I quote the letter of October 11, 2002, from the Director of CBO regarding the amendment being proposed by the other body:

With the amendment, CBO would reduce its estimate of 2003 obligations and outlays under a full-year continuing resolution by $4.1 billion and $1.1 billion, respectively.

I am convinced that we need more leadership from the White House on the issue of jobs for American families. Our attention is constantly being diverted by the White House talk of war. Unemployment in September stood at 8.1

million Americans. This does not count those who have given up hunting for work. That is 1 million more unemployed as compared to a year ago. Families whose unemployment benefits have long since run out are focused on how they will pay their rent or make their mortgage payments or, even worse, where they will get their very next meal.

Construction jobs are good jobs. Each $1 billion spent on highway projects creates 47,500 full-time jobs. These jobs help the entire economy, not just the transportation sector. The cut in funding highlighted by the CBO letter means nearly 200,000 Americans will not find gainful employment, which they could find if it was better handled.

According to the Department of Transportation, our network of highways contributes, on an average, one-quarter of the yearly productive growth rate in the United States.

To quote the Department of Transportation:

This highlights the highway network's importance to maintaining economic growth.

The White House needs to listen to its own transportation department. The U.S. Department of Transportation says for each $1 billion invested in highways, almost 8,000 direct on-site highway construction jobs are created. For each $1 billion invested, around 20,000 supply industry jobs are created. For each $1 billion invested, around 15,000 jobs are supported within the general economy as highway construction employees spend their wages.

I say to the White House, devote at least some attention away from Iraq and to getting Americans back to work. I urge the White House to support funding in the continuing resolution which allows us spending at the rate of $31.8 billion, equal to last year's level.

As chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, I will work with the congressional leadership to assure maximum funding possible for the reauthorization of the transportation bill.

I feel sad today when I look at the economy and think what it could be or should be; yet we are spending all our time on an important issue, no question, about the status of Iraq. But I hope this body will turn its attention now to economics and the problems we are having and those that will lie ahead if we do not take action now.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, last week we completed our debate on Iraq. It was a difficult debate, but at the end we were able to come together to speak with a large degree of consensus on an issue of national security. To Democrats, security means more than national security and homeland security. It also means economic security, retirement security, the security of knowing that if you lose your job, you can find a new one, and if you get sick, you can get health care. And it means the security of knowing that those goals are not being undermined by poor economic leadership and ideologically driven economic leaders.

The news, when it comes to America's economic security today, has not been good. This chart shows one of the many ways with which to determine the state of the economy. Last week, the Wall Street Journal reported that we are experiencing the worst market since the 1930s. This is not just a bear market, it is a grizzly bear market. The broad Standard & Poor's 500 Stock Index has now lost nearly half of its value. Since President Bush took office, Americans have seen the markets lose $5.7 trillion in value. That is $9.5 billion a day that has come out of the market. This red piece of the pie chart is an approximation of what has been lost. About one-third of the entire market capitalization has been lost in less than 2 years—$5.7 trillion.

Here is what that means to a person with $100,000 in a 401(k) invested in the Standard & Poor's 500 Index when President Bush took office. The value of their investment has now decreased by $35,000. Many who were invested more aggressively have lost much more. If you had $100,000 in January of 2001, you now have $65,000 in September of 2002.

A lot of Americans who are lucky enough to have a little bit of money saved and invested are seeing their children's college investments and their own nest eggs disappear. We have recently seen an increase in the number of 60- to 70-year-olds in the workforce. These people are not wondering when they will be able to retire. Now they are wondering if they will be able to retire.

This chart shows what has happened in the job market in the last 2 years. The people wondering if they will be able to retire are the lucky ones. To even think about retiring, you have to have a job. Since President Bush took office, unemployment has jumped by 1.5 percent. More than 2 million people have lost their jobs. These are private sector jobs. We started in January of 2001 at 111 million jobs actually being held. We have now dropped from 111 million to 109 million in about 18 months. Many of those who lost their jobs are having trouble finding new work. Nearly 1.5 million people have been unemployed now for over 6 months. These people have not just lost their jobs, they are starting to lose hope.

This chart shows what we had at the beginning of the year 2001. About 648,000 people were unemployed for more than 26 weeks. That number has now jumped from 648,000 to 1,585,000 people. Now they are also losing their unemployment insurance. Unemployment insurance is supposed to provide temporary help to people who lose their jobs to tide them over until they find new ones. But now many who lost their jobs in the months after September 11 are losing their benefits. Now they are trying to find a job in an economy even worse than the one that had caused them to lose their job in the first place.

This chart shows what has happened. In 1992, 1.4 million workers had exhausted their unemployment benefits. Now, in the year 2002, we expect that number to be exceeded by 800,000—the number of people who will experience the expiration of their unemployment benefits.

The market is in steep decline. People are losing jobs. People are unable to find jobs. There is a daily drumbeat of negative economic news. There is no question—any one of these charts points out very clearly—Americans are hurting.

But this administration does not understand their pain because it does not see a problem. On September 5, president Bush said confidently:

I am optimistic about our economy. I am optimistic about job growth.

The next day—the very next day—the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that in the previous month manufacturing lost 68,000 jobs and retail businesses lost another 55,000.

On September 14, we learned that because homeowners were having such a hard time paying bills, home foreclosure rates reached their highest rate in 30 years.

A couple of days later, Lawrence Lindsey, Director of the National Economic Council, said:

There's a lot of good news out there. We have challenges as well. But given those challenges, I think the economy is doing very, very well.

On September 24, we learned that the poverty rate increased for the first time in 8 years with 1.3 million more Americans falling into poverty. We also learned that median household income fell for the first time in a decade.

The next day, Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill told us:

The latest indicators are good.

On September 29, the census reported that the number of Americans without health insurance rose yet again—this time by 1.4 million people to 41.2 million. Not only are low- and middle-income families losing income because of the skyrocketing price of health care premiums and prescription drug costs, they are now losing their health insurance.

Two days later, the President said:

I think the economy is strong. There are some rough spots, but we will deal with it.

Last Thursday, Secretary O'Neill and Secretary Evans had a joint press conference. Secretary O'Neill said:

We are on a bumpy road to recovery, but the direction is still up.

Secretary Evans added:

I am one that is pleased with the recovery that is now underway.

The next day—the very next day—this is what we saw: Consumer confidence and consumer spending depicted in this chart both falling, retail sales taking their worst drop since November of last year, and consumer sentiment dropping to levels last seen in the fall of 1993.

This chart shows the consumer expectations and what has happened over the course of the last 6 months. In May, consumer expectations were relatively high at 92.7. Many thought the economy was going fairly well and thought it was going to continue to do better. That index dropped to 87. It went down to 81 in July, and then down to 80. Now it is all the way down to 72. We have lost almost 25 percent of consumer confidence in just 5 months.

"The direction is up." That is what the Bush administration said. Optimistic about job growth, the latest indicators look good, the economy is doing very well. Some rough spots? I don't know where these guys are living, but it must be somewhere within the neighborhood of oblivious. When it comes to America's economic problems, this administration is woefully out of touch.

A couple of weeks ago, the President said:

I spend a lot of my time worried about the job security of our fellow citizens.

Last week, it became even more clear that this administration's focus is not the economy. The White House announced that the President will be hitting the campaign trail for 14 straight days before the November 5 election. In fact, I am told he will be coming to South Dakota—my State—at least 2 of those 14 days.

I would ask President Bush to do one thing: Cancel the political trips and spend less time trying to save jobs for Republican politicians and more time trying to save the jobs of average Americans.

Unfortunately, not only are the President and his advisers out of touch with our economic problem, but they are out of step when it comes to solutions. They have seemingly pursued ideological goals at the expense of sound economics, and the American people will pay the price.

Last year, it became clear that our economy was starting to slow. Every objective economist told us tax cuts could help solve the problem. But they had to be the right kind of tax cuts. They had to boost consumption by getting money into the hands of people who would spend it—people with moderate incomes. It had to be done now, affecting the economy now, and affecting people's incomes now. At the same time, we were told that whatever we did, we should make sure it didn't do any long-term fiscal damage.

Here is what the Democrats said: let us pass a bill to provide immediate tax relief for all families. Let us do that now—just as the economists proposed we do it. It included a tax cut check. Unlike the plan that passed, it made sure every taxpayer, including those who pay only payroll taxes, would get one. It would have also reduced the 15-percent tax rate—the rate paid by all income-tax payers—to 10 percent, and it would have done it permanently. It would have been fair, fiscally responsible, and stimulative.

Instead of passing that responsible plan, the President and his advisers insisted on a plan that had far less immediate tax relief but had a cost that explodes to $250 billion in the year 2011 alone. Smart tax relief for everyone was held hostage by the President and his advisers to a massive tax cut for the very few at the very top.

Moderate earners got their $300 immediate rebate check, but not until millionaires got a tax cut equal to that $300 rebate check every other day. Now, after going from record surpluses to real deficits, we are seeing just how bad a decision that was.

After September 11 dealt another blow to our already staggering economy, we all agreed that the American economy needed a stimulus. So Democrats and Republicans of the Senate asked the experts, including Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and former Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, what are the most effective steps we can take to shore up our economy? Here is what they told us: Put money into the hands of low- and middle-income workers. They are the ones who will spend it quickly. Make sure that workers who have lost their jobs receive unemployment benefits, and cut taxes for businesses, but limit the tax cuts to those who actually help create jobs.

Finally, they said our plan must be affordable and temporary. After all, the baby boomers start retiring in less than a decade, and we shouldn't be taking on major long-term spending or revenue obligations that will make it even more difficult to meet our responsibilities to Social Security and Medicaid.

That was the advice we received.

What did this administration propose? They proposed permanently eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax. House Republicans went a step further and proposed making the alternative minimum tax cut retroactive. Incredibly, that one provision would have given $250 million in one check from the U.S. taxpayers to the Enron Corporation. That is right—$250 million from every taxpayer in America to none other than the Enron Corporation.

That had nothing to do with stimulus. To this day, I am not sure what it had to do with. Instead of a temporary business investment incentive, they insisted on a 3-year bonus depreciation, which was passed. That essentially said to businesses: You don't need to invest now. Wait a couple of years and see how it goes.

The Administration and congressional Republicans have refused to provide any aid to hard-hit States which, as a result, are now being forced to cut health care and education programs. They had to be dragged kicking and screaming to an extension of unemployment insurance despite the fact that former Treasury Secretary Rubin called it "a near perfect stimulus."

When the markets were shaken by a wave of corporate scandals, it was clear we needed real reform in order to boost investor confidence. The administration again said and did the wrong thing. On January 14, 1 month after Enron declared bankruptcy, 4 days after the Justice Department confirmed that a criminal investigation of Enron had begun, Secretary O'Neill said:

Companies come and go. It's part of the genius of capitalism.

After dragging their feet on corporate accountability, this administration reluctantly came to the conclusion it had to support it. But now it is standing idly by as its appointees try to undermine the tough reforms that we passed last summer.

Last week, it was reported that Harvey Pitt, the former accounting industry lawyer chosen by President Bush to head the SEC, has given the accounting industry a veto over who will head the new Accounting Standards Board, the centerpiece of the corporate accountability law we passed.

According to news reports, Chairman Pitt blocked the appointment of John Biggs, a highly respected reformer, to head that new board at the insistence—at the insistence—of the accounting industry. If this is true, it means Harvey Pitt intends to let the same accounting industry insiders, who ran Enron and other corporations into the ground, run the new board that is supposed to prevent future Enrons.

Now, as our markets plummet and people are losing their savings, their jobs, and their confidence, this administration is again proposing the wrong remedies. Even now, they are calling to make the tax cut permanent. Regardless of how you feel about that as a policy proposal, everyone should be able to agree that new tax cuts in the year 2011 will have no immediate effect on our economy. In fact, by piling on another $4 trillion in debt during the next decade, it could hurt our economy in the short term by pushing up long-term interest rates.

Last week, House Republicans pushed through the Ways and Means Committee a completely ill-timed increase in the capital loss limit. Coming at this moment of intense market volatility, it is likely to cause wealthier investors to sell their stock, thereby forcing the market down and forcing down the value of 401(k) and other investment accounting even more.

When it comes to dealing with our economy, the President, his advisors, and congressional Republicans have put forward two kinds of ideas: old ideas and bad ideas. They have been wrong at every turn. And this dramatic failure of economic leadership is doing real harm to America's businesses and to the economic security of average working families.

America deserves better leadership, better ideas, and a real debate about economic future in this country. Democrats believe there are five areas in which we can take quick action to help our economy in the short term. These are areas where there should be absolutely no disagreement.

First, we should extend unemployment insurance. During the first Bush administration, Democrats and Republicans agreed to extend unemployment insurance three times. We were able to agree that extending unemployment benefits was the right approach to a Bush recession then. We should be able to agree that it is the right approach to a Bush recession now.

Second, we should provide immediate fiscal relief for States. Right now, States are facing severe budget shortfalls, and many are finding themselves forced to cut crucial services, such as education, health care, and transportation.

As Paul Krugman wrote in the New York Times, aid to the States will "do double duty, preventing harsh cuts in public services, with medical care for the poor the most likely target, at the same time that it boosts demand."

Third, we need to increase the minimum wage. The minimum wage has lost significant purchasing power since it was last increased in 1996. Raising the minimum wage is not only a statement of our strongly held belief that people who work full time should not live in poverty, but by putting money in the pockets of people who are most likely to spend it, it is a strong stimulus as well.

Fourth, we need a strong bill to protect pensions. Democrats have a plan that allows workers to hold employers accountable and helps workers get their money back if the people responsible for protecting their investment abuse that trust. It makes it easier for workers to sell their company's stock and diversify their holdings, and it gives workers access to independent, unbiased investment advice.

We should be able to reach quick agreement and pass a bill that includes these elements.

Fifth, we need to make sure that the strong corporate accountability bill we designed, defended, and passed is strongly enforced. The centerpiece of this legislation is an effective, reform-oriented accounting oversight board. It is time for the administration to demand that a strong leader is chosen in order to make this a strong board.

In addition, we should consider some fresh new ideas about how to get our economy moving again.

Last Friday, Senator DORGAN and others hosted a bipartisan economic forum. Unlike the White House economic summit this summer, we heard from people across the political and ideological spectrum. It was a shame the White House decided not only to decline our invitation to participate but to dismiss the forum as a publicity stunt because there were a number of interesting ideas discussed.

For example, one participant raised the possibility of a second rebate, one that would go to everyone who pays payroll or income taxes, and time-disbursed spending around the holiday season. It was also suggested that we look to improve the investment incentives we enacted earlier this year.

The problem with allowing businesses 3 years to take advantage of a tax break on new equipment purchases is that many have chose to do what we said they would do, they have chosen to wait. Because we want businesses to invest now, one of the panelists suggested making the investment incentive more immediate but more generous.

Earlier today, Minority Leader GEPHARDT laid out a series of other ideas, including a rebate aimed at lower and middle-income Americans, investments in school construction, antiterrorism, and help for States as they struggle with the health care crisis.

These are all ideas that deserve a fair hearing. We should have a real discussion about them, and other ideas, to help our economy in the short term. But we also need to focus on the long term.

As a result of what the President has signed into law, or is currently proposing, our projected surplus of $5.6 trillion becomes a $400 billion deficit. The baby boomers are getting ready to retire.

This administration did not invite Democrats to their economic summit, and they did not want to attend our economic forum. This administration needs to realize we are all in this together, and the only way we will spark our economy in the short term and strengthen it in the long term is by doing it together. Whether that conversation is part of a real economic summit or part of some other forum, it is a conversation that needs to happen.

For the last month and more, the country has been completely consumed with the debate about our proper course in Iraq. Because that debate was about issues of war and peace, and America's national security interests, it was altogether appropriate that we should have a completely focused dialogue. The President asked for that dialogue, and he demanded we have it before the election. We have met his demand. But the American people have their demands as well.

People are anxious, not just about their security against an international threat, but about the security of their jobs, the security of their retirement, the security of their health, and the strength of our national economy.

By virtually every measure, the President's economic plan has put America on the wrong track. He cannot escape responsibility by blaming the previous administration. He has had almost 2 years to generate a recovery. His economic team cannot divert attention with out-of-touch happy talk or appeals to one or two positive economic indicators. People see their income falling, their jobs disappearing, their retirement funds declining, and the cost of health care rising.

We have given the American people the debate the President says they need with regard to Iraq. Now the President should give the American people the other debate they are saying they want: a serious debate about their economic future.

I yield the floor.

Ms. STABENOW. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. DASCHLE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I thank the leader for refocusing on the critical issues of economic security at this time. When I am home in Michigan, there is no question that while people are concerned about national security, the issues in front of them every day—economic security—are at the top of their list.

I also appreciated his focus earlier this year on the issue of lowering one of the biggest costs for our seniors and small businesses and farmers, everyone in the economy, which is the cost of prescription drugs.

I am wondering, as you were talking about the President—now going on a 14-day trip in terms of campaigning—if you might agree that even just picking up the phone and asking the House of Representatives to take up the bill that we passed, S. 812, which would create more lower-cost drugs through generics and open the border to Canada and do a variety of things that would lower the prices, wouldn't be something we could call upon the President to do? And wouldn't it be true if we were simply to have the House pass that bill we passed this year, the bill that would create more competition and lower prices, we could help our families and businesses tremendously by lowering the prices of prescription drugs, which are one of the main explosions of cost to our families?

Wouldn't you agree that would be an important focus between now and when we leave?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for calling attention to yet another economic issue that could have profound consequences on the ability the average working family has today to pay their bills and to keep their standard of living. As she and I have traveled the country, and certainly traveled our States, the issue of the cost of prescription drugs comes up over and over again.

The Senate passed a prescription drug bill that would reduce the cost to every single person purchasing drugs today. It sits languishing in the House of Representatives. I hope the President will do as the Senator suggests. I hope he will pick up the phone from Air Force One, since he is traveling all over the country, and tell the Speaker: Pass the bill, give us some real opportunity for relief this year. That, to me, would be one of the many things he could do to bring about longer term economic security.

The House also did real damage earlier this year. No one has looked at the bill, but I hope some day somebody will write the real story about the atrocious legislation passed by the House in the name of prescription drugs benefits. Basically, as the Senator from Michigan knows so well, because she has become such a leader on this issue, the House of Representatives has turned over prescription drug coverage for seniors to HMOs. Given the horrific examples of abuse in our health system today, in large measure because of abuse by HMOs, can you believe anybody would say, well, that is enough. We are now going to turn over drug coverage for seniors to HMOs, to the private sector, to people who simply are unable to live up to the expectations of all seniors, of the American people?

Again, the Senator makes a very important point. We have not been able to address prescription drugs this year, in part because of their determination to turn over responsibility for drug coverage under Medicare to HMOs and their unwillingness to deal with the generic legislation passed in the Senate by an overwhelming margin last summer.

I thank the Senator for asking the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to make a couple of comments. Parliamentary inquiry: Are we going to be in morning business until 3?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

BALANCING THE RECORD

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I have heard a couple of speeches by our Democrat colleagues that are basically saying the entire fault of the economy is that of President Bush. I just have a little different view and wish to share the view somewhat to balance the record.

It is kind of interesting; we are an equal branch of Government, the legislative branch. We are an equal branch to that of the executive. For one branch of Government to say, wait a minute, the economy is bad and it is all the President's fault, I find kind of interesting. We have equal powers under the Constitution. Our powers are a little different. Maybe sometimes the President gets all the credit when things are good and all the fault when things are bad, but that is not quite accurate. Congress shares its portion of responsibility, whether it be good or bad.

We have done a couple things that are good and some things that are bad. Maybe I will point out some of those differences.

I find it interesting where one branch of Government is faulting the other and assuming that is really the solution. That is not the case.

When the recession started, I remember the stock market crashing or falling dramatically in March of 2000. I believe President Clinton was President at that time, and the market continued to fall. It rebounded a little bit in August of 2000, and then it fell a lot more and has been falling since. If you look at the precipitous rise in the stock market, it probably had risen too much too fast, and so it had some falling out to do. It has fallen; I hope it has not fallen too much. Maybe now it has bottomed out and started to increase.

Actually, the last few days have been very promising. If somebody just got into the market last Monday or Tuesday, they have made a remarkable rate of return in the last few days alone. I hope maybe the market has bottomed out. To say that is all President Bush's fault is incorrect.

The Washington Post on October 25 said:

To blame the weak American economy on Mr. Bush is nonsense.

That is a direct quote from the Washington Post, which is not exactly President Bush's biggest cheerleader. But they happen to be right.

Let me say, instead of just trying to throw rocks at the Bush administration, we should be looking at Congress. What can we do. I don't know that we can just pass a few bills and make everything rosy in the economy. Nor does everything we do have a negative impact. But I do believe we can make a difference.

Some of the things we pass can help, and some of the things we don't pass can either help or hurt. I will mention those.

I remember a person all of us respect, Chairman Greenspan. His recommendation, his advice to Congress was to do two things: Show some fiscal discipline and also do things that would stimulate trade. And we did pass a bill, trade promotion authority, this year. Due to President Bush's leadership, we did get it through the House and the Senate. It wasn't easy. It wasn't even pretty in some respects. But it passed both Houses. It passed the House by one vote; it passed the Senate by more than that after extraneous measures were put on that were not in the committee. That was not a good way to legislate. There were three bills combined into one. But we eventually did pass trade promotion authority. That was good. That will help the economy.

On the second recommendation, Chairman Greenspan said show fiscal discipline. I give the White House high marks in many regards. I give Congress a very low grade. If I was going to grade Congress on fiscal discipline, the grade would be an F. I am critical. I am on the Budget Committee. I used to be on the Appropriations Committee. But for the first time since 1974, we didn't pass a budget. And we have shown no discipline whatsoever. As a matter of fact, for the last two or three Congresses, we have shown very little discipline, whether or not we had a budget. Even when we had a budget in the last 2 or 3 years of the Clinton administration, we continually waived it.

If you are going to waive it by declaring things an emergency, or waive it and say it doesn't count, we basically had no budget. So as a result, we had Federal spending climbing and climbing dramatically. Total outlays increased, in the year we just completed, 2002, the fiscal year, by $148 billion. That is the largest percentage growth in spending programs in 20 years.

Defense grew by 13 percent. I agree with that. We underfunded defense for many years. Unemployment comp grew by a staggering 72 percent. Medicaid grew by 13.2 percent, the fastest since 1992. Total outlays grew by 7.9 percent in fiscal year 2002. But if you exclude the decrease for net interest, spending grew by 11 percent last year, about 3 times the rate of inflation. And then I look at some of the other things Congress did that affect spending. Now, we can control that. We control how much money we spend. We had a farm bill that was billions of dollars over what was budgeted. The trade adjustment assistance bill had $11 billion of new entitlement spending. We had an emergency supplemental bill that was $4 billion over the President's request. I could go on and on.

There was $6 billion in drought assistance that—when we passed the farm bill that was so expensive, the proponents said we won't need to do drought assistance every year. Then we came back and, sure enough, Congress passes billions of dollars more. So my complaint is against Congress because, for the first time, we didn't pass a budget. Then because we didn't pass a budget, we didn't pass appropriations bills.

This is embarrassing. Here we are in the new fiscal year and we have not sent the President any appropriations bills. By the end of this week, I think we will have sent the President two appropriations bills—2 out of 13, all of which are supposed to be done by the end of September. And here we are in the middle of October. Congress, on appropriations bills, deserves an "F" this year because we have not done a budget, and Congress deserves an "F" because we have not done one of our constitutional responsibilities, which is to pass appropriations bills on time.

So I look at the Members of Congress who keep throwing rocks at the President, saying the economy is in bad shape. Yet what are we doing? Have we done our job? No. What else could Congress have done? What could the Senate have done? The House passed an energy bill and we spent 7 or 8 weeks on it and it is still stuck in conference. If we would have passed an energy bill that had allowed exploration in ANWR—the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge—as the House did, we could create hundreds of thousands of jobs. That is still stuck, so the Congress has not passed an energy bill.

We have not passed a reinsurance bill. It passed the House and the Senate, but we have not worked out the differences in conference, mainly because the Trial Lawyers Association wants to have the extended ability to sue victims of terrorism. So there are billions of dollars in construction projects being held hostage because Congress hasn't been able to pass antiterrorism insurance.

The House passed pension reform months ago. The Senate Finance Committee—of which I am a member—I believe, passed pension reform unanimously in committee. We have not passed it on the floor of the Senate. I urge the majority leader to call that bill up. If you want to talk about 401(k)s, and we want to protect them, and pension plans, and so on, let's pass the bipartisan bill that passed out of the Finance Committee to lend some protection there.

We have not moved to make permanent the tax cuts passed last year. I keep hearing people being critical of the tax bill that passed. They want to say that tax bill caused all the deficits. That is totally false. The real cause, or culprit, wasn't the tax cut; it is the fact of the failing economy. The economy is staggering. Income receipts are down, and it is not so much because of the tax cuts but because of the economy. So we need to turn the economy around and allow people to keep more of their own money. Let's make the tax cuts permanent.

Some people say, no, let's increase taxes. Let's change the law. I don't think that is the remedy being advocated by many, but I don't think that is a very good solution.

Then I heard our colleagues say we didn't pass a prescription drug bill. That is not our fault. The majority leader and the chairman of the Finance Committee never even had a markup on prescription drugs in the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over that issue. They pulled the bill up on the floor and we debated it for weeks, but we didn't pass a comprehensive bill to add prescription drugs as a benefit for Medicare because we didn't let the Senate work its will. We didn't have it marked up in committee. We didn't allow Members to proceed as we should.

I mention those few things. We are getting close to election time, so they want to start throwing rocks at the President and criticizing him for the economy, without saying, what have we done? What has the Senate done? I might say we should be thankful for some things that we didn't do and what some of our friends on the Democratic side of the aisle wanted to do, or have tried to do, which, if they were successful, would have made the economy a lot worse.

I will mention one: ergonomics standards. There was a regulation promulgated by the Clinton administration in the last day or two of his term in office called ergonomics standards, which would have cost the economy billions and billions of dollars. I saw one estimate that was up to $100 billion. It was going to have the Federal Government set up a Federal workers compensation system—I started to say "scheme"—that would have cost billions of dollars to regulate movement in the workplace. It had such ridiculous rules, such as you could not move over 50 pounds 20 times a day and all kinds of little rules on how OSHA is going to regulate business. Congress wisely stopped that regulation. That was good. Some people still want to pass that. It would have cost billions and billions.

Some people say let's pass the Patients' Bill of Rights, which would increase everybody's health care costs. Actually, the Senate passed that a year ago in June. It is interesting to note that the House already passed it a year ago, but we have not even gone to conference on that bill—maybe for a good reason. That bill would greatly expand not only the right to sue the HMOs but also employers for providing health care insurance for their employees. The employers could be sued, and the net result would be that a lot of employers would drop their health care. That would hurt the economy, not help it.

Some people say let's increase the minimum wage. That is one of the proposals many Democrats are pushing now—increase that by $1.50 over the next 14 months. That is almost a 30-percent increase. Oh, that is great. What if the business could not pay $6.65? What if this is somebody trying to help at a convenience store, and all they can afford to pay is $5, maybe $6 an hour? We are just going to say that is too bad; we would rather have you unemployed than to have a job like that. If you cannot pay $6.65, you are out of work.

CAFE standards: On the energy bill, many Democrat colleagues say let's increase the CAFE standards for automobiles. That is great. We are going to make everybody drive a Volkswagen-type automobile. That is not very safe; that is not what consumers want. It would certainly be detrimental, and it would cost thousands of jobs.

I mention these to say that there are two sides to the story. We are a little less than 3 weeks from the election and a lot of colleagues are saying: We want to throw rocks at the President, blame the President for the deficit. So we want to stop making permanent the tax cuts the President already passed; and, incidentally, we want to spend a whole lot more money. So they are against the deficits when it comes to taxes, but in favor of them when it comes to spending money. Whether you are talking about Medicare adjustments, drought assistance, unemployment compensation—which, in a moment, we will probably be debating—we are going to have a major expansion of unemployment compensation, more than double the Federal program that we have today. Some will possibly propose that. It only cost $17 billion. What difference does it make? We don't have a budget anyway. In other words, they don't care about the deficit when it comes to spending—only when it comes to the tax side.

I say these things because I think it is important to move together and improve the economy. I think we can do it if Congress works together. We can take a lot of the measures the House passed and we can help the economy. If we would pass an energy bill, a reinsurance bill, pension reform, and if we would be responsible and pass a budget, pass appropriations bills that meet the budget guidelines, I think we could help the economy. I don't think we help the economy by making a bunch of political speeches and blaming everything on President Bush.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

MEASURES PLACED ON CALENDAR—H.R. 4968, S. 3099, AND S. 3100

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that H.R. 4968, S. 3099, and S. 3100 are at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these bills receive a second reading, and I object to any further consideration of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the bills by title.

A bill (H.R. 4968) to provide for the exchange of certain lands in Utah.

A bill (S. 3099) to provide emergency disaster assistance to agricultural producers.

A bill (S. 3100) to amend title 18, United States Code, to limit the misuse of social security numbers, to establish criminal penalties for such misuse, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The bills will be placed on the calendar.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the hour of 3 o'clock will be here in a minute or so. I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended for an additional 30 minutes, with Senators permitted to speak therein, with the exception of Senator KENNEDY. I ask that he be granted 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 619, S. 3009, a bill to provide for a 13-week extension of unemployment compensation; that the bill be read the third time, passed, and motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, without intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, may I ask the sponsor of the bill, doesn't this, in effect, provide for a 26-week extension of Federal unemployment compensation instead of 13 weeks?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct, for certain States that qualify. This is similar to what we did in the early 1990s. The Senator is quite correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I think I have the floor. I propounded a unanimous-consent request for the immediate consideration of the measure.

Mr. NICKLES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I regret, for the reasons I will outline just shortly, that we continue to have opposition of the Republican leadership to extending the unemployment compensation program that can make all the difference in the world for families who are running through their current unemployment compensation and have to meet their mortgage payments, have to pay for the food on their tables, have to support their children in schools. People are hurting. I can give a more detailed description of what is happening in the country, but I regret we continuously have an objection by our colleagues on the other side.

We know going back to the early 1990s, former President Bush objected to the extension of unemployment compensation and then, finally, saw the wisdom of it and indicated he would support the extension of unemployment compensation. We had a series of votes with more than 90 Members voting in favor of the extension of unemployment compensation for the very sound reason that these workers have paid in to the fund. The fund is in surplus, it now has some $27 billion. The Senator is quite correct that it would cost approximately $17 billion should this program go into effect now to assist those who have paid in to the program.

The point of unemployment compensation is, unless you have paid in, you do not receive. So these are funds that have already been paid by workers with the purpose in mind that if the economic conditions are such as at present, that if there is a temporary period where they cannot find jobs, this would help those families during those valleys. That was always the thought behind unemployment compensation. The fund is in surplus, and still there is an objection to the extension. It will make an enormous difference to close to 2 million families in this country by the end of the year and 3 million by the early part of February.

There was one comment my friend from Oklahoma stressed, and that is: Where are the appropriations bills? Congress has not done its work; we have only considered 2 out of the 13 appropriations bills. The last time I read the Constitution, the appropriations bills originated in the House of Representatives, and that happens to be under Republican leadership. Do you understand? That is under Republican leadership. So when the good Senator said Congress is at fault, we know where the fault lies in terms of the appropriations bills which he mentioned.

THE UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF AMERICA'S WORKING FAMILIES

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I congratulate our leader and thank him for an excellent address this afternoon. I also thank my friend and colleague, the Senator from Michigan, Ms. STABENOW, who has been such a leader on the issue of prescription drugs. The leader was much too self-assuming when he failed to take credit for the fact that this was the first time the Senate has ever debated a prescription drug program, and it was done so because we had a Democratic leader, TOM DASCHLE, who insisted we call up this legislation.

I heard earlier today: We did not have a prescription drug bill because the Finance Committee could not do one. For 5 of the last 6 years, the Republicans have been in charge of the Senate, and when they were in charge, we never had a prescription drug bill. The American people ought to understand that. Before one cries crocodile tears at the pleading of my friend from Oklahoma, the fact is the Senate never considered a bill because the Finance Committee could not complete a bill, and the Democratic leader brought a bill to the floor of the Senate.

We passed a good bill, not the bill I would have liked to have seen, a program that would have been built upon the Medicare system. I thought we had guaranteed that in 1965 when we committed to the seniors of this country: Play by the rules and pay into the Medicare system, and your health care needs are going to be attended to. We did not say "with the exception of prescription drugs."

That is what has happened, Mr. President. Every day we fail our seniors, we break that commitment and pledge to them. The Republicans had 5 years to report out a bill, and they failed to do so. Thank you, TOM DASCHLE, and thank you, DEBBIE STABENOW, for standing up, and thank you for the bipartisan effort we had to support a program that would have done something about lowering the cost of prescription drugs and, as the Senator from Michigan has pointed out, as well as our leader, that is being held hostage by the Republican leadership in the House of Representatives.

Make no mistake about it, the Democrats happen to be on the side of seniors. We were on their side in the early 1960s when we fought for Medicare. If our Republican friends are against the Medicare Program, why don't they just come out and say it? They at least used to have the courage to do so. They do not now. They just say they differ with it or there is some other procedure or failure of some committee meeting. They used to at least have the courage to say they oppose it. They do not say that anymore. They try to give some other excuse. We are strongly committed, as the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from South Dakota have pointed out.

Mr. President, in the time I have remaining, I wish to highlight three very important areas, and these are areas which our leader, the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. DASCHLE, has mentioned, but I want to review them one more time.

More than 8 million Americans are competing for just over 3 million jobs. Maybe the Senator from Oklahoma does not believe we have an economic crisis, but he can travel with me through many of the New England States, including my State of Massachusetts, where we have the highest unemployment of any of the New England States. Talk to families there who, if they have not lost a job, they know members of a family who have or they know of a neighbor who has, and they have friends down the street who are seeing foreclosures on homes. This is the highest rate of foreclosures since the Depression, and we sit around in the Senate and say, We do not have an economic crisis?

We have double-digit inflation in health care, and we still say: It is not robbing the pockets of working families. We see the tuition of our great universities increasing by more than three times the rate of inflation. No, no, that is not really our fault.

Why is it all those factors are coming in to place now under a Republican administration? Why? It still has not been answered. We are not just saying why, as the leader, TOM DASCHLE, has pointed out, we are making recommendations and suggestions trying to do something about it.

I heard this comment about how the Republicans are against minimum wage. I know they are. I know they have opposed it. They have opposed it since I have been in the Senate, and they opposed it before I came to the Senate.

This is basically an issue of dignity of men and women who work hard cleaning the buildings of this country, working as teachers' aides, working in nursing homes—men and women of dignity. They take the tough jobs. Perhaps they can be easily dismissed by Members in the Senate, but we take them seriously.

It is an issue involving women because the majority of the minimum wage recipients are women. It is a women's issue. It is the children because most of the women have children. How are those children going to grow up?

Talk about family values. What do we have when there is a family who needs a minimum wage increase and is working two jobs? How much time do they have to spend with their children? We hear a great deal about family values. The minimum wage is a family value issue, and it is a fairness issue.

We have raised our salaries four times in the Senate in the last six years. The last pay increase was by $4,900. We have raised our salaries four times since we voted for an increase in the minimum wage. That is not acceptable. Maybe it is acceptable to some. Maybe there are people who can find excuses and say: What about the mom-and-pop store that is not going to be able to pay it?

We have dealt with those issues and those challenges. There are exclusions for the smaller mom-and-pop stores from the coverage, and there are exclusions for a variety of other entities where we get the same stories.

At least the Democrats are prepared to vote for an increase for the hard-working, neediest people in this society. As a result of the economic slowdown, there is an increase in the working poor. We want to do something about it. We are not giving excuses. We are fighting for those people. We are fighting to make sure they are going to be eligible for the unemployment insurance.

There are 3.2 million jobs and 8 million Americans unemployed. There are more Americans unemployed who are looking for fewer jobs. That is a phenomenon entirely different from our recent economic history.

Going back to the last serious recession we had in this country, look at the number of Americans, 1.4 million, who are out of benefits, and now in 2002 there are 2.2 million out of benefits, which is a continuation of the earlier point.

We have asked for and we have tried to get the extension of unemployment compensation that can make some difference, and we are going to continue to fight to do it. If we can get an increase in the minimum wage, we are prepared to do that as well.

The other issue we want to address is the issue we have in terms of pension reforms. We are not just satisfied with the House bill that is going to permit the various financial institutions to give the workers their information and make the decisions about how they are going to invest their pensions. Imagine that. Talk about putting the fox in the chicken coop. That is what the House bill does.

In the last hour, we heard somebody in this Chamber say: Let's pass that House bill. That will solve our problem in terms of the pensions. We are going to let the financial institutions that have a direct financial interest give the advice to the workers about how to do that.

Well, we hope we have learned something. We certainly have learned something over on this side. But that is basically the Boehner bill. He is a good friend. We worked with him on the education bill, but he is wrong about this.

Why is it important? It is important because we have seen the workers' retirement savings wiped out. There has been over $1 billion lost, but the executives have cashed out at $1 billion in gains. Look at what has happened to these companies. We are asked why we are fighting to get something meaningful done. The heads of these companies and corporations, such as the Enrons—Mr. Lay is going to receive a pension that is worth half a million dollars a year for life, and Bernie Ebbers of WorldCom will receive $1.5 million a year for life, and the list goes on. They have been taken care of, but the workers have not.

We want to do something meaningful. We want to do something on unemployment compensation. We have to do something on minimum wage. We have to do something to protect America's workers in terms of pensions.

So even in the final hours that we have, we are going to be serious about dealing with the issue of the economy because in our part of the country people are hurting. Real families are hurting. Working families are hurting.

There are many, including myself, since September 11, who say we ought to put everything on the table in terms of our economy—put on the table future tax cuts for the wealthiest individuals. There are those on the other side of the aisle who do not want to do it. They would rather cut back on the education programs in terms of the future.

In the President's own program, he asks for additional kinds of tax cuts in his budget this year, even after September 11. Some of us are not sold on that. We believe in a sound economic program. It is not a matter of chance that the last two periods of time when we had the longest periods of economic growth and price stability in this country were under Democratic Presidents.

In terms of our economy, there are important differences that we believe in and that the Republicans believe in. We are asking for assistance by the American people on election day to restore a strong economy for this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I love to hear my friend and colleague from Massachusetts. Sometimes we have a slight difference of opinion on a few of these issues, and I will try to clarify a couple of them. One which he has asked unanimous consent to pass is the unemployment compensation extension. Even in the consent request it says for a 13-week extension of unemployment compensation, but the fact is the bill is for 26 weeks. Right now, it is a Federal program.

Let me back up. States have a 26-week program. The Presiding Officer, as a former Governor from Delaware, understands the States have a 26-week program. There is a 13-week temporary Federal unemployment compensation extension we use in times of high unemployment, paid, basically, totally by the Federal Government. The Senator from Massachusetts is saying let's make that 13 weeks 26 weeks, not for a few States but all States, and then for some States an additional 7 weeks. So, basically, all States would get 52 weeks and some States would get 59 weeks.

I want to make sure people understand the facts. I do not mind debating facts, but I think we ought to be factual. The fact is he is trying to double the Federal program, and that is very expensive. A simple extension costs about $6 billion or $7 billion. The bill that people have tried to pass now for the third or fourth time by unanimous consent would cost $17 billion.

If my colleagues want to be responsible, I will work with them, but we are not going to pass something like this. This is more of a political statement so they can say, we are trying to pass unemployment compensation, and they can have Senator NICKLES coming out objecting—those Republicans will not allow this to pass.

I was critical of the fact that the Senate has not passed appropriations bills and critical of the fact that the House has not. The House has not passed enough and neither has the Senate. My colleague from Massachusetts says all of the appropriations bills have to originate from the House. That is not what the Constitution says. The Constitution says all "revenue raising bills."

I have article 1, section 7:

All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

It is important we be factual. The House has to originate tax bills. The Senate can pass appropriations bills. I have always asserted our right. Because of tradition, the House wants to pass them first, and that is fine; that can be the tradition. But nothing should keep the Senate from passing appropriations bills first if we so desire. There is no point of order against them whatsoever.

A point that was made on the Finance Committee—and I was critical of the Senate for bringing up a prescription drug proposal without it going through the Finance Committee. I did a little homework. Since the creation of Medicare in 1965, 22 of the 23 Medicare expansions passed the Finance Committee—bipartisan, overwhelming. We had a bipartisan bill that had a chance to garner bipartisan support on which many of us were requesting a markup in the Finance Committee, before we got to the floor, so we would have a bipartisan approach when it came to the very important, critical, and expensive extension of prescription drugs to Medicare. We were denied that markup. We are going to have the most expensive expansion of Medicare since its inception, and it will be done on the floor of the Senate without input from committee, without scoring, without the CBO, without expert input.

That is a pretty crummy way to legislate. It makes one think the legislation was done more for political purposes than for substantive and legislative intent to make something happen.

My good friend from Massachusetts discussed minimum wage. Senator NICKLES is opposed. Not all Republicans are. This Republican is opposed to increasing the minimum wage from $5.15 to $6.65 in 14 months. That is a $1.50 increase in 14 months. A lot of people are paying in the neighborhood of $5.15 or $5.50. If they have to pay an extra $1.50 in the next year, many will say, I cannot do that, thank you very much. A small business in Delaware or Oklahoma—maybe it is a McDonald's—cannot always afford to pass the $1.50 on and some employees will lose a job. Maybe it is pumping gas, sacking groceries, or sweeping floors.

My colleague said this is to help increase people's self-esteem and integrity, people who are sweeping the floors. I used to sweep floors. I used to have a janitor service. I used to work for minimum wage, and so did my wife. It was only about 34 years ago we did that, and the minimum wage at that time, if I remember, was a lot less than it is today. It did not hurt my self-esteem. I wanted to make more money, so I started my own business. It was rather successful.

My point is, I don't think we improve people's self-esteem alone by saying we will have the Federal Government setting higher standards, and if you cannot make it, we would rather you be unemployed. I would rather have someone working for $5.50 and climb the economic ladder than put that ladder up so high that they cannot get on and they stay unemployed and continue to draw welfare benefits.

I hear we want to freeze this Bush tax cut for the ultrawealthy, the tax cuts for the millionaires. When President Clinton was elected, the maximum personal income tax rate was 31 percent. He increased that rate to 39.6 percent for personal income tax. President Clinton did that retroactively in 1993. President Bush, over several years, eventually gets that 39.6-percent rate in an incremental phasing down to 35 percent. In other words, it is still several percent more than it was under President Clinton. It is 4 percentage points, but percentage-wise it is about a 13-percent rate higher than when President Clinton was elected.

President Reagan lowered the rate to 28 percent. President Bush, the 41st President, increased it, due to a lot of pressure, from 28 percent to 31 percent. President Clinton took it from 31 percent to 39.6. President Bush, the 43rd President, reduces that rate gradually from 39.6 percent to 35 percent over several years. My colleagues are objecting to that as tax cuts for the wealthy. But that is not nearly as much as the tax increase proposed by the previous administration.

It is very important we be factual. The pension bill has been on the calendar since July. Senator DASCHLE could have brought it up at any point. We have bipartisan support for the Finance Committee bill that was passed in July. The minimum wage has been on the calendar since May. If Senator DASCHLE wants to bring it up, he can. He is the majority leader. He has that right to bring up the issues. Two or three weeks before the election looks as if it is calculated more for political purposes than for trying to change the law of the land.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be terminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. The two managers are here for the conference report. They originally had 2 hours for the conference report, and I ask unanimous consent that if they need 2 hours, the time be from now until 5:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2002—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the conference report accompanying H.R. 3295, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3295) to require States and localities to meet uniform and nondiscriminatory election technology and administration requirements applicable to Federal elections, to establish grant programs to provide assistance to States and localities to meet those requirements and to improve election technology and the administration of Federal elections, to establish the Election Administration Commission, and for other purposes, having met, have agreed that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, signed by a majority of the conferees on the part of both Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 8, 2002.)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am very pleased this afternoon to bring to the attention of the Senate the conference report agreement on legislation to reform our Nation's election laws. I anticipate we will not need the full time allocated. I would like to think Members are so interested they would like to come over and share their thoughts with us on this subject. But knowing there are no votes today, that is not likely to occur so we will probably use a lot less time than the 2 hours required.

I note the presence of my friend and colleague, Senator MCCONNELL, the ranking member of the Rules Committee.

Before getting to the substance of my remarks, let me begin by thanking him and his staff, and the staff of Senator BOND as well, one of our conferees, and that of my own two conferees on the Democratic side, Senators DURBIN and SCHUMER, and their staffs, not to mention my own staff, Kennie Gill and others, for the tremendous work done on the Senate side of this effort.

It is somewhat ironic. I understand we are going to get this done. It is a quiet afternoon after Columbus Day. Members are still back in their States having spent the weekend with their families before returning tomorrow when we will have some additional votes as we begin to wind up this 107th Congress. It is somewhat ironic in a sense that we are in this sort of quiet stillness of this Chamber with only two of us here to talk, when you consider what gave rise to this legislation—the fact that there was one of the most tumultuous elections in the history of our country that galvanized the attention, not only of the people of this country but those throughout the world. For more than a month, every single news program, day in and day out, 24 hours a day, was of eyes peering through hanging chads and people bellowing at each other in a voting precinct in Florida, with courtrooms packed, around the corner from here, in the United States Supreme Court.

The irony is all of that turmoil provoked us to step up and find out whether our election laws could do with some changing—not that it all occurred in Florida or in just the 2000 election—but today, as we approach the second anniversary of that election, we find ourselves in a quiet Chamber with a couple of Members talking about something that both of us believe is a rather historic piece of legislation.

When you consider that unlike other matters that come before this body, despite the fact that our colleagues may claim expertise in every subject matter that comes before them, this is truly one in which each Member who serves here is an expert because they would not have arrived here had they not been elected. To that extent, we have an appreciation of elections beyond the awareness of the average citizen in this country. So the fact that we—as Democrats and Republicans, in a time when people question whether or not we can come to terms about some of the major issues of the day, can take a subject matter so rife with partisanship as an election, with all of the scars, the wounds, the admonitions, the rhetoric, the demagoguery, use whatever words you want—were able in this Congress to craft legislation that passed the other body by a substantial margin, and passed this body 99 to 1, and then the conference report passed the House by a vote of 357-48, and we hope a substantial vote will occur here as well, is a tribute to the membership of this body, to the leadership of this body, and the other body as well—that we were able to get this done.

If I may say so, I have been here 21 years. I have had proud moments when I have been involved in other legislative efforts. None exceeds the sense of pride I have over this particular accomplishment. Again, no one can ever claim that they were responsible in a legislative process for the final result. A lot of people can take legitimate credit for helping us achieve what we are asking our colleagues to support tomorrow when we vote before noon.

This agreement, as it said, represents many mouths of effort. That effort took place amid a steady stream of news reports that predicted the demise of election reform. While those reports bewailed the lack of progress in conference negotiations, they overlooked the fact that, instead of a lack of progress, conferees were making progress. Working quietly during early mornings, late nights, and long weekends, we crafted the conference agreement that is before the Senate this afternoon.

It is a bipartisan and bicameral agreement. It is one that, I believe, merits the support of our colleges in the Senate.

It is one that has already been approved by the other body by a vote of 357 to 48. And it is one that the Administration has said the President is prepared to sign.

Twenty-three months ago, our Nation was thrown into turmoil because we learned a painful reality: that our democracy does not work as well as we thought it did, or as it should. More than 100 million citizens went to the polls on election day 2000—November 7. Four to six million of them—for a variety of reasons—never had their votes counted. Some were thwarted by faulty machinery. Some were victims of wrongful and illegal purges from voter lists. Others fell victim to poorly designed ballots. But all of them—all—were denied the right to effectively exercise their most fundamental right as American citizens: the right to vote.

Regardless of which candidate one supported, there is no disagreement that election day 2000 was not a proud day for our democracy.

It was a day of deep embarrassment for a nation rightly viewed by the rest of the world as a beacon light of self-government. But that day was also, in a very real sense, a gift. Had there never been a contested election like the election of 2000, the problems plaguing our Nation's elections would likely never have been addressed. So it was in a sense a gift. If you were to find a silver lining in what occurred that day, what we are producing and asking our colleagues to support may be it.

The legislation we present to the Senate today goes a long way toward fixing those problems and righting those wrongs. It does justice to the American voter. It breaks new ground. It is, I believe, the first civil rights legislation of the 21st century. It is not a perfect bill. But it will make our democracy work better and be stronger.

Two hundred and thirteen years ago at the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, the Framers decreed that the administration of federal elections is not the job of just the States, or just the Federal Government, but the job of both.

Until now, that vision of cooperation and partnership has largely been honored in the breach. The Federal Government has for the most part been an observer, not a partner, in the conduct of elections for Federal office.

Starting now, with this legislation, that pattern comes to an end. For the first time—if you exclude the Voting Rights Act of 1965 in which the Federal Government told States what not to do—they must not levy poll taxes, must not set literacy tests—the National Government steps up to more fully meet its constitutional duty to uphold the soundness and sanctity of the ballot. This is the first time the Federal Government is saying what we must do together to make our elections stronger. With this bill, we move closer to the day when every vote cast will be a vote counted.

Our bill achieves this progress in three ways: with new rights, new responsibilities, and new resources.

First, new rights. The conference agreement establishes new voting rights for our citizens. These include:

The right—starting in 2004—to cast a provisional ballot. With this right, no qualified voter can ever again be turned away from the polling place without being able to cast at least a provisional ballot. There are some States that are doing this already and have been for years. Many do not.

The right to check and correct one's ballot if the voter made a mistake. I know this is a radical idea. In this way, voters need never again leave a polling place haunted by the thought that they voted for the wrong candidate, or nullified their own vote by over-voting.

The right of all voters to cast a private and independent ballot. Today, millions of disabled Americans face two options on election day, both of them bad: they either vote with the assistance of a stranger, or they do not vote at all. In the 2000 elections alone, some 20 million of them took the second option—because the barriers to the ballot box were just too daunting.

With this legislation, henceforth—beginning in the year 2006—those days will come to an end. Starting with this bill, a disabled voter will have the same right to cast a private and independent ballot as any other voter.

That provision dealing with providing for accessibility improvements in voting systems may not be required to go into effect until 2006. Obviously, some States may do that before. There is something in this bill that says you cannot do that. But at the very least, by the year 2006.

The bill also creates the right to have, at each polling place, printed, posted information, including a sample ballot and a listing of voter rights and responsibilities. In this way, our bill will sharply reduce the risk of confusion and error on election day.

In addition, our bill requires states to develop “uniform and nondiscriminatory” standards for counting ballots—because whether or not your ballot will count should never depend on the county or precinct where you happen to live and the economic circumstances there.

Second, our bill establishes new responsibilities—for voters, for States, and for the Federal Government.

To address concerns about fraud, voters seeking to vote for the first time in a state will be responsible for producing some form of identification. Senator BOND was particularly instrumental in crafting these provisions. We thank him.

States will be responsible for producing statewide computerized lists of registered voters. Once these lists are up and running, it is our hope and expectation that the risk that individuals may be voting multiple times in multiple jurisdictions will be minimized if not eliminated altogether.

Let me add, by the way, that when it comes to the computerized statewide lists, a voter may not have to register again. If you live in a State that provides for state-wide registration, or wants to provide for state-wide registration, this requirement will facilitate that so that if you move around in that State from one county to another, or from one community to the next, a statewide voter registration list means you don't have to register again. If you move from one community and one precinct to the other, with the statewide list, you register once. If you stay in that State, you may be registered forever in that State regardless of where you may live or move to under state-wide registration.

That is not an insignificant burden we are lifting for many people in this country who move. If they are renters who can't afford homes and who want to participate in the process, every time they move from one precinct to the next, they have to register to vote. That will be over with, under state law providing for state-wide registration once provisions on the statewide voter registration requirements of this bill become effective.

To ensure that the requirements of the bill are met, States will also be required to establish meaningful enforcement procedures to remedy voters' grievances. And at the federal level, the Department of Justice will be responsible for enforcing the provisions of the act.

Third, this legislation would commit unprecedented new resources to improving and upgrading all aspects of our elections. It authorizes some $3.9 billion over the next three years to help states replace and renovate voting equipment, train poll workers, educate voters, upgrade voter lists, and make polling places more accessible for the disabled.

I thought it worthwhile to note that since the elections of 2000, only three States—maybe a couple more—have made any effort at all to reform and update their election laws and requirements that voters use in the various States. It is always costly to do this. Frankly, as the Presiding Officer, a former Governor, can attest, when there are budget constraints and a lot of demands are being made, there has not been a great constituency out there advocating spending money to buy new voting equipment, or new voting machinery, or to train poll workers. There are many other demands on a State budget that have much larger constituencies than those who might say we ought to improve the voting systems of the country. The fact of matter is, despite a public outcry about all of this, there has been very little action over the years—even in the wake of the 2000 elections.

So it seems clear to us that if we are truly going to command States, in a number of provisions, to do things differently, to suggest that they do so without providing the resources would be yet once again an unfunded mandate. We know how States feel about Federal requirements when there are not resources to support meeting those requirements.

This legislation provides $3.9 billion—some that will flow immediately, and others subject to development of state plans and submission of applications. I will not go into all the details this afternoon. But the idea is that the Federal Government is going to become a real partner financially in the conduct of these elections. It does not mean the conduct of elections is going to be fully supported by the Federal Government. Obviously, States, communities, and municipalities have to allocate resources for every election. But with these changes we are talking about, the costs, by and large, are going to be borne by the Federal Government. This is the first time we will become such an active participant in improving the election systems of our country.

Lastly, this legislation establishes a new commission—the Election Assistance Commission—to assist states and voters. I want to acknowledge Senator MCCONNELL's pivotal role in conceiving of this commission. In coming years, it will serve as an important source of new ideas and support for states as they take steps to improve the caliber of their elections.

It allows us to have an ongoing relationship with election officials at the State and local level day in and day out rather than waiting for some crisis to occur or for some disastrous election result where we then go out and form some ad hoc commission to go back and look at what happened.

For the first time, we are going to have a permanent commission that doesn't have rulemaking authority, except to the extent provided under section 9(a) of “Motor-Voter,” but sets voluntary standards and guidelines—a source of information for people to access, as we will, I am sure, in the years to come with technology being what it is, and a demand for efficiencies by the American public to update and to simplify the process to make voting as user friendly as it can possibly be while simultaneously protecting against the abuses in which some may wish to engage.

We will now have a permanent venue where those ideas can be heard and recommendations can be made so that we will be involved on a continuing basis in a seamless way with the conduct of something as fundamental and as important as the elections in this country.

New rights, new responsibilities, new resources. And with them, a new day for our Nation's democracy.

Almost 2 years from the 2000 elections, this legislation will help America move beyond the days of hanging chads, butterfly ballots, and illegal purges of voters and accusations of voter fraud. It will make the central premise of our democracy—that the people are sovereign—ring even more truly in the years to come.

This legislation has the support of many individuals and organizations that have been critical to its success.

They include former Presidents Ford and Carter. We thank them for their work on the National Commission on Federal Election Reform. They met early on and crafted some recommendations and ideas. They held hearings around the country. Once again, it is a great tribute to President Ford and President Carter for their ongoing commitment to this country and for the allocation of time from their schedules to dedicate efforts to make recommendations on how we might improve the election process. I thank them.

The Congressional Black Caucus—for whom this legislative effort was the number one priority—I thank EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON particularly as the Chair of the Black Caucus; JOHN CONYERS, my coauthor of this bill from the very outset; and every other member of the Black Caucus who has been tremendously helpful in working with us on this legislation and lending support to this final product.

The National Association of Secretaries of State has been tremendously helpful. It is a bipartisan group that deals every day with the election laws in our country. They have to grapple with them. It is critically important. Everything we talked about on which they had some input to let us know whether or not these things will work—obviously, many of them have not been tested yet, and time will only tell. But because they were involved here, we think the likelihood of things not working as well as one might normally expect will be minimized.

I particularly thank my secretary of state, Susan Bysewicz of Connecticut, who has done a remarkable job in our State, has been tremendously creative, and was a source of a lot of good solid information.

Secretary of State Kathy Cox of Georgia—I want to commend Georgia, by the way, one of the three States that made significant changes on their own in the election laws of their own States. They did a tremendous job. And Kathy Cox deserves a lot of credit for stepping up and doing things early on.

I thank Secretary of State Chet Culver of Iowa, the youngest secretary of state in the country and the son of a former colleague of ours who is doing a fantastic job, for his input. Ninety-two percent of the people of Iowa are registered to vote. It is one of the highest in the country. They have 300,000 new registered voters in the last 3½ or 4 years in Iowa. Seventy-two percent of the people of that State voted in the last election. It is really a remarkable result, and a lot of it, again, is the result of the creative work of the secretary of state of Iowa.

The NAACP has been tremendously helpful; the AFL-CIO; the United Auto Workers; the National Federation of the Blind; the United Cerebral Palsy Association; the American Foundation of the Blind; and the National Association of Protection and Advocacy Systems, which represents persons with disabilities. I thank them for all of their tremendous help.

I ask unanimous consent that letters from these organizations and individuals in support of this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL COMMISSION ON FEDERAL ELECTION REFORM.

October 4, 2002.

Former Presidents Ford and Carter Welcome the Agreement Reached on Election Reform Legislation.

Today, former Presidents Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter, along with Lloyd Cutler and Bob Michel, co-chairs of the National Commission on Federal Election Reform, welcomed the bipartisan agreement struck by the House and Senate Conference Committee on a bill to reform federal elections.

“The bill represents a delicate balance of shared responsibilities between levels of government,” Ford and Carter said. “This comprehensive bill can ensure that America’s electoral system will again be a source of national pride and a model to all the world.” Indeed, all four of the co-chairs share the belief of Congressman John Lewis (D-GA) and others that, if passed by both Houses and signed by President Bush, this legislation can provide the most meaningful improvements in voting safeguards since the civil rights laws of the 1960s.

WASHINGTON BUREAU,
NAACP,

Washington, DC, October 8, 2002.

Re Conference Report to H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act (election reform)

Members,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), our nation’s oldest, largest and most widely-recognized grassroots civil rights organization supports the conference report on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act and we urge you to work quickly towards its enactment.

Since its inception over 90 years ago the NAACP has fought, and many of our members have died, to ensure that every American is allowed to cast a free and unfettered vote and to have that vote counted. Thus, election reform has been one of our top legislative priorities for the 107th Congress and we have worked very closely with members from both houses to ensure that the final product is as comprehensive and as non-discriminatory as possible.

Thus we are pleased that the final product contains many of the elements that we saw as essential to addressing several of the flaws in our nation’s electoral system. Specifically, the NAACP strongly supports the provisions requiring provisional ballots and statewide voter registration lists, as well as those ensuring that each polling place have at least one voting machine that is accessible to the disabled and ensuring that the voting machines allow voters to verify and correct their votes before casting them.

The NAACP recognizes that the actual effectiveness of the final version of H.R. 3295 will depend upon how the states and the federal government implement the provisions contained in the new law. Thus, the NAACP intends to remain vigilant and review the progress of this new law at the local and state levels and make sure that no provision, especially the voter identification requirements, are being abused to disenfranchise eligible voters.

Again, on behalf of the NAACP and our more than 500,000 members nation-wide, I urge you to support the swift enactment of the conference report on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act. Thank you in advance for your attention to this matter; if you have any questions or comments I hope that you will feel free to contact me at (202) 638-2269.

Sincerely,

HILARY O. SHELTON,
Director.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

Washington, DC, October 8, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: The AFL-CIO supports the conference report on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act.

This conference report will help improve our nation’s election system in several important ways. It will allow registered individuals to cast provisional ballots even if their names are mistakenly excluded from voter registration lists at their polling places. It will require states to develop centralized, statewide voter registration lists to ensure the accuracy of their voter registration records. It will also require states to provide at least one voting machine per polling place that is accessible to the disabled and ensure that their voting machines allow voters to verify and correct their votes before casting them.

Since the actual number of individuals enfranchised or disenfranchised by the conference report on H.R. 3295 will depend on how the states and the federal government implement its provisions, the AFL-CIO will closely monitor the progress or this new law—especially its voter identification requirements. We will also increase our voter education efforts to ensure that individuals know and understand their new rights and responsibilities.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM SAMUEL,
Director, Department of Legislation.

Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS: On behalf of the members of the Paralyzed Veterans of America (PVA), I want to congratulate you and your staff on the hard work that was done to bring forth a bipartisan Election Reform conference report. The House of Representatives passed the report overwhelmingly, recognizing the fact that our federal government, since the presidential election of 2000, needed to take steps to ensure the public that their votes do indeed count. This bill, the Help America Vote Act of 2002, does that.

The bill provides funds to states and local jurisdictions to recruit and train poll workers. It will allow for replacement of antiquated mechanisms, like punch card and lever voting machines, with machines that will allow voters to verify their vote before the ballot is cast, including voters with disabilities.

This legislation will charge the Architectural Transportation Barriers Compliance Board known as the Access Board to develop minimum standards of access at polling places and to consult with other organizations for research and improvements to voting technology.

This legislation will allow the Secretary of the Health and Human Services to make payments to eligible states and local jurisdictions for the purposes of making polling places accessible: including the paths of travel, entrances, exits, and voting areas of each polling facility. It will ensure sites are accessible to individuals with disabilities including those who are blind or visually impaired, in a manner that provides the same opportunity for access and participation including privacy and independence.

In addition the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide the Protection and Advocacy Systems of each State grant monies to ensure full participation in the electoral process for individuals with disabilities, including registering to vote, education in casting a vote and accessing polling places.

Again, PVA congratulates you on this legislation which, when implemented and fully funded, will provide tremendous access for PVA members and all people with disabilities in exercising their constitutional right to vote. PVA stands ready to work with you and your staff on implementation of this legislation which ensures confidence in our citizens and our democracy that indeed every ones vote cast will indeed count.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS K. VOLLMER,
Associate Executive Director for Government Relations.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND,
Baltimore, MD, October 9, 2002.

Hon. ROBERT NEY, Chairman,
Hon. STENY H. HOYER, Ranking Minority Member,

Committee on House Administration, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND CONGRESSMAN
HOYER: I am writing to express the strong support of the National Federation of the Blind (NFB) for the Help America Vote Act of 2002. Thanks to your efforts and strong bipartisan support, this legislation includes provisions designed to guarantee that all blind persons will have equal access to voting procedures and technology. We particularly endorse the standard set for blind people to be able to vote privately and independently at each polling place throughout the United States.

While the 2000 election demonstrated significant problems with our electoral system, consensus regarding the solution proved to be much more difficult to find. Part of that solution will now include installation of up-to-date technology for voting throughout the United States. This means that voting technology will change, and devices purchased now will set the pattern for decades to come.

With more than 50,000 members representing every state, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, the NFB is the largest organization of blind people in the United States. As such we know about blindness from our own experience. The right to vote and cast a truly secret ballot is one of our highest priorities, and modern technology can now support this goal. For that reason, we strongly support the Help America Vote Act of 2002, and appreciate your efforts to enact this legislation.

Sincerely,

JAMES GASHIEL,
Director of Governmental Affairs.

UNITED CEREBRAL PALSY ASSOCIATIONS,
Washington, DC, October 9, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: United Cerebral Palsy Association and affiliates support the conference report on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act. We also take this opportunity to commend you for the work you did to ensure that all people with disabilities have equal access under this act.

This legislation, while not perfect, will go a long way in improving the ability of people with disabilities to exercise their constitutional right and responsibility to vote. The funding allocated for the multiple provisions of H.R. 3295 is critical, and we pledge to work with Congress to ensure that this funding is made available.

UCP stands ready to assist states' and local entities as they work toward compliance of this very important legislation. The changes outlined in the bill must be adopted swiftly, correctly and fairly, and it will be incumbent upon us all to help in this process.

Finally, UCP applauds you and your colleagues on your dogged determination to pass legislation that will make distinct improvements at the polls and in the lives of voters with disabilities.

Sincerely,

PATRICIA SANDUSKY,
Interim Executive Director.

AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR THE BLIND, GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS GROUP,
Washington, DC, October 9, 2002.
The Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: The American Foundation for the Blind supports the conference report for S. 565 and H.R. 3295. We are pleased that the conference report contains the disability provisions of the Senate bill.

Already this year, in some jurisdictions, blind and visually impaired voters have, for the first time, been able to cast a secret and independent ballot. We look forward to the day when all voters with visual impairment will have full and independent access to the electoral process.

The mission of the American Foundation for the Blind (AFB) is to enable people who are blind or visually impaired to achieve equality of access and opportunity that will ensure freedom of choice in their lives. AFB led the field of blindness in advocating the enactment of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (ADA). Today, AFB continues its work to protect the rights of blind and visually impaired people to equal access to employment, information, and the programs and services of state and local government.

Sincerely,

PAUL W. SCHROEDER,
Vice President, Governmental Relations.

AARP,
NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
Washington, DC, October 10, 2002.
The Hon. CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
Chairman, Senate Rules and Administration
Committee,
Senate Russell Office Building, Washington,
DC.

The Hon. MITCH MCCONNELL,
Ranking Member, Senate Rules and Administration
Committee,
Senate Russell Office Building, Washington,
DC.

DEAR SENATORS: We are writing to express our support for the bipartisan election reform conference report on H.R. 3295. AARP recognizes that significant compromise was required by all parties to produce an agreement that would advance the process of effective and fair election reform. The Senate-House conference report contains a mix of provisions that both strengthen and hinder citizen ability to exercise the legal right to vote and have that vote counted. Despite its shortcomings, however, we believe the overall effect of the compromise agreement will be to reform and enhance the nation's voting system.

AARP is pleased that the compromise:

Requires states to develop and maintain centralized polling lists;

Requires polling sites in each jurisdiction to meet accessibility standards and provide user-friendly voting equipment for persons with disabilities;

Makes provisional ballots available to voters whose names may be erroneously absent from registration lists;

Permits voters to verify and correct their voting preferences before casting them;

Provides Federal funds to encourage state & local reforms; and Provides for training of elections administration staff and polling site workers.

Unfortunately, the H.R. 3295 compromise report weakens some existing voting rights and contains certain provisions that AARP believes will increase the chances of a recurrence of the problems that plagued the 2000 Presidential Elections. The report:

Imposes voter identification requirements that discourage participation by low income, minority and foreign-born citizens;

Encourages purging of voter registration lists without current law assurances to prevent illegal purging of legal voters;

Permits the denial of registration if the registrant possesses either a driver's license or social security number but fails to write it on the registration form; and

Denies legal recourse for improper election administration, while lacking adequate enforcement provisions to ensure that the ballots of all legal voters are counted.

These provisions undermine existing voting protections, and provide technical loopholes that can discourage or intimidate potential legal voters—especially those who are low income, minority and foreign-born.

Ultimately, the success of this legislation in affording all eligible citizens the opportunity to vote and have that vote accurately counted depends on implementation by the states. AARP—through the advocacy and voter education efforts of our national and state offices—will work with states, election officials and other civil rights organizations to ensure that election reform implementation is fair and does not discourage citizen voter participation. We appreciate your leadership in bringing about these critically important advances. And, we look forward to working with you to further our most basic right as citizens—the vote. If you have any questions, please feel free to call me or have your staff contact Larry White of our Federal Affairs staff at (202) 434-3800.

Sincerely,

CHRISTOPHER HANSEN,
Director of Advocacy.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PROTECTION
& ADVOCACY SYSTEMS,
October 9, 2002.

The Hon. CHRIS DODD,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: The Protection and Advocacy System (P&A) and the Client Assistance Programs (CAPs) comprise a federally mandated, nationwide network of disability rights agencies. Each year these agencies provide education, information and referral services to hundreds of thousands of people with disabilities and their families. They also provide individual advocacy and/or legal representation to tens of thousands of people in all the states and territories. The National Association for Protection and Advocacy Systems (NAPAS) is the membership organization for the P&A network. In that capacity, NAPAS want to offer its support for the passage of "The Help America Vote Act of 2002" (H.R. 3295).

NAPAS believes that the disability provisions in the bill go far to ensure that people with all types of disabilities—physical, mental, cognitive, or sensory—will have much improved opportunities to exercise their right to vote. Not only does this bill offer individuals with disabilities better access to voting places and voting machines, but it also will help provide election workers and others with the skills to ensure that the voting place is a welcome environment for people with disabilities. NAPAS is very pleased that P&A network will play an active role in helping implement the disability provisions in this bill.

NAPAS is well aware that there are still some concerns with certain provisions of the bill. We hope that these concerns can be worked out, if not immediately, then as the bill is implemented. It would be extremely unfortunate if people continued to face barriers to casting their ballot after this bill is signed into law.

Finally, We want to thank the bill's sponsors, Senators Dodd (D-CT) and McConnell (R-KY) and Representatives Ney (R-OH) and Hoyer (D-MD) for their hard work and perseverance. We look forward to working with each of them to ensure the swift and effective implementation of this important legislation.

Sincerely,

BERNADETTE FRANKS-ONGOY,
President.

[From News Common Cause, Oct. 8, 2002]
COMMON CAUSE PRESIDENT PRAISES ELECTION REFORM AGREEMENT

Statement by Scott Harshbarger, president and chief executive officer of Common Cause, on the conference agreement on the election reform bill:

"The Help America Vote Act of 2002 is, as Senator Christopher Dodd (D-CT) has said, the first major piece of civil rights legislation in the 21st century. Nearly two years after we all learned that our system of voting had serious flaws, Congress will pass these unprecedented reforms.

"For the first time, the federal government has set high standards for state election officials to follow, while authorizing grants to help them comply. Billions of dollars will be spent across the country to improve election systems.

"This bill, while not perfect, will make those systems better. Registration lists will be more accurate. Voting machines will be modernized. Provisional ballots will be given to voters who encounter problems at the polling place. Students will be trained as poll workers.

"As Common Cause knows from a seven-year fight to pass campaign finance reform, compromise often comes slowly. We thank the bill's sponsors, Senators Dodd, Mitch McConnell (R-KY), Christopher Bond (R-MO), and Representatives Robert Ney (R-OH) and Steny Hoyer (D-MD) for their work. Their persistence—even when negotiations bogged down—brought this bill through.

"After the President signs the bill, states will need to act. Implementing this bill will require state legislators to change laws, election officials to adopt new practices, polling places to alter their procedures, and poll workers to be retrained.

"These far-reaching changes will not come easily. The bill's enforcement provisions are not as strong as the 1993 Motor Voter law or the 1965 Voter Rights Act. Some states may lag behind and fail to implement these changes properly; some polling places will experience problems like in Florida this year; others may have problems implementing the new identification provisions.

"Common Cause and our state chapters will work with civil rights groups and other to ensure that states fully and fairly implement the new requirements. We will help serve as the voters' watchdogs: citizen vigilance can protect voters from non-compliant states.

"Voters can now look to marked improvements at the polls in the years ahead, thanks to the bipartisan leadership of the bill's sponsors."

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECRETARIES OF STATE,
Washington, DC, October 9, 2002.

COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION,
Longworth Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN NEY AND RANKING MEMBER HOYER: The National Association of Secretaries of State (NASS) congratulates you on the completion of H.R. 3295, the "Help America Vote Act." The bill is a landmark piece of bipartisan legislation, and we want to express our sincere thanks for your leadership during the conference negotiations. We also commend your Senate colleagues: Senators Chris Dodd, Mitch McConnell and Kit Bond.

The nation's secretaries of state, particularly those who serve as chief state election officials, consider this bill an opportunity to reinvigorate the election reform process. The "Help America Vote Act" serves as a federal response that stretches across party lines and provides a substantial infusion of federal money to help purchase new voting equipment and improve the legal, administrative and educational aspects of elections. In fact, our association endorsed the original draft of H.R. 3295 in November 2001.

Specifically, the National Association of Secretaries of State (NASS) is confident that passage of the final version of H.R. 3295 will authorize significant funding to help states achieve the following reforms:

Upgrades to, or replacement of, voting equipment and related technology;

Creation of statewide voter registration databases to manage and update voter registration rolls;

Improvement of poll worker training programs and new resources to recruit more poll workers throughout the states;

Increases in the quality and scope of voter education programs in the states and localities;

Improvement of ballot procedures, whereby voters would be allowed to review ballots and correct errors before casting their votes;

Improved access for voters with physical disabilities, who will be allowed to vote privately and independently for the first time in many states and localities;

Creation of provisional ballots for voters who are not listed on registration rolls, but claim to be registered and qualified to vote.

We want to make sure the states will get the funding levels they've been promised, and that Congress will provide adequate time to enact the most substantial reforms. Please be assured that the nation's secretaries of state are ready to move forward once Congress passes H.R. 3295 and the President signs it.

If we can be of further assistance to you, your staff members, or your colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives, please contact our office.

Best regards,

DAN GWADOSKY,
NASS President,
Maine Secretary of State.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF STATE LEGISLATURES,
Washington, DC, October 7, 2002.

Hon. ROBERT BYRD,
Chairman, Senate Appropriations Committee,
Washington, DC.

Hon. BILL YOUNG,
Chairman, House Appropriations Committee,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMEN BYRD AND YOUNG: On behalf of the nation's state legislators, we urge you to make reform of our nation's election processes a reality by providing sufficient funding to implement H.R. 3295. The conference agreement announced today will provide an effective means for states and counties to update their election processes without federalizing election administration. NCSL worked closely with the conferees in the development of this legislation and is satisfied that it keeps election administration at the state and local level, limits the role of the U.S. Justice Department to enforcement, does not create a federal private right of action, and establishes an advisory commission that will include two state legislators to assist with implementation. NCSL commends the conferees for their work on this landmark legislation and is committed to implementing the provisions of H.R. 3295 to ensure every voter's right to a fair and accurate election.

To ensure proper implementation and avoid imposing expensive unfunded mandates on the states, it is critical that the federal government immediately deliver sufficient funding for states to implement the requirements of this bill. Neither of the existing versions of appropriations legislation provides sufficient funding for election reform. We urge you to fully fund H.R. 3295 at the authorized level of $2.16 billion for FY 2003.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that it may cost states up to $3.19 billion in one-time costs to begin implementing the provisions of this legislation. In this current fiscal environment, it will be extraordinarily difficult for states to implement the minimum standards in the bill without immediate federal financial support. States are already facing budget shortfalls for FY 2003 of approximately $58 billion. Thirteen states have reported budget gaps in excess of 10 percent of their general fund budgets. To satisfy their balanced budget requirements, states are being forced to draw down their reserves, cut budgets, and even raise taxes.

We look forward to working with you to keep the commitment of the states and the federal government to implementing H.R. 3295. If we can be of assistance in this or any other matter, please contact Susan Parnas Frederick (202-624-3566; susan.frederick@ncsl.org) or Alysoun McLaughlin (202-624-8691; alysoun.mclaughlin@ncsl.org) in NCSL's state-federal relations office in Washington, D.C.

Sincerely,

SENATOR ANGELA Z.
MONSON,

Oklahoma, President,
NCSL.
SPEAKER, MARTIN R.
STEPHENS,
Utah, President-elect,
NCSL.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE ELECTION DIRECTORS,
Washington, DC, October 10, 2002.

Hon. BOB NEY,
Hon. STENY HOYER,
House Administration Committee,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMEN NEY AND HOYER: The National Association State Election Directors (NASED) congratulates you on the successful completion of the final conference report on H.R. 3295. This initiative will significantly affect the manner in which elections are conducted in the United States. On balance, H.R. 3295 represents improvements to the administration of elections. As administrators of elections in each state we express our appreciation to you and your staff for providing us access to the process and reaching out to seek our views and positions on how to efficiently and effectively administer elections.

As with all election legislation, H.R. 3295 is a compromise package, which places new challenges and opportunities before state and local election officials. We stand ready to implement H.R. 3295 once it is passed by Congress and signed into law by the President. Implementation of this bill will be impossible without the full $3.9 billion appropriation that is authorized. The success of this bold congressional initiative rests in large measure upon the appropriation of sufficient funds to bring the bill's objectives to reality.

We found the bipartisan approach to this legislation refreshing and beneficial. Thank you again for including NASED in the congressional consideration the bill.

If we can be of further assistance, please contact our office.

Sincerely,

BROOK THOMPSON,
President, NASED.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COUNTIES,
Washington, DC, October 9, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. MITCH MCCONNELL,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Rules and Administration, U.S. Senate, Russell
Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DODD AND SENATOR MCCONNELL: We would like to congratulate you and thank you for your leadership, perseverance and hard work in reaching agreement in the House-Senate conference on the "Help American Vote Act of 2002." We believe the final bill is a balanced approach to reforming election laws and practices and to providing resources to help counties and states in improving and upgrading voting equipment. The National Association of Counties supports H.R. 3295 as it was approved by the House-Senate conference Committee.

We are very concerned about Congress providing the funds to implement the new law. While there is much confusion at this time about the appropriation process for FY2003, we strongly urge the leadership of the House and Senate and President Bush to support inclusion of $2.16 billion in a continuing resolution. This is the amount authorized for FY2003 by the "Help American Vote Act." We believe that funding and improving voting practices in the United States is an important as our efforts to strengthen homeland security.

Thank you again for your continuing efforts to fund and implement this new law.

Sincerely,

LARRY E. NAAKE,
Executive Director.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I also would like to mention the tremendous assistance provided by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the League of Women Voters, and People for the American Way.

Before I turn to my colleagues who wish to be heard, I would be remiss if I did not publicly express my gratitude to my fellow conferees. I already mentioned Senator MCCONNELL, Senator BOND, Senator DURBIN, and Senator SCHUMER. I thank their staffs as well.

I want to take a moment as well to thank an individual I had never really met before—I may have met him before, but I did not certainly know him—and that is the chairman of the House Administration Committee, BOB NEY, from the State of Ohio, who serves in a tough job as chairman of that committee. He has been in the Congress, I think, about 8 or 10 years.

He worked very hard on this legislation. And I developed a great deal of respect and affection for BOB NEY. We are of different parties and, obviously, different States, not serving together in the House of Representatives.

But BOB NEY and his staff were tenacious, hard working, and determined to get a bill. I commend them for that. We were not sure we were going to be able to get it done in the end, as it appeared at several points this may not work. And because BOB NEY felt strongly that we had an obligation to try, we are here today with this product on which they had a successful vote in the other body. So I commend BOB NEY for his tremendous efforts and that of his staff.

STENY HOYER is the ranking Democrat on the House Administration Committee. I have known STENY for years. Unlike BOB NEY, STENY and I have been good friends for a long time. STENY HOYER has been as committed to election reform issues as anyone, as well as his commitment to the disabled.

He was one of the prime architects of legislation affecting the disabled. So while we talked about that a lot in this body during the consideration of our bill, we certainly need to extend credit to STENY HOYER for his commitment to those issues as well.

So the team of BOB NEY and STENY HOYER, putting together the product they did, deserves a great deal of credit and recognition for what we hope will be the adoption of this conference report tomorrow and the signing by the President of this, we think, historic piece of legislation.

On more occasions than I can recall, the three of us—STENY HOYER, BOB

NEY, and myself—along with staffs, spent a lot of late nights. I am looking around the Chamber at faces who were with me in those rooms in the wee hours of the morning, and long weekends, going back and forth. And I appreciate all of their efforts. We had some tough moments, but in any good piece of legislation there will be tension. And if people are committed to try to work things out, you can produce results such as we have in this legislation. So without their persistence and the patience of all involved, we would not be here. And I thank them.

Last but far from least, I thank JOHN CONYERS, the dean of the Congressional Back Caucus, for his stalwart support. The day we introduced a bill, that is not unlike what we are asking our colleagues to support here, I stood in a room with two people, in front of a bank of cameras, as we laid out this particular idea. And the two individuals with me in that room were JOHN CONYERS and John Sweeney of the AFL-CIO. And I thank both of them.

But JOHN CONYERS has been tireless. He has never given up on this. He knew that compromises would have to be struck, and he insisted we reach those compromises even though he would prefer, in some instances, that provisions of the bill not be included. But a great legislator, a good legislator, understands that when people gather for a conference, unfortunately, they arrive with their opinions, and you are not going to be able to get your own way all the time. So JOHN CONYERS was tremendously helpful. I began this journey with him a long time ago. And I could not end these remarks without extending my deep sense of appreciation to him and to his staff for their tremendous help.

In closing, I would like to add only this: Of all the many important issues considered by this Senate in this Congress, I do not think any—others may argue this—but I do not think any are going to exceed this one in significance. I know we have had important debates on Iraq and other such questions, but I think what MITCH MCCONNELL, KIT BOND, and my other conferees, Senator DURBIN, Senator SCHUMER, and others who were involved in this—what we have achieved certainly ranks in the top echelons of accomplishments, I would say the best thing we have done in this Congress. We have not achieved a lot in this Congress, but I think this is one of the most significant things.

I think this is the kind of legislation you can talk to your grandchildren about or they will read about and say that even if we did not do anything else in this Congress, this is a significant accomplishment for the American people.

Thomas Paine, as I have quoted him over and over again over the last year and a half or so of this discussion, said 207 years ago:

The right to vote . . . is the primary right by which other rights are protected. To take away this right is to reduce a man to slavery, for slavery consists in being subject to the will of another, and he that has not a vote . . . is in this case.

So, Mr. President, I thank again my colleagues; for the bedrock principle in our Republic is simply this: the consent of the governed. We are a nation where the people rule, and they rule not with a bullet but with a ballot. That sacred, central premise of our Republic is given new power by this conference agreement. It can make America a more free and democratic Nation. That kind of opportunity comes our way only rarely, at most maybe once in a generation, on average. It is an opportunity that has emerged out of adverse circumstances—a close and controversial election for the Presidency of the United States.

By seizing that opportunity and passing this conference agreement, we in this body can transform a national moment of adversity into the promise of a future with the right to vote that will have new resonance for every citizen of America. I urge adoption of this conference report.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, first, let me say to my good friend from Connecticut, this is, indeed, something to celebrate on a bipartisan basis in a Congress that could use a celebration. This may have been the most unproductive and unsuccessful session of the Senate in my 18 years here: no energy bill; no terrorism insurance bill and—until tomorrow, at least—no appropriations bills; no budget; no homeland security bill; only 44 percent of President Bush's U.S. circuit court nominees confirmed.

A couple of items we did pass were—at least in this Senator's judgment—not very good: a flawed campaign finance reform bill and a bloated farm bill.

We could use a celebration. And the Senator from Connecticut and I would like to encourage all of our Senators to feel good about the piece of legislation that will be adopted tomorrow.

This is, indeed, a significant accomplishment, an important piece of legislation. Even if we had a very productive Congress, and a Senate that was passing landmark legislation on virtually a weekly basis—even if that had been the case this year—this legislation would have stood out as something important for the Nation and something well worth doing.

So, Mr. President, I rise today with a tremendous amount of pride and enthusiasm about this landmark legislation. Although the Senate, as I just suggested, has been mired in partisanship and virtually calcified over various pieces of legislation, and the confirmation of judges, the House-Senate conference committee on election reform has achieved an historic bipartisan, bicameral consensus.

Nearly 2 years ago, this Nation had a painful lesson on the complexities and complications State and local election officials face in conducting elections. In response, legislators on both sides of the Hill introduced legislation to address the problems exposed in the 2000 election. The various pieces of legislation ran the gamut in approach and emphasis, but all were unified in their goal of improving our Nation's election systems.

In December of 2000, Senator TORRICELLI and I introduced the first of what was to become four bipartisan compromise bills that I have sponsored or cosponsored. From the beginning, I have been committed to providing not only financial assistance but also informational assistance to States and localities.

The best way to achieve both of these goals is by establishing an independent, bipartisan election commission. The commission will be a permanent repository for the best, unbiased, and objective election administration information for States and communities across America.

And that is really important because what happens—I used to be a local official early in my political career—is that you are confronted with vendors selling various kinds of election equipment, and there is really no way to make an objective analysis of what your needs are. On the other hand, this new commission will be a repository for expertise and unbiased advice to States and localities across America about what kind of equipment might best suit their situation.

This concept has been one of the cornerstones of each of the bills that I have sponsored. It was recommended by the Ford-Carter Commission, supported by the President, and has been perfected in this conference agreement. The commission will not micromanage the election process, but will instead serve as a tremendous resource for those across America who conduct elections.

This conference report will help make all elections more accurate, more accessible, and more honest, while respecting the primacy of States and localities in the administration of elections. For the first time ever, the Federal Government will invest significant resources to improve the process, roughly $3.9 billion. Every State will receive funds under this legislation, and the smaller States are guaranteed a share of the pot. The funds will be used by the States in a manner they determine best suits their needs, rather than the Federal Government prescribing a one-size-fits-all system.

Whether it is by replacing a punchcard or a lever voting system or educating and training poll workers, States are provided the flexibility to address their specific needs.

The mantra of this legislation, coined by the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri, KIT BOND, has been to “make it easier to vote and harder to cheat.” We have achieved that balance in this conference agreement by setting standards for States to meet, standards which the Federal Government will pay 95 percent of the cost to implement. Voting systems will allow voters to verify their ballots and allow voters a second chance, if they make a mistake, while maintaining the sanctity of a private ballot.

Voting will become more accessible to people with disabilities, an issue admirably and vigorously championed by Senator DODD. Provisional ballots will be provided to all Americans who show up at polling sites only to learn their names are not on the poll books. Such a voter's eligibility will be verified, however, prior to the counting of the ballot to ensure that those who are legally entitled to vote are able to do so and do so only once; again, making it easier to vote and harder to cheat.

To protect the integrity of every election, this conference report makes significant advancements in rooting out vote fraud. Congress has acted properly to curtail fraudulent voting and reduce duplicate registrations, both interstate—found to be more than 720,000 nationwide—and intrastate. The provisions of this bill are carefully drafted to address this impediment to fair and honest elections, and we provided the States with the means and the resources to address this problem.

First, States will establish secure, computerized Statewide voter registration databases that contain the name and information of each registered voter. The accuracy of the voter registration list is paramount to a fair and accurate election. The motor voter bill of 1993 has done grievous harm to the integrity of the system by junking up the voter rolls and making it extremely difficult to systematically ensure that only eligible voters are registered.

Second, every new registrant will be required to provide their driver's license number, if they have been issued one, or the last four digits of their Social Security number. If they have neither, the State will assign them a unique identifier. This information will be matched with the department of motor vehicles which will in turn match their data with the Social Security Administration. States which use the full nine-digit Social Security number for voter registration are given the option to avail themselves of this important new provision. Contrary to the assertions of some, the only thing this provision impedes is vote fraud.

Third, first-time voters who register by mail will have to confirm their identity at some point in the process by photo identification or other permissible identification. This provision was championed by Senator BOND, and its importance was once again highlighted just this past week in South Dakota where there is an ongoing joint Federal and State investigation of fraudulent voter registrations.

According to press reports in South Dakota, people are registering weeks after they have died, and one eager voter even completed 150 voter registration cards. Is that an enthusiastic voter or what?

The South Dakota Attorney General succinctly summed up the problem:

It's pretty easy to register under a false name, have the registration confirmation sent back to your home, then send in by mail an absentee ballot request, get it and vote under the false name, send it back and get it counted.

Under this legislation, that is not going to be possible any longer. That is a step in the right direction for our democracy.

These three provisions will ensure that dogs such as Ritzy Mekler, Holly Briscoe, and other stars of "Animal Planet" will no longer be able to register and vote. These provisions will ensure that our dearly departed will finally achieve everlasting peace and will not be troubled with exercising their franchise every 2 years. And importantly, the provisions will ensure that voter rolls will be cleansed and protected against fraudulent and duplicate registrations.

This conference report also provides remedial safeguards for every American's franchise. The Department of Justice will continue its traditional role of enforcing Federal law. In addition, each State will design and establish a grievance procedure available to any voter who believes a violation of law has occurred. States are best equipped to promptly address the concerns of its voters, and I compliment Senator DODD for his foresight on this issue.

This legislation also makes significant improvements to protect the votes of those who have committed themselves to protecting all Americans, and that is our men and women in uniform.

I have touched upon just a few of the highlights of this historic piece of legislation. After nearly 2 years of discussions, negotiations, introductions and reintroductions of election reform bills, we now stand ready to vote on the most important piece of legislation before Congress in many years.

I thank, again, Senator DODD for his steadfast leadership. He committed 110 percent of himself to this issue and worked tirelessly to bring us to this day. I also thank Senator BOND for all of his work to protect the integrity of the election process. I also congratulate my colleagues on the other side of the Hill for their significant achievement: Congressman BOB NEY of Ohio, chairman of the conference, did a superb job; and our good friend STENY HOYER, ranking member, who was outstanding as well.

And to the staff people involved in this, my own staff on the Rules Committee: Tam Somerville; I particularly commend Brian Lewis, who was there from beginning to end in this process—as far as I am concerned, this will be known as the Brian Lewis bill around my office—and his able right hand, Leon Sequeira, and Chris Moore and Hugh Farrish, all of the Rules Committee staff.

For Senator BOND, Julie Dammann and Jack Bartling of Senator BOND's staff were superb. And for Senator DODD, Kennie Gill, Shawn Maher, Ronnie Gillespie, we enjoyed working with them, and they, too, should feel about good about this. From Congressman NEY's staff, Paul Vinovich, Chet Kalis, Roman Buhler, Pat Leahy—they have a staffer named Pat Leahy, how about that—and Matt Petersen. And from Congressman HOYER's staff, Bob Cable, Keith Abouchar and Len Shambon.

This is indeed a happy day, not just for Senator BOND and myself, but for all Members of the Congress. This is a remarkable achievement we can all feel good about. We look forward to seeing it pass tomorrow by an overwhelming margin. I am sure the President at some point will want to sign this with appropriate flourish down at the White House.

Again, I thank my colleague from Connecticut and yield the floor.

WEEKEND VOTING

• Mr. KOHL. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee for clarifying a provision in the bill. As the Senator knows, I am the sponsor of legislation moving Federal elections from the first Tuesday in November to the first weekend in November. It is my hope that moving Federal elections to the weekend will increase voter turnout by giving all voters ample opportunity to get to the polls without creating a national holiday. My proposal would also have the polls open the same hours across the continental United States, addressing the challenge of keeping results on one side of the country, or even a state, from influencing voting in places where polls are still open.

The Senate version of the election reform legislation before us included a provision sponsored by Senator HOLLINGS and myself which directed the Election Administration Commission to study the viability of changing the day for congressional and presidential elections from the first Tuesday in November to a holiday or the weekend, with the possibility of looking at the first weekend in November. Unfortunately, during the conference on this bill, the studies section was refined to direct the Election Administration Commission to study the "feasibility and advisability of conducting elections for Federal office on different days, at different places, and during different hours, including the advisability of establishing a uniform poll closing time" with a legal public holiday mentioned as one option but no mention of weekend voting. Is it correct that there was no specific intent to leave out weekend voting as an option?

Mr. DODD. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct. The conferees intended that the new Election Administration Commission consider all options for election day, including the Senator's interesting proposal to move elections to the weekend. There was also no intent to limit the Election Administration Commission to considering just one day as an election day. It is my hope that the commission will examine all options, including the possibility of holding elections over two days as suggested in Senator KOHL's proposal.

Mr. KOHL. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for this clarification. I hope that the Election Administration Commission will seriously consider moving federal elections to the weekend. I will continue to advocate for weekend voting as a means of increasing voter turnout and addressing the need for uniform poll closing times in federal elections.●

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Oregon, Senator WYDEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, let me join in the extraordinarily important comments that have been made by Senator DODD and Senator MCCONNELL. This has been a huge and arduous task that had to be bipartisan. The fact is, you can't get anything done that really is important without it being bipartisan.

I take a moment to thank Senator DODD. He has been extraordinarily patient with me and with all of the Members of this body who come from States that have pioneered innovative approaches.

It is fair to say right now with millions of Americans essentially being early voters, there have been estimates that something along the lines of 15 percent of the American people are going to vote early.

The legislation that Senator DODD and Senator MCCONNELL brings to us today protects the wave of the future—this early voting—whether it be by absentee ballot or the pioneering vote-by-mail system.

What this legislation does is protect the early voters—the person we are seeing more and more of in the American political process—by, in effect, taking steps to discourage fraud at the front end when people register, and then making sure that people don't face unnecessary barriers and hassles when they actually participate in the fall of even-numbered years. So I commend Senators DODD and MCCONNELL for their work in this area.

Suffice it to say, at various stages in the discussion, I wasn't sure that we were going to make it. Look at how the debate began when this bill first came to the floor of the Senate. It seemed to me and others that millions of Americans would have been turned away from the polls because they didn't have with them a valid photo identification or a copy of a utility bill. It would have disenfranchised millions of Americans. I and others made that point to Chairman DODD and Senator MCCONNELL, and we began a very lengthy set of negotiations that involved Senators DODD, MCCONNELL, BOND, CANTWELL, SCHUMER, and I. Together we were able to work out an agreement with respect to the photo identification provision. It protects fully the vote-by-mail system. In fact, it protects all Americans who want to vote early, as I have mentioned. It is outlined in section 303 of the conference report.

I thought I would take a minute to describe how this provision would work. Beginning in January 2004, anyone who registers to vote for the first time, let's say in Oregon, has the choice of registering by providing a driver's license number, the last four digits of their Social Security number, a copy of a current utility bill, bank statement, government document, or a valid photo identification. When they cast their ballot by mail, Oregon's State elections officials will verify the voter's eligibility consistent with State law by signature verification. Under our Oregon election law, an elections official determines voter eligibility by matching the signature on the registration with the signature on the mail-in ballot. Oregon's signature match system would not change.

My primary concern throughout this discussion has, of course, been to support our pioneering vote-by-mail system, which I think is the wave of the future. But as we have seen in recent days it is not just Oregon but a variety of other States are going to see millions of people saying they want to take the time, essentially through the fall when people are considering the candidates, to look at the statements put out and reflect on them in a way that is convenient for them.

We said at the beginning of this discussion that we wanted to discourage fraud and encourage voters. I think that is what the Dodd-McConnell legislation does. I am particularly pleased that it does so in a way that protects Oregon's pioneering system and all of those around this country who are going to be voting by mail.

Senator MCCONNELL just mentioned that this is, in his view, just about as important as it gets for the Senate. I will reaffirm that statement. After all of the problems that we have seen in Florida, after you look at all of the challenges in terms of getting young people excited about politics and excited about the democratic process, what this legislation does is it reaches out and says: We understand those concerns. We understand that the American people feel more strongly about this subject than just about anything else because it is what we are about. It is about our values, our principles; it is what the Senate is all about. So I am very pleased that Senators DODD and MCCONNELL had the patience to work with some of us who, I am sure, were fairly prickly and difficult along the way. I don't know how many hours we had in negotiations just looking at the arcane details of some of the vote-by-mail States. But Senator DODD said we are just not going to give up. We understand that you are doing something very exciting in the Pacific Northwest, and we encourage it.

In effect, what Senator DODD has done is not just protect the Oregon system but allowed this country to build on something that I think is the wave of the future; that is, people voting essentially throughout the fall. We have seen—as reported recently in various States as they innovate with different kinds of systems—a variety of approaches that are being tried. My own sense is that it won't be very long before people start voting online in this country.

So what Senator DODD has done is made it clear that he is going to stand with all of us in the Senate who want to discourage fraud, and we are going to do it at the right time and in the right way, which is essentially at the front end when people come to sign up for the electoral process. But then, after we can ascertain they are who they say they are, they are not going to face innumerable hassles and barriers when they actually show up to vote.

So my thanks to Senator DODD and his staff, Carole Grunberg, who is here. She has championed for us the Oregon vote-by-mail system. But with Senator DODD in the Chamber, I want him to know how much I appreciate what he is doing. It means a tremendous amount to my constituents and also to this country and to the future of American voting.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, before my colleague leaves the floor, I thank him and his staff as well for their tremendous contribution. One of the things we did in this bill—I say to my friend from Oregon that he is in large part responsible for this, I probably should give him more credit for this—we set Federal standards and rights that never have existed before in all Federal elections across the country, and we have enumerated the rights in this bill.

One of the things I fought very hard to preserve is that what constitutes a valid registration of a voter and what constitutes a valid vote is left up to the States. We don't federalize registration and we don't federalize how votes get counted. We have left that to the States. It would be overreaching to go that far.

I must say some of the most creative ideas on how to make this basic franchise accessible to the maximum number of people, the most creative ideas are occurring in our States across the country. There are differences in places, and States ought to have the flexibility of deciding what system works best for them.

I will tell my colleague, I have learned of some fascinating historical stories. Going back, people have said: Where in the Constitution does it say you have to be a citizen to vote? Well, it is the 14th and 15th amendments. The 14th amendment describes what a citizen is, and the 15th amendment says all citizens have the right to vote.

There was a time—and the Presiding Officer may find this interesting—when we discovered as part of our research that in the latter part of the 19th century, in certain areas of the upper Midwest, in efforts to attract immigrant populations to settle in some of the vast farmlands there, they actually said: We will allow you to vote in Federal elections—which they did. I cannot find the lawsuit that stopped it. I think it may have been by tradition, but it provided that the person who signed up made a promise that they would someday become a citizen. That was the condition that you had to fill out.

There are actually some jurisdictions in this country, by the way, not in Federal elections but local elections, where noncitizens, by municipal law, are allowed to vote.

The State of Oregon is, I think, on the cutting edge. I agree with my colleague on this. Maybe because I have a head of gray hair, but I like the idea of a community gathering at a polling place. There is a sense of community spirit about showing up.

In my town of East Haddam, CT—it is a small place with only a few thousand people and where I have lived for the last two decades—we all gather in the old townhall, literally around the potbellied stove. The folks I have known for the last two decades run the polling operations there. We like it that way. I am not suggesting there is a younger generation coming along who do not like the way they do it in Oregon—I suspect they might, and I suspect there will be States allowing people, in the not-too-distant future, to vote by Internet.

I thank him for bringing forward the Oregon and, we should add, the Washington experience, because they are similar experiences, to this debate. The fact we managed to accommodate the unique voting circumstances in their States gave rise to the idea there actually may be other States that may want to move in this direction. In fact, the provisions authored by my colleague and included in the conference report can be used by every state, and not just by Oregon and Washington. We thank Senator WYDEN for his contribution and for making this a stronger and a better bill, and one that does maintain its sensitivity to the unique requirements and needs of people across this vast country of ours. I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for his contribution.

I note as well—it is somewhat an irony—I recall vividly the day Senator MCCONNELL and I had announced we had reached an agreement, at least on the Senate version of this bill, our colleague who is now presiding over the Senate was presiding over the Senate that very day. He would not have known on that day a year and a half ago he would be presiding today as well. I thank him.

Mr. President, I wish to note because there are so many wonderful staff people and they do not get the credit they deserve—we get to stand here and give the speeches and our names go on the bills. There are literally dozens of people who work incredible hours to produce the kind of legislation we are endorsing today.

I mentioned already the Members on the House side, my colleagues, BOB NEY and STENY HOYER, the principal House advocates. There was a long list of conferees, by the way, in the House. A number of committees of jurisdiction touched on matters in this bill, from the Ways and Means Committee to the Armed Services Committee—I will forget some—a lot of committees. So there were a lot more conferees from the other body on the conference committee. I thank them.

I extend my special appreciation for the invaluable expertise and contributions in negotiating this bill to final passage to Paul Vinovich, one of the principal staff people for BOB NEY, and Chet Kalis, who is a wonderful individual. Both of these men are remarkable people and did a fantastic job, not just for BOB NEY and the Republican side, but they always had the sense they wanted to get a bill done, and that is a big difference when you are in a conference. If you are looking across the table at people and if the negotiating is to stop something or to make something happen, what a difference it is when you talk to people who give you the sense they want something to happen. I thank them.

I thank Roman Buhler, a tough negotiator; Matthew Petersen; and Pat Leahy.

From the office of STENY HOYER: Bill Cable—I have known Bill for all my years in Congress. When I served in the other body, Bill Cable was a terrific staff person then. He has a wonderful institutional memory about the Congress of the United States. STENY HOYER is truly fortunate to have Bill Cable with him. I thank him for the long hours he put in on this legislation.

Keith Abouchar and Lenny Shambon were wonderful. They are knowledgeable people and have been very helpful on this. They understand the laws, and have a wonderful expertise in motor voter registration and how these proposals work.

I further thank JOHN CONYERS. I mentioned already my coauthor of this legislation initially, but I want to also thank his staff. I thank Perry Apelbaum, Ted Kalo, and Michone Johnson, who were just wonderful and tireless in their efforts. I thank them for their tremendous work. Along with JOHN, they were a great source of information and guidance during some very delicate moments on how we ought to proceed.

TOM DASCHLE, our leader in the Senate, has been tremendously helpful through all of this. He asked me how long the original bill would take on the floor of the Senate when it came up. We had gotten through this, worked out the agreement, and there were a lot of demands for time on the floor. He looked at me and said: How long do you think it will take to debate the election reform bill?

I said: Mr. Leader, I think we can do it in 2 days.

Mr. President, if you look around, you can see the smiles on the faces of some of the floor staff. I think we were on the floor 9 days, had 46 amendments, and there were a hundred more, at least, proposed. I took some very healthy ribbing from the majority leader and others on the staff when they would look at me day after day and say: How long did you say this bill would take? It took a lot longer than we anticipated.

I thank Andrea LaRue, Jennifer Duck, Michelle Ballantyne, Mark Childress, and Mark Patterson from the majority leader's staff for their patience and assistance.

With regard to Senator MCCONNELL's staff, we spent a lot of time with Senator MCCONNELL's staff. We spent more time with Senator MCCONNELL's staff than with Senator MCCONNELL, and he would be the first to say that. Tam Somerville, Brian Lewis, and Leon Sequeira are also very fine and hard-working staff members. Brian Lewis—poor Brian got saddled with more responsibilities. With all of this coming together, committee staff had to deal with campaign finance reform and election reform all at once. There were demands on their time, pulling them in two different directions, as we were trying to get this bill completed in the Senate so we could get to conference because we knew we had a long conference ahead of us. I express my gratitude to Brian. He is knowledgeable, worked hard, and made a significant contribution. I appreciate it very much.

Senator SCHUMER's staff: Polly Trottenberg, Christine Parker, Cindy Bauerly, and Sharon Levin were very helpful. I thank them.

Senator BOND: Julie Dammann and Jack Bartling. We had some real go-rounds with Senator BOND's staff on some of the provisions in this bill. I thank both of them for a lot of effort. Jack Bartling spent a lot of time during the Senate consideration, going back months and months ago, sitting up late nights in my conference room and going through what we wanted to do and how it might work. I occasionally would run into Jack off the Hill. Even in off hours in restaurants, we would end up being seated next to each other unintentionally by the maitre d'. We spent all day working on this legislation, and when I went out for an evening with my wife and child, who ended up sitting next to me but Jack Bartling, and here we go again carrying on conversations. I thank Jack.

I thank Jennifer Leach and Sara Wills on Senator TORRICELLI's staff. Senator BOB TORRICELLI offered some of the earliest versions of election reform. Early on he thought we ought to do something about election reform and worked with Senator MCCONNELL and others to craft legislation. He agreed to work with us on our bill when we developed it. I thank Senator TORRICELLI for working very hard on campaign election reform.

Senator McCain's staff: Ken LaSala. I offer a special appreciation for his invaluable expertise and contributions in negotiating and bringing this bill to final passage.

Senator DURBIN's staff: Bill Weber was tremendously helpful to us. I thank him.

I thank Beth Stein and Caroline Fredrickson from Senator CANTWELL's staff. I mentioned Oregon, Senator WYDEN and his State, and the Senator from the State of Washington, Ms. CANTWELL, had similar circumstances and were concerned about how the provisions of this bill would work in a State where a significant number of the people vote by mail. They wanted to be sure we were not doing anything here that was going to prohibit them from conducting their elections in the way they have done successfully for some time.

I mentioned Senator WYDEN. I thank Carol Grunberg for her work as well.

The floor staff, again, were tremendously patient with this Member. I tied up the cloakroom for hours one Friday trying to get holds lifted on this bill.

The floor staff was tremendously helpful. Marty Paone, Lula Davis, Gary Myrick, members of the cloakroom staff, were tremendously supportive.

I apologize for going through all of this and mentioning these names. I could just submit them for the RECORD, but I want to say their names because just putting their names in the RECORD does not do justice to the amount of time and effort people have put in. So I beg the indulgence of the Chair and others as I go through this.

This may sound mundane or boring to those who are watching it, but I am someone who believes very strongly we ought to give more recognition to the people whose names never appear much around this place and yet who make incredible contributions to a product like this.

I want to thank the Office of Legislative Counsel. Let me explain what legislative counsel does. These are the people who actually write these bills. We tell them what we are thinking, these grand ideas of ours. A Senator has a grand idea. The staff tries to put language around the grand idea and then they go to legislative counsel, who then has to write it in a legalistic way so it can actually mean something because words have specific meaning.

So the legislative counsel's office was instrumental—we asked them to work around the clock on a few instances. Literally, they were up all night producing language because we were running up against the clock to get this bill done. So to Jim Scott and Jim Fransen of the Office of Senate Legislative Counsel, and Noah Wofsy, from the House legislative counsel, I want to express my deep sense of gratitude to them for their work. They sat down very objectively. Noah Wofsy is on the House side under the Republican leadership in the House. Jim Scott and Jim Fransen are in the Senate under the Democratic leadership of the Senate, but neither side was partisan in any way. I can honestly say if I sat them in a room and asked them for their views on how this ought to be written, I would never know from which party they had been chosen to do the job. They are that objective and that professional in how they do it.

Sometimes I wish America could watch this when they talk about laws. They could then see people such as these who are so dedicated and see to it that we can get it right. They did not bring political baggage to that discussion and debate.

I mentioned some history earlier about the upper Midwest and these other places. The Congressional Research Service, CRS, was the organization that provided me with some historical framework and background in the conduct of elections and also provided side-by-side versions of bills along the way. And we thank them: Kevin Coleman, who is an analyst in the American National Government; Eric Fischer, senior specialist in Science and Technology; L. Paige Whitaker, legislative attorney at the Congressional Research Service; David Huckabee, who is a specialist in American National Government; and Judith Fraizer, who is an information research specialist. They did a great job, and we are very grateful to them as well.

I wish to thank my own staff. Obviously, in my own heart and mind they come first, as one might expect, but my mother raised me to be polite so I mentioned other people first. I am particularly grateful to my own staff who worked very hard on this. Through my bellowing and barking, and doing all the things we do and wondering why we could not reach agreements earlier—I hope I was not too impatient with them—I want to thank Shawn Maher, who is my legislative director. He was tremendously patient and did a great job. Kennie Gill, who is the staff director and chief counsel of the Rules Committee, is just one of the most knowledgeable people about this institution I have ever met in my 27 years in Congress. I have met Members who have great respect for the institution, its history, its traditions, what these buildings mean, and what membership means in the other body or this body. I have never met anybody, Member or non-Member, who has as much reverence for this institution as Kennie Gill, and I thank her.

Ronnie Gillespie, who is a terrific individual as well, is our counsel on the Rules Committee. She did a terrific job and I am very grateful to her, as well as my own staff, Sheryl Cohen, Marvin Fast, Alex Swartzel and Tom Lenard. Sheryl Cohen is my staff director, chief of staff of my office, and has to manage all of these things going around. She does a wonderful job, and I am very grateful to her. From the Rules Committee, Carole Blessington, Beth Meagher, Hasan Mansori, and Sue Wright also deserve some very special recognition. Chris Shunk, Jennifer Cusick, and Sam Young are non-designated staff on the Rules Committee staff, who kept the vouchers going during this time and they do wonderful work. There are some former members who were part of this effort who had to leave for various reasons before the completion of this bill, but the fact they are not here does not mean they should not be recognized. Stacy Beck, Candace Chin, and Laura Roubicek are three people I want to thank.

That is 60 individuals I have mentioned. There may be others I have missed. If I have missed them, I apologize, but I want them to know that all of us, regardless of political persuasion or ideology, thank them, and millions of Americans ought to as well because we never would have achieved this conference report, been able to write this bill, had it not been for these 60 individuals and many more like them.

I have not mentioned the individuals on the outside that worked on this, the NAACP, the National Association of Secretaries of State, the AFL-CIO, the various disability groups. There are literally hundreds of people who are involved in this journey over the last year and a half to produce this conference report. I know normally we do not take as much time to talk about all of this, but I think Senator McConnell and I—and not because it is a pride of authorship, but we think we have done something very historically significant. We are changing America. We are changing the way America is going to be choosing its leadership. We want everyone to participate in this country. It is a source of significant embarrassment to me that there are individuals who cannot participate.

I served in the Peace Corps in Latin America back in the 1960s. So I am asked periodically to go and observe elections, particularly in Latin America, because I know the language and have knowledge of the area. I cannot say how moving it is to watch some of these desperately poor countries where the people who lack any formal education, or have very little of it, will literally stand in line all day, walk miles through blistering and difficult weather, intimidation, fear of literally being killed if they show up, and they vote. They look to us as a beacon of what it means as a free people to be able to choose who represents us, from the most insignificant office on the municipal or town level to the Presidency of the United States. The idea that each and every one of us can be a part of making those choices, and the fact that only 50 percent of our eligible population does so, ought to be a source of collective shame. While this bill is not going to eradicate all of that, when we consider how hard some people fight to be free, how blessed we are as a people and how little is asked of us to participate in the process which has historically distinguished us as a people, our sincere hope today, as we vote tomorrow on this bill, is we have made it easier for people to meet that obligation and made it more difficult for those who would like to scam it in some way. But the most important thing this legislation does is to make it easier for people to make that choice.

So all of those who have been involved in this have my profound sense of gratitude, and I am very confident that sense of gratitude is going to be expressed by millions of people for years to come because of what we have done in the wake of a tragedy in the year 2000, on November 7. We have responded to it with this legislation. Not in every sense, but on some of the core questions, this Congress has stepped up to the plate and responded to those issues. The leadership and Members of the other body, as well as the leadership here, can rightfully claim a proud moment when this bill passes the Senate tomorrow and President Bush signs this legislation as the permanent law of our land.

BUSINESS OF THE CONGRESS

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, my friend from Kentucky, in the opening of his remarks, talked about this Congress not being terribly successful. I would take some issue with that. This Senate has been successful, as I look down the list I have of more than three pages of legislation going back to the use of force resolution after September 11, responses to terrorist attacks, the Patriot Act, the airport security, Defense authorizations, homeland defense, antiterrorism bills, terrorism insurance—we are still working on the conference—access to affordable pharmaceuticals, prescription drugs, reimportation, patients' bill of rights. Again, conference reports have not been reached, but this Senate has had extensive debates where all sides have been heard on these matters.

I mentioned in the election reform bill more than 40 amendments were considered on the floor. With all due respect to the other body these days, it is not uncommon for legislation to be considered where only one or two amendments may be offered. It is regrettable we have not been able to reach agreement between the other body and this body on some of these matters, but the Senate over this last Congress has responded to incredible and unprecedented difficulties in this generation. In the wake of September 11, the anthrax attack, and the tremendous pressures that put on this institution, I am as disappointed as anyone that we do not have a prescription drug benefit, that we don't have a Patients' Bill of Rights, that we don't have a minimum wage, that we are not responding to the unemployment requests.

That is not because this Senate has not wanted to step up, time after time. I am proud to be a Daschle Democrat. I hear people suggesting that as a moniker of derision. Many think TOM DASCHLE has done a remarkable job in being the majority leader. It is disappointing we have not been able to do on the other matters what we were able to get done on the election reform, but that is not the fault of the majority leader.

I am proud of the election reform bill. I am proud of a lot of other things done in this Senate over the last number of months before we adjourn. I am disappointed we were not able to reach agreement on some of the other matters. The fault of that lies elsewhere.

I wanted to not let the afternoon close without this Senator expressing his strong feelings about some of the other matters that the American public desperately need. I did not engage in the debate earlier today about the economic conditions of our country, but it is what people are asking about as I go throughout my State, and other parts of the country. People are very worried about where we are headed economically. They are worried about the quality of education. They are worried about whether jobs will be there. They want to hear us engaging in ideas that will advance how we can improve the quality of education, extend health care benefits to people. They want to get a sense we are on their side. They know we cannot do it all ourselves. It takes cooperation between private and other governmental sectors, but they want to know we care as much about what they struggle with to make ends meet, to provide for families and provide for their future.

I think it is regrettable we will spend the last remaining days with people flying around the country attending fundraising events when we could be working on some of the economic problems afflicting people in this country. We see the deficits mounting again after the great hope the surpluses were going to provide, surpluses from the previous administration. It is sad we have come to this in our country. We ought to get our priorities straight and get back on the economic issues. The American people expect nothing less.

If we wonder why people do not participate as often as we would like in the election process, some has to do with people being too lazy. An awful lot has to do with people wondering whether the things they worry most about are even being considered by the people they elect to public office. People do not think of themselves as Democrats or Republicans every day. They think of themselves as being citizens of the country: Parents, children, neighbors, coworkers. That is how they define themselves. They want to know their elected representatives, regardless of party, are keeping their interests in mind.

This is a republic. They do not get the chance to vote. If 280 million Americans could be packed in the Chambers, the agenda would change. It would be about health care, it would be about prescription drugs, about a minimum wage, and improving the quality of elementary and secondary education. If they could stand here collectively, that is what they would ask us to do—to be leaders on those questions, to become forces in visions for improving the quality of life for people in the country.

That is what Senator DASCHLE has tried to do over the past 2 years in the wake and midst of all the other problems we face. I commend him for it, HARRY REID, BYRON DORGAN, and other Members of the leadership here. I understand as well it is not easy for TRENT LOTT and DON NICKLES, the leadership on the other side.

My hope is when we come back here in January we get about the business of grappling with the underlying questions. We spent a lot of time on Iraq and the other questions. The American people want to know why we cannot spend a few days talking about the issues they worry most about. When they get up in the morning and they go to bed at night, they worry and they sit around talking about how they will lick these issues. They would like to know we would spend at least as much time on those questions as some of the other issues.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to support the hard work of the conferees on the election reform conference report. I did not hesitate to vote against S. 565 because it unfairly disadvantaged rural States and did not fix the most grievous flaws with the current system. I am pleased to report that significant improvements have been made from the original bill, and I support this attempt to give greater integrity to the electoral process.

We can now ensure that the ballots from our servicemen and women overseas are properly handled. Their ballots cannot be refused based on early submission, and each will bear a postmark in order to avoid recent election debacles from occurring again.

All States will receive a minimum grant award, with the potential to apply for additional funds, an improvement over the Senate-passed version, which would have disadvantaged rural States with a solely competitive grant program. Most importantly, this report identifies remedies for election fraud. States may purge any individuals who do not vote in two consecutive Federal elections and are unresponsive to follow-up by State officials. We must clean up our voter rolls, and this provision gives States the vehicle to do so, should they choose to use it. This is by no means a perfect report, but I am sufficiently convinced that we have taken great strides to better our voting process.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DODD. I ask unanimous consent tomorrow's cloture vote be vitiated and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 304 immediately upon the disposition of H.R. 5010, the Defense appropriations bill. I further ask unanimous consent that tomorrow's order with respect to the election reform conference report, H.R. 3295, commence at 11:40 a.m. and tomorrow's order with respect to the Defense appropriations conference report commence at 2:15 p.m., with all other provisions of the above-mentioned orders remaining in effect.

I am told this is cleared by the minority as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I yield back all the remaining time on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the time is yielded back.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ONE-YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF SENATE ANTHRAX ATTACK

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, one year ago today, a letter containing about two grams of anthrax was opened in my office. My staff, Senator FEINGOLD's staff, and the law enforcement and medical personnel who responded to the incident were suddenly thrown into a world of frightening uncertainty.

Twenty-eight people tested positive for exposure to multiple lethal doses of anthrax, and about 45 others were presumed to be significantly exposed.

They endured 100 to 120 days of antibiotics and the fear and anxiety that accompany the largest bioterrorist attack on U.S. soil. All the while, they continued to come to work and do their jobs—jobs that included trying to protect the rest of America from a similar fate.

Of course, the effects of this attacks were felt well beyond my office. Hundreds of others from the immediate area were placed on preventive antibiotics. House and Senate office buildings were closed for several days, and the Hart building was closed for three months. Every member and employee of the Senate was affected, and it was an inspiration to see how well our community pulled together to ensure that the Senate continued to address the business of the country.

In retrospect, we were very lucky. We knew exactly when and where people had been exposed, which gave us an advantage that others did not have—the opportunity to provide those who were exposed with immediate preventive care. And while there were some terrifying times, no one in the Senate community died as a result of their exposure to anthrax.

Sadly, others were not so lucky. Robert Stevens and Ernesto Blanco had no idea they had been exposed to anthrax when they fell ill. October 5 is the anniversary that Ernesto Blanco remembers; October 5 is the day his co-worker, Robert Stevens, died.

Next week America's postal workers will mark two more tragic anniversaries: October 21 is the day Thomas L. Morris, Jr. died of inhalation anthrax, and his colleague Joseph P. Curseen, Jr. succumbed the following day.

Because it was not yet understood that the deadly bacteria could escape through envelopes, Mary Morris, Celeste Curseen, and their families and friends have endured a terribly painful year.

Thomas Morris, Joseph Curseen, and all of America's postal workers continued to work even when they knew they could be at risk for exposure to anthrax or other biological or chemical agents. Postal workers accept those and other risks every day, and for their courage and dedication, they deserve a nation's gratitude.

Those who knew and loved Kathy Nguyen and Ottillie Lundgren have their own anniversaries approaching: October 31 and November 21. Exactly how these women were exposed remains a sad mystery.

Still others, including Ernesto Blanco, LeRoy Richmond, and Naomi Wallace, survived the disease. But many of them are suffering from debilitating often painful long-term health effects. They have no anniversary to mark the end of their ordeal, for it is ongoing.

All of these people, like the first responders and Senate employees exposed to anthrax, were innocent victims.

My staff and I feel a special kinship with the families of those who died and with those who continue to struggle with their health. On their behalf, and on behalf of the entire Senate, I extend our deepest sympathy to those to who lost friends and loved ones and our very best wishes for a full recovery to those who survived the disease.

What else shall we offer these families? They need more than our sympathy. They—and all Americans—need our absolute resolve to ensure that our country does everything it reasonably can to prevent and address the bioterrorist threat, so that others do not suffer what they have suffered. As tragic as the anthrax attacks of last fall were, they could have been much worse, and we must prepare ourselves for and defend against the possibility of far greater threats.

We must be vigilant in our effort to identify and neutralize terrorist cells. We must develop better ways to detect chemical and biological agents in the air, water, and food supplies. We must develop better vaccines. We must develop better treatments for those who are exposed to deadly viruses, bacteria, and agents. And we must develop better coordination between the various public health, intelligence and other government entities responsible for addressing the bioterrorist threat.

The victims and their families also need and deserve to know that the perpetrator or perpetrators of these terrible crimes will be brought to justice. We are all frustrated by the fact that the person or persons responsible are still out there, capable of striking again. This is a complex case, and I know the FBI has focused many resources on it. I am hopeful they will soon be in a position to bring the case to a successful close.

One year ago today, an anthrax-laden letter was opened in my office.

Let us mark this anniversary—and all the sad anniversaries since September 11—with a renewed sense of community, a renewed determination to protect each other, and a renewed resolve to preserve America's strength and spirit.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JEFFORDS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDING THE FISA LAW

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I would like to speak in morning business for as long as I might consume to discuss some legislation Senator SCHUMER and I have introduced and to discuss my intention to seek to have that legislation added to the conference of the intelligence authorization bill which, hopefully, will come before this body for our deliberation and acceptance by the end of this week—again, hopefully.

This legislation not only will reauthorize the intelligence community activities that are funded by the Congress, but also, perhaps, will include an agreement on an outside commission that will later be established to look into the events prior to September 11.

So there are some important elements to this bill. One of the items I would like to add to it also deals with the subject of terrorism, the Schumer-Kyl bill—that I will describe in just a moment—which is a very small provision in the so-called FISA law that would be appropriately added in this conference as an additional way we can help win the war on terror.

Let me begin by discussing just a little bit what this legislation is and why it is necessary, and then I will discuss a little bit further how we would like to have it considered.

The bill number is S. 2568, called the Schumer-Kyl bill. It would add three words to the FISA legislation under which we are now able to gather information that is useful in conducting our war on terror.

The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, or FISA, is a law which provides a special way of gathering this evidence against terrorists, and its origins are back in the 1970s. But it deals with a different situation today in terrorism than it did back then.

Let me just go back in time. The idea was if you were working for a foreign government, we ought to have a little better ability to investigate you than through the probable cause requirements of the 4th amendment that we would ordinarily apply in a title III court situation. So the FISA law was established to say if you have evidence someone is working for a foreign government or an international terrorist organization, then you can involve the FISA Court, the special court, to ask that court for a warrant to do a wiretap or to search a home or to search a computer, or whatever the case might be.

Back in the 1970s, when this was first started, it was a fairly straightforward proposition. If you thought, for example, you might be dealing with a foreign spy, somebody working for the then-Soviet Union, you could go to the FISA Court and get a warrant for the information you were seeking, and it was a little easier to obtain than through a regular court.

Secondly, the information was all classified, secret; it did not have to be shared with anyone else, and these judges were cleared to receive that information. So we were able to keep these kinds of investigations classified, and obviously that was a key element to be able to prosecute these counterterrorism types of cases. But back then the classical FISA target would be either a Soviet agent or perhaps one of the sort of hierarchical terrorist organizations such as the Bader-Meinhof gang in West Germany or the Red Army faction or a group of that sort. Today, as you know, the situation is very different.

We have in the world today amorphous terrorist groups that have spread throughout the entire world that are very loosely affiliated, sometimes not affiliated at all. It is not even clear frequently whether individual people are directly connected to the terrorist group or actually members of the terrorist group. And when we speak of "members of," I am not even sure anybody can define a member of a terrorist organization. You do not pay dues and have a card that identifies you as a member of al-Qaida or Hamas or Hezbollah or the Islamic Jihad or any of these other organizations.

Now, it is true within the group there, you would have to be accepted as someone they could trust, but I do not necessarily think they look at the people with whom they work as members of the organization.

So we wrote a statute back in the 1970s for a different type of enemy than the enemy we face today. What we are finding is sometimes it is very difficult to connect up a particular terrorist either with a foreign country or with a particular terrorist organization. We know there are state sponsors of terrorism, and I suppose if we had evidence somebody here in the United States was planning to commit an act of terror, and they were employed by the Government of, let's say, Iran, we could probably get a FISA warrant because we could connect them pretty easily to a foreign country that has been known to conduct state terrorism. But it is a lot more difficult when you have somebody such as Zacarias Moussaoui, for example, the alleged 20th hijacker. His is an actual case in point used by many to demonstrate the fact that our law enforcement agencies did not act quickly enough in order to obtain a FISA warrant against him. The reason they did not is precisely because of the difficulty of connecting him to a foreign country or a particular international terrorist organization, which is what the FISA statute requires.

Now, bear in mind one of the rationales for being able to accelerate and short circuit the procedures here with a FISA warrant, as opposed to a regular title III type warrant, is you are dealing with a foreign country. You are not dealing with an American citizen. You are dealing with a threat from without or an international terrorist organization. So that is the theory.

But in the case of someone such as Zacarias Moussaoui, even though he was a foreign person—not a United States citizen—we could not connect him with Algeria or France or any of the other countries of the world. We thought his activities looked very suspicious and that they could be terrorist-type planning, but not connected to a particular country. Nor was it possible to connect him to al-Qaida. We did not have information connecting him to al-Qaida. We had some information that in an around-about way connected him to terrorists in a particular place but not an international terrorist organization.

So here you had a situation where he was talking to some terrorists, he looked to be interested in engaging in activity that could result in terrorism here in the United States, but the two requirements to get a warrant—either that he was involved in state-sponsored terror with a particular country or a particular international terror organization—could not be proved. And as a result, either legitimately or not legitimately, the FBI did not authorize a warrant to search his computer, notwithstanding the fact there were some in our law enforcement community who wished to do that. And, of course, his computer was not searched until after September 11.

What the Schumer-Kyl bill does is to correct this one little deficiency in the statute to bring it up to date, literally from the time it was created back in the cold war days, to today's environment in which you have amorphous terrorist groups floating around with individuals freely associating amongst them, or perhaps even not at all with them but engaged in terror.

What it does is to correct this problem with the statute by adding just three words—"or foreign person"—to the targets of the warrant. So an individual would be the subject of a warrant if you could show you had probable cause to believe the individual was engaged in or planning to engage in an act of terrorism and either was doing so on behalf of another country, an international terrorist organization, or the person himself is a foreign person.

So you have the connection of two things. You have a potential act of terror and a foreign person. And that is basically the same rationale that exists with respect to the rationale for the original FISA law and warrants authorized thereunder.

By adding to the definition of "foreign power," a "foreign person," "a foreign person," you include the kind of case Moussaoui presented to us where we knew we wanted to look into his affairs. We could not do so under FISA because we couldn't connect him to a foreign power or terrorist organization, and yet as the facts definitely indicated, it was somebody we should have been able to, whose computer we should have been able to search prior to September 11.

Let me be a little more specific about this case because there are those who will wonder whether or not maybe we are opening the FISA statute up to potential abuse of American citizens—the answer to that is no—by our definition, or that guests of the United States, foreign persons who were here on, let's say, a nonimmigrant visa, such as Moussaoui—that maybe their rights would be violated. I want to make it clear that that would not be the case.

We are familiar with the FBI special agent from Minneapolis, Coleen Rowley, who wrote the famous memo relating to Zacarias Moussaoui. She testified before the Intelligence and Judiciary Committees that she believed this kind of additional authority not only was warranted but was necessary for people like her in the field offices to do their work and she did not believe that would raise any additional questions; that it was an essential part of the tools the individuals in her position would need.

Director Mueller of the FBI, as well, indicated in testimony that he believed the current limited foreign power definition would have made it difficult for the FBI to secure a FISA warrant against any of the September 11 hijackers. And in fact he noted to the committee:

Prior to September 11, of the 19 or 20 hijackers, we had very little information as to any one of the individuals being associated with a particular terrorist group.

So what this amendment does is deal with two situations. The first is where you literally have the lone wolf, a terrorist acting on his or her own behalf unconnected to an international terrorist organization or foreign power but who is a foreign person in this country planning to commit an act of terrorism against Americans. That is exactly what the FISA warrants are supposed to be getting at or are supposed to enable us to collect information on. Yet under the current statute that would not be possible. This solves the lone wolf problem.

It also solves the Moussaoui problem, which is the case of an individual who you think is associated with terrorists but you cannot prove that, but you definitely have the probable cause to think there is an act of terror being planned and, therefore, you seek the warrant. It would be authorized under the foreign persons provision we are adding, and you then could connect the individual to an international terrorist organization or foreign power. That is what eventually occurred with respect to Moussaoui.

The point is, we are no longer just looking at the FISA warrant to prosecute someone for a crime that has been committed. The entire effort of the Congress, the intelligence community, and the administration after September 11 was to add a mission as a superior mission to the law enforcement after-the-fact-prosecution-of-crime mission of the FBI, and that new mission was to try to prevent or preempt crimes from occurring in the first instance. So the FBI has been reorganized to go out and seek information on potential terrorists and be able to prevent the terrorist attack before it occurs.

If it occurs, they can still do the second function, which is to prosecute after the fact. But the first object of the game is to prevent it from happening in the first place. That is the way they have been reorganized.

What they are now going to try to do is, using statutes such as the FISA statute, to uncover information with respect to people about to commit acts of terror and stop it from occurring. But without the change in the Schumer-Kyl bill, we are leaving one great big loophole available to the terrorists. That is the terrorist who is either acting on his own or the terrorist who, while acting on behalf of an international terrorist organization or state, has not yet clearly signalled that to our law enforcement officials to the point that we can succeed in getting a FISA warrant.

Our change will enable us to get the warrant and then tie the individual to the international terrorist organization or foreign state, if that, in fact, is the state of information.

Let me go on with respect to the Moussaoui case to illustrate how this would work. The agent from the Minneapolis FBI office described to the Judiciary and Intelligence Committees how that office opened the investigation of Moussaoui on August 15, 2001. The dates are very important. This was a month before the attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. The Minneapolis agents arrested Moussaoui on immigration charges at that time and applied for a FISA warrant to search his belongings.

But as the FBI's deputy general counsel stated before the two committees, although Moussaoui was found to have some association with Chechen terrorists, the evidence was inadequate to show that he served as an agent of that group or that he had any links whatsoever to al-Qaida.

So as the FBI deputy general counsel confirmed, it was the strength of Moussaoui's connection to the Chechens, not a misunderstanding of whether they constituted a recognized foreign power for FISA purposes, as the Washington Post originally suggested, that ultimately prevented the issuance of a warrant. As a result, for 3 weeks prior to the September 11 attack, the FBI was unable to search Moussaoui's computer or his papers.

After the trade center and Pentagon attacks, and largely because of them, the FBI received a criminal warrant to search Moussaoui. Among other things, the information in his effects linked him to two of the actual hijackers and to a high-level organizer of the attacks recently arrested in Pakistan.

Nobody can say whether this information necessarily would have allowed us to stop the September 11 conspiracy. But everyone would agree that access to this information would have been very helpful and could have enabled us to do more than we did. Once they had evidence that he was involved in international terrorism, the full FISA tools would have been available to them, regardless of whether they could be linked to a particular group. But instead, the outdated and unnecessary requirement in the statute to link him to a specific international group prevented the FBI agents from pursuing what turned out to be the very best lead they had prior to the September 11 attacks.

We have looked into this. We have had several people testify before our committee on behalf of the administration in support of this three-word change to the FISA statute. Yet it has been very difficult for us to get action.

It is true that the legislation has not been marked up in the Judiciary Committee, but, frankly, the chairman has not afforded us that opportunity. Notwithstanding the fact that we have had testimony in several different hearings of two different committees, we have not been able to get the bill as a free-standing bill to the floor for consideration by the Senate.

There is an opportunity for us to attach it as an amendment. As I said, the best opportunity is the authorization bill of the intelligence community. This is the perfect opportunity for us to do so.

There will be those who will say the bill has not gone through the regular order of the committees and, therefore, it should not be included on the authorization bill of the intelligence community.

The response to that is twofold: First of all, at this stage in the session, in these last few days, we will see hundreds of bills come through here, hotlined—the phrase we use—bills that will be put at the desk. Members will be asked whether they have any objection to these bills. If there are no objections, they will pass by unanimous consent bills that never saw a markup in committee. Some legislation will be brought over from the House of Representatives that was not even considered in a hearing in a Senate committee. That is the way at the end of the session a lot of legislation is dealt with. There would be no reason for something such as this not to be dealt with in the same way.

The second reason I submit is, we are in a war. Certainly we should not put form above substance in these circumstances. If we all agree that it makes sense to do what the FBI and the Justice Department and the intelligence community are asking for—to add three words to the FISA statute so that we don't have another case like the Moussaoui case, so that we are able to look at the effects of someone who we believe is engaged in terrorism against Americans or is planning to be engaged in it, even though we can't connect them yet to a specific terrorist organization—if we believe that that is a good thing, then we should find the very first legislative vehicle we can to attach this amendment in order to effect that change.

Time is very short. We will have to get it over to the House of Representatives, which will have to act in the same truncated fashion in order to send the bill to the President. We can do that if it is part of the intelligence authorization conference report because both bodies can approve the legislation at the same time and have it sent to the President and signed in a matter of days. So this is the best opportunity for us to do that—unless we are going to put form over substance.

Let me make this sober point. A lot of our colleagues have pointed fingers at different people in the intelligence community. They have criticized procedures and policies of the intelligence community, and by that I mean our law enforcement community has been criticized, even by name.

It has been said there was a massive intelligence failure prior to September 11. I am part of a joint investigative committee looking into the events from an Senate Intelligence Committee standpoint—events prior to September 11—as a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Almost every one of us has spoken at one time or another about what we believe were defects in the way our law enforcement and intelligence community approached events prior to September 11. There has been enough information uncovered by now to know that things could have been done better. A lot of different people could have done better than they did.

Could we have prevented September 11? Nobody has gone that far. We could have come a lot closer. The Zacarias Moussaoui case is a good example of it. Today, we are in a situation where the Moussaoui kind of case could easily be replicated tomorrow. It could be the situation that is underway right now. It could be that someone such as this plans an attack and, God forbid, even carries out an attack, and later people are going to ask the question: What could we have done about that?

If we don't find a way to make this change now, in the last very few days of this legislative session, we are going to be passing up an opportunity to save American lives. We would not be able to look at ourselves in the mirror if something similar to this happened again and we had failed to make this change. It is certainly not a preposterous thought that it could happen. It has already happened.

Our law enforcement community and intelligence community have told us this is a problem in today's environment. It is no longer the cold war, where you were just dealing with the Soviet Union or the Red Brigade. You are dealing now with people who have very loose affiliations—if any at all—but they are still terrorists. Our law didn't contemplate that when it was written. So now we have to fix the law.

There is no reason not to make this change. Violate American civil rights? No. By its definition, it only applies to foreign persons. It cannot possibly violate the constitutional rights of any American—by its definition, it cannot.

Are we concerned about the constitutional rights of a non-American?

Now, non-Americans do have certain rights in this country, but they do not have the right of the fourth amendment search and seizure prohibitions in the context of a statute such as the FISA statute, which has been upheld as constitutional.

So as long as there is the foreign nexus there, and you are not talking about a U.S. citizen, again, it is impossible to be violating somebody's rights. The warrant request still has to be made to a judge. The judge still has to sign off on it. You still have to have the evidence backing up your belief that the individual is planning to or is in the act of engaging in an act of terror. So this isn't just some two-bit street criminal you are talking about. It has to be somebody on whom you have some evidence with respect to terrorism. It has to be a foreign person. If that person is in the United States, and if the terrorist act is focused on Americans, then you should have the right under the FISA statute to look further.

That is all this statute does. It enables you to go to a judge and say: Judge, will you please issue a warrant so that we can open up this guy's computer and see whether he really is engaged in an act of terrorism against American citizens?

That is what we are talking about, and it is all we are talking about. I just ask any Member of this body who disagrees with me to please come down here, if not tonight, then tomorrow or the next day or approach me in the hallway or call my office and tell me why they would not support us.

What I don't want to happen is that there is some anonymous objection—a so-called hold—put on the bill, so that I have to try to track down who it is who anonymously objects to what we are trying to do. This is too important for the sake of America's security.

By the way, I have no idea that any one of my colleagues necessarily objects to what I am trying to accomplish. But what I am saying is that we don't have time now to fool around with this and go through the delays that sometimes accompany the consideration of legislation toward the end of a session. I need to know who, if anyone, really does have an objection so I can meet with that individual and try to assure her or him that there is no problem with this piece of legislation.

It has been vetted by the administration. The administration supports it. It has the support of those who have testified before our committees. The Office of Legal Counsel has confirmed that the amendment is well within the Constitution. I will quote that in a moment.

So if there is any objection, we need to know what it is. We intend to include it in the Intelligence Committee authorization bill, and, obviously, that is a bill that must pass the Senate and the House. We don't want it to be held up because of somebody's concern about our particular amendment.

With regard to this question of constitutionality, I direct your attention to a July 31, 2002, letter presenting the views of the U.S. Department of Justice on S. 2586. It announces the Department's support for the bill and provides "a detailed analysis of the relevant fourth amendment case law in support of the Department's conclusion that the bill would satisfy constitutional requirements."

So there is no reason for anyone to object to the bill on constitutional grounds, and, obviously, I can see no other grounds on which anyone would raise any questions. The Department of Justice, in particular, emphasized that "anybody monitored pursuant to the bill would be someone who, at the very least, is involved in terrorist acts that transcend national boundaries in terms of the means by which they are accomplished, the persons they appear intended to coerce or intimidate, or the locale in which the perpetrators operate or seek asylum"—50 U.S.C., section 1801(c)(3).

As a result, the Department says:

A FISA warrant would still be limited to collecting forward intelligence for the international responsibilities of the United States and the duties of the Federal Government to the States in matters involving foreign terrorists.

That is the test supplied by U.S. v. Duggan, a Second Circuit case, 1984, which presents the relevant test. Therefore:

The same interests and considerations that support the constitutionality of FISA as it now stands would provide the constitutional justification for S. 2586.

Mr. President, I think there is no question of constitutionality, there is no question of need, and there is no question about the timing requirement that we act now. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the Schumer-Kyl legislation to enable us to include it as part of the authorization bill for our Intelligence Committee. If there is any question about whether or not their support would be there, bring that to my attention at the earliest moment so that we won't have an issue.

I have assured Senator GRAHAM of Florida, chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence, of my commitment to ensure that the authorization bill is passed and not to allow anything to interfere with that. At the same time, it seems to me our proposal here is so required, so commonsense, so timely, that it is appropriate to include it in the legislation and that the burden should be on someone who objects to demonstrate to us why they object, if in fact they do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks two documents: One is a Dear Colleague letter dated September 26, 2002, that was sent by Senator SCHUMER and I to our colleagues that describes in some detail S. 2586; and the other document is a statement for the RECORD of Marion E. "Spike" Bowman, Deputy General Counsel, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, July 31, 2002.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, let me note a little bit what the second document is, and then I will conclude. What the Deputy General Counsel of the FBI testified before our committee was how terrorism has changed from the time the FISA statute was first enacted to what we see today. Let me quote a little bit from his statement:

When FISA was enacted, terrorism was very different from what we see today. In the 1970s, terrorism more often targeted individuals, often carefully selected. This was the usual pattern of the Japanese Red Army, the Red Brigades and similar organizations listed by name in the legislative history of FISA. Today we see terrorism far more lethal and far more indiscriminate than could have been imagined in 1978. It takes only the events of September 11, 2001, to fully comprehend the difference of a couple of decades. But there is another difference as well. Where we once saw terrorism formed solely around organized groups, today we often see individuals willing to commit indiscriminate acts of terror. It may be that these individuals are affiliated with groups we do not see, but it may be that they are simply radicals who desire to bring about destruction.

Mr. President, he goes on then to relate that to the legislation that Senator SCHUMER and I introduced. Let me quote a little more. What he says is:

... we are increasingly seeing terrorist suspects who appear to operate at a distance from these organizations. In perhaps an oversimplification, but illustrative nevertheless, what we see today are (1) agents of foreign powers in the traditional sense who are associated with some organization or discernible group (2) individuals who appear to have connections with multiple terrorist organizations but who do not appear to owe allegiance to any one of them, but rather owe allegiance to the International Jihad movement—

Parenthetically, Mr. President, which is not a terrorist organization—and (3) individuals who appear to be personally oriented toward terrorism but with whom there is no known connection to a foreign power.

Let me skip in the interest of time. Agent Bowman goes on to say:

During the decade-long Soviet/Afghan conflict, anywhere from 10,000 to 25,000 Muslim fighters representing some forty-three countries put aside substantial cultural differences to fight alongside each other in Afghanistan. The force drawing them together was the Islamic concept of "umma" or Muslim community. In this concept, nationalism is secondary to the Muslim community as a whole. As a result, Muslims from disparate cultures trained together, formed relationships, sometimes assembled in groups that otherwise would have been at odds with one another and acquired common ideologies.

Following the withdrawal of the Soviet forces in Afghanistan, many of these fighters returned to their homelands, but they returned with new skills and dangerous ideas. They now had newly-acquired terrorist training as guerrilla warfare was the only way they could combat the more advanced Soviet forces.

These are the forces that after the Soviets were defeated in Afghanistan became a force that coalesced around, among others, Osama bin Laden, but not all of them associated specifically with Bin Laden. I quote further:

Information from a variety of sources repeatedly carries the theme from Islamic radicals that expresses the opinion that we just don't get it. Terrorists world-wide speak of jihad and wonder why the western world is focused on groups rather than on concepts that make them a community.

This is the way we have organized our statutes. What he is telling us is we are not seeing it the way our enemies see it. They do not organize in groups. They do not have membership cards that say they are a member of al-Qaida. They have coalesced around an idea, not a group.

The agent concludes this way:

The lesson to be taken from this is that al-Qaida is far less a large organization than a facilitator, sometimes orchestrator of Islamic militants around the globe. These militants are linked by ideas and goals, not by organizational structure.

He concludes by saying:

The United States and its allies, to include law enforcement and intelligence components world-wide have had an impact on the terrorists, but they are adapting to changing circumstances. Speaking solely from an operational perspective, investigation of these individuals who have no clear connection to organized terrorism, or tenuous ties to multiple organizations, is becoming increasingly difficult.

The current FISA statute has served the nation well, but the International Jihad Movement demonstrates the need to consider whether a different formulation is needed to address the contemporary terrorist problem.

That is the end of that quotation, Mr. President. Of course, he and others representing the Department of Justice went on to specifically endorse the Schumer-Kyl legislation to bring our current FISA statute up to date to conform to this new challenge about which Agent Bowman testified. That is the change we are trying to make.

To wrap this up, there are three words we would add to the FISA statute: "or foreign person," so that if you can prove the terrorist is either a terrorist for an international terrorist organization or is a terrorist for another state, a country, or is acting for himself "or foreign person" are the words we use—in other words, he is a terrorist and a foreign person—any one of those three circumstances enable you to go to the judge and say: Here is our evidence that this individual is planning to engage in terrorism against people in the United States. Will you give us a warrant to search his computer, to search his personal effects, his home, or to put a wiretap on his telephone, whatever the case might be? The judge will then make a decision under the law, whether it is authorized or not.

If the court authorizes the issuance of the warrant, we can then look further to determine what this individual is seeking to do. We may find out it is an innocent situation or we may find out that the individual is just acting on his own but is a radical terrorist meaning to do harm to Americans or we may find, as in the case of Zacarias Moussaoui, that it turns out he is engaged as part of an international conspiracy with a specific organization, in this case al-Qaida, but we do not know that and cannot prove it going in. That is why the change we seek is so critical.

I ask my colleagues to support the inclusion of this amendment as part of the authorization bill for the intelligence community, and if there is any problem that anybody sees, to bring it to our attention so we can deal with that prior to that bill coming to the floor because we do not want to slow that bill down or stop it from being considered favorably on the Senate floor.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support our amendment. It is for the good of the country, for our national security, and I say this in conclusion: If we fail to do this and it was our fault that someone utilized our legal system to plan an act of terror against Americans, and Americans are killed or injured as a result of our failure, then we would have nobody but ourselves to blame.

I am going to try as hard as I can to get this done, but anyone who stands in the way is going to have to stand accountable if, God forbid, something should happen and we are unable to get this accomplished before we close our session.

I urge my colleagues to please support Senator SCHUMER and me in ensuring we can get this important amendment accomplished before we adjourn for the year.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, September 26, 2002.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: We have introduced S. 2586—the Schumer/Kyl "Moussaoui exception" bill—as an amendment to the Homeland Security bill. S. 2586 would amend the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) to reach any foreign visitor to the United States who is believed to be involved in international terrorism, regardless of whether that person is known to be an agent of a foreign government or terror group. The bill is designed to make it easier for the FBI to monitor suspected lone-wolf terrorists such as alleged 20th hijacker Zacarias Moussaoui.

The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence held a hearing on S. 2586 on July 31, 2002. The Department of Justice has endorsed the bill in a Statement of Administration Policy, which we have attached for your review. Below is our explanation of the workings of the bill and an examination of those facts that we believe show that this change is necessary. We hope that you will join us in supporting this important legislation.

The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act requires that in order for a warrant to issue under that law, a court must find probable cause to believe that the target of the warrant is either an agent of, or is himself, a "foreign power"—a term that is currently defined to only include foreign governments or international terrorist organizations. Requiring a link to governments or established organizations may have made sense when FISA was enacted in 1978; in that year, the prototypical FISA target was a Soviet spy or a member of one of the hierarchical, military-style terror groups of that era, such as West Germany's Baader-Meinhof gang or the Red Army Faction. Today, however, the United States faces a much different threat. We are principally confronted not by a specific group or government, but by a movement. This movement—of Islamist extremists—does not maintain a fixed structure or membership list, and its adherents do not always advertise their affiliation with this cause.

S. 2586 will help the United States to meet this threat by expanding FISA's definition of "foreign power." In addition to governments and organized groups, that term, under the bill, would also include "any person, other than a United States person, or group that is engaged in international terrorism or activities in preparation therefor." With this change, U.S. intelligence agents would be able to secure a FISA warrant to monitor a foreign visitor to the United States who is involved in international terrorism—even if his links to foreign government or known terror groups remain obscure.

The role of the foreign-power requirement in obstructing pre-September 11 investigations of Zaccarias Moussaoui was confirmed in dramatic testimony before the House and Senate Intelligence Committees on Tuesday of this week. An agent from the Minneapolis FBI office described to the Committees how that office opened an investigation of Moussaoui on August 15, 2001. Minneapolis agents arrested Moussaoui on immigration charges and applied for a FISA warrant to search his belongings. But as the FBI's Deputy General Counsel stated on Tuesday before the Committees, although Moussaoui was found to have some associations with Chechen terrorists, the evidence was inadequate to show that he served as an agent of that group—or that he had any links to Al Qaeda. (Thus, as the FBI's Deputy General Counsel has confirmed, it was the strength of Moussaoui's connection to the Chechens—not a "misunderstanding" of whether the Chechens constitute a "recognized" foreign power for FISA purposes, as yesterday's Washington Post story suggested—that ultimately prevented the issuance of a warrant.) As a result, for three weeks prior to the September 11 attacks, the FBI was unable to search Moussaoui's computer or his papers.

After the Trade Center and Pentagon attacks—and largely because of them—the FBI received a criminal warrant to search Moussaoui. Among other things, the information in his effects linked Moussaoui to two of the actual hijackers, and to a high-level organizer of the attacks who was recently arrested in Pakistan.

No one can say whether this information would have allowed the FBI to stop the September 11 conspiracy. But all must agree that the FBI should have access to this information. Once U.S. agents had evidence that Moussaoui was involved in international terrorism, the full tools of FISA should have been available to them—regardless of whether Moussaoui could be linked to a particular group. Instead, this outdated and unnecessary requirement blocked U.S. intelligence agents from pursuing their best lead on the eve of the September 11 attacks. Indeed, according to FBI Director Mueller, the current standard probably would have prevented the FBI from using FISA against any of the September 11 hijackers. As the Director noted in his testimony before the Judiciary Committee earlier this year, "prior to September 11, [of] the 19 or 20 hijackers, * * * we had very little information as to any one of the individuals being associated with * * * a particular terrorist group."

Several congressional Committees have now conducted investigations and held hearings examining why our intelligence services failed to prevent the September attacks. Those hearings and investigations uncovered a substantial defect in the current law—a defect that may have prevented the United States from stopping that conspiracy, and is likely to hinder future investigations. Simply put, our laws are no longer suited to the type of threat that we face. It is now incumbent on Congress to act on what it has learned.

We hope that you will join us in supporting our "Moussaoui fix" amendment to the Homeland Security bill, should a roll call vote on that amendment be required.

If you have any questions, please contact Jim Flood in Senator Schumer's office at 4-7425 or Joe Matal in Senator Kyl's office at 4-6791.

Sincerely,
CHARLES SCHUMER.
JON KYL.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 31, 2002.

Hon. BOB GRAHAM,
Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. RICHARD C. SHELBY,
Vice-Chairman, Select Committee on Intelligence,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND MR. VICE CHAIRMAN: The letter presents the views of the Justice Department on S. 2586, a bill "[t]o exclude United States persons from the definition of 'foreign power' under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 relating to international terrorism." The bill would extend the coverage of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act ("FISA") to individuals who engage in international terrorism or activities in preparation therefor without a showing of membership in or affiliation with an international terrorist group. The bill would limit this type of coverage to non-United States persons. The Department of Justice supports S. 2586.

We note that the proposed title of the bill is potentially misleading. The current title is "To exclude United States persons from the definition of 'foreign power' under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 relating to international terrorism." A better title, in keeping with the function of the bill, would be something along the following lines: "To expand the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 ('FISA') to reach individuals other than United States persons who engage in international terrorism without affiliation with an international terrorist group."

Additionally, we understand that a question has arisen as to whether S. 2586 would satisfy constitutional requirements. We believe that it would.

FISA allows a specially designated court to issue an order approving an electronic surveillance or physical search, where a significant purpose of the surveillance or search is "to obtain foreign intelligence information." Id. §§1804(a)(7)(B), 1805(a). Given this purpose, the court makes a determination about probable cause that differs in some respects from the determination ordinarily underlying a search warrant. The court need not find that there is probable cause to believe that the surveillance or search, in fact, will lead to foreign intelligence information, let alone evidence of a crime, and in many instances need not find probable cause to believe that the target has committed a criminal act. The court instead determines, in the case of electronic surveillance, whether there is probable cause to believe that "the target of the electronic surveillance is a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power," id. §1805(a)(3)(A), and that each of the places at which the surveillance is directed "is being used, or about to be used, by a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power," id. §1805(a)(3)(B). The court makes parallel determinations in the case of a physical search. Id. §1824(a)(3) (A), (B).

The terms "foreign power" and "agent of a foreign power" are defined at some length, id. §1801(a), (b), and specific parts of the definitions are especially applicable to surveillances or searches aimed at collecting intelligence about terrorism. As currently defined, "foreign power" includes "a group engaged in international terrorism or activities in preparation therefor," id. §1801(a)(4) (emphasis added), and an "agent of a foreign power" includes any person who "knowingly engages in sabotage or international terrorism or activities that are in preparation therefor, for or on behalf of a foreign power," id. §1801(b)(2)(C). "International terrorism" is defined to mean activities that

(1) involve violent acts or acts dangerous to human life that are a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State, or that would be a criminal violation if committed within the justification of the United States or any State;

(2) appear to be intended—

(A) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(B) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(C) to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping; and

(3) occur totally outside the United States, or transcend national boundaries in terms of the means by which they are accomplished, the persons they appear intended to coerce or intimidate, or the locale in which their perpetrators operate or seek asylum.

Id. §1801(c).

S. 2586 would expand the definition of "foreign power" to reach persons who are involved in activities defined as "international terrorism," even if these persons cannot be shown to be agents of a "group" engaged in international terrorism. To achieve this expansion, the bill would add the following italicized words to the current definition of "foreign power": "any person other than a United States person who is, or a group that is, engaged in international terrorism or activities in preparation therefor."

The courts repeatedly have upheld the constitutionality, under the Fourth Amendment, of the FISA provisions that permit issuance of an order based on probable cause to believe that the target of a surveillance or search is a foreign power or agent of a foreign power. The question posed by S. 2586 would be whether the reasoning of those cases precludes expansion of the term "foreign power" to include individual international terrorists who are unconnected to a terrorist group.

The Second Circuit's decision in United States v. Duggan, 743 F. 2d 59 (2d Cir. 1984), sets out the fullest explanation of the "governmental concerns" that had led to the enactment of the procedures in FISA. To identify these concerns, the court first quoted from the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. United States District Court, 407 U.S. 297, 308 (1972) ("Keith"), which addressed "domestic national security surveillance" rather than surveillance of foreign powers and their agents, but which specified the particular difficulties in gathering "security intelligence" that might justify departures from the usual standards for warrants: "[Such intelligence gathering] is often long range and involves the interrelation of various sources and types of information. The exact targets of such surveillance may be more difficult to identify than in surveillance operations against many types of crime specified in Title III [dealing with electronic surveillance in ordinary criminal cases]. Often, too, the emphasis of domestic intelligence gathering is on the prevention of unlawful activity or the enhancement of the government's preparedness for some possible future crisis or emergency. Thus the focus of domestic surveillance may be less precise than that directed against more conventional types of crime." Duggan, 743 F.2d at 72 (quoting Keith, 407 U.S. at 322). The Second Circuit then quoted a portion of the Senate Committee Report on FISA. "[The] reasonableness [of FISA procedures] depends, in part, upon an assessment of the difficulties of investigating activities planned, directed, and supported from abroad by foreign intelligence services and foreign-based terrorist groups. . . . Other factors include the international responsibilities of the United States, the duties of the Federal Government to the States in matters involving foreign terrorism, and the need to maintain the secrecy of lawful counterintelligence sources and methods." Id. at 73 (quoting S. Rep. No. 95-701, at 14-15, reprinted in 1978 (U.S.C.A.N. 3973, 3983) ("Senate Report"). The court concluded:

"Against this background, [FISA] requires that the FISA Judge find probable cause to believe that the target is a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power, and that the place at which the surveillance is to be directed is being used or is about to be used by a foreign power or an agent of a foreign power; and it requires him to find that the application meets the requirements of [FISA]. These requirements make it reasonable to dispense with a requirement that the FISA Judge find probable cause to believe that surveillance will in fact lead to the gathering of foreign intelligence information."

Id. at 73. The court added that, a fortiori, it "reject[ed] defendants' argument that a FISA order may not be issued consisted with the requirements of the Fourth Amendment unless there is a showing of probable cause to believe the target has committed a crime." Id. at n.5. See also, e.g., United States v. Pelton, 835 F.2d 1067, 1075 (4th Cir. 1987); United States v. Cavanagh, 807 F.2d 787, 790-91 (9th Cir. 1987) (per then-Circuit Judge Kennedy); United States v. Nicholson, 955 F. Supp. 588, 590-91 (E.D. Va. 1997).

We can conceive of a possible argument for distinguishing, under the Fourth Amendment, the proposed definition of "foreign power" from the definition approved by the courts as the basis for a determination of probable cause under FISA as now written. According to this argument, because the proposed definition would require no tie to a terrorist group, it would improperly allow the use of FISA where an ordinary probable cause determination would be feasible and appropriate—where a court could look at the activities of a single individual without having to assess "the interrelation of various sources and types of information," see Keith, 407 U.S. at 322, or relationships with foreign-based groups, see Duggan, 743 F.2d at 73; where there need to be no inexactitude in the target or focus of the surveillance, see Keith, 407 U.S. at 322; and where the international activities of the United States are less likely to be implicated, see Duggan, 743 F.2d at 73. However, we believe that this argument would not be well-founded.

The expanded definition shall would be limited to collecting foreign intelligence for the "international responsibilities of the United States, [and] the duties of the Federal Government to the States in matters involving foreign terrorism." Id. at 73 (quoting Senate Report at 14). The individuals covered by S. 2586 would not be United States persons, and the "international terrorism" in which they would be involved would continue to "occur totally outside the United States, to transcend national boundaries in terms of the means by which they are accomplished, the persons they appear intended to coerce or intimidate, or the locale in which their perpetrators operate or seek asylum." 50 U.S.C. §1801(c)(3). These circumstances would implicate the "difficulties of investigating activities planned, directed, and supported from abroad," just as current law implicates such difficulties in the case of foreign intelligence services and foreign-based terrorist groups. Duggan, 743 F.2d at 73 (quoting Senate Report at 14). To overcome those difficulties, a foreign intelligence investigation "often [will be] long range and involved[] the interrelation of various sources and types of information." Id. at 72 (quoting Keith, 407 U.S. at 322). This information frequently will require special handling, as under the procedures of the FISA court, because of "the need to maintain the secrecy of lawful counterintelligence sources and methods." Id. at 73 (quoting Keith, 407 U.S. at 322). Furthermore, because in foreign intelligence investigations under the expanded definition "[o]ften . . . the emphasis . . . [will be] on the prevention of unlawful activity or the enhancement of the government's preparedness for some possible future crisis or emergency," the "focus of . . . surveillance may be less precise than that directed against more conventional types of crime." Id. at 73 (quoting Keith, 407 U.S. at 322). Therefore, the same interests and considerations that support the constitutionality of FISA as it now stands would provide the constitutional justification for the S. 2586.

Indeed, S. 2586 would add only a modest increment to the existing coverage of the statute. As the House Committee Report on FISA suggested, a "group" of terrorist covered by current law might be as small as two or three persons. H.R. Rep. No. 95-1283, at pt. 1, 74 and n. 38 (1978). The interest that the courts have found to justify the procedures of FISA are not likely to differ appreciably as between a case involving such a group of two or three persons and a case involving a single terrorist.

The events of the past few months point to one other consideration on which courts have not relied previously in upholding FISA procedures—the extraordinary level of harm that an international terrorist can do to our Nation. The touchstone for the constitutionality of searches under the Fourth Amendment is whether they are "reasonable." As the Supreme Court has discussed in the context of "special needs cases," whether a search is reasonable depends on whether the government's interests outweigh any intrusion into individual privacy interests. In light of the efforts of international terrorists to obtain weapons of mass destruction, it does not seem debatable that we could suffer terrible injury at the hands of a terrorist whose ties to an identified "group" remained obscure. Even in the criminal context, the Court has recognized the need for flexibility in cases of terrorism. See Indianapolis v. Edmond, 531 U.S. 32, 44 (2000) ("the Fourth Amendment would almost certainly permit an appropriately tailored roadblock set up to thwart an imminent terrorist attack"). Congress could legitimately judge that even a single international terrorist, who intends "to intimidate or coerce a civilian population" or "to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion" or "to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping," 50 U.S.C. §1801(c)(2), acts with the power of a full terrorist group or foreign nation and should be treated as a "foreign power" subject to the procedures of FISA rather than those applicable to warrants in criminal cases.

Thank you for the opportunity to present our views. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be additional assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the perspective of the Administration's program, there is no objection to submission of this letter.

Sincerely,

DANIEL J. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney General.

STATEMENT FOR THE RECORD OF MARION E. (SPIKE) BOWMAN, DEPUTY GENERAL COUNSEL, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, BEFORE THE SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE, JULY 31, 2002

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, thank you for inviting me here today to testify on the legislative proposals concerning the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA). Holding this hearing demonstrates your collective and individual commitment to improving the security of our Nation. The Federal Bureau of Investigation greatly appreciates your leadership, and that of your colleagues in other committees on this very important topic.

The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act was written more than two decades ago. When adopted, the Act brought a degree of closure to fifty years of discussion concerning constitutional limits on the President's power to order electronic surveillance for national security purposes. A subsequent amendment brought physical search under the Act. In keeping with our standards of public governance, the proposals for the Act were publicly debated over a substantial period of time, compromises were reached and a statute eventually adopted. In the final analysis the standards governing when and how foreign intelligence surveillance or search would be conducted was a political one because it involved weighting of important public policy concerns surrounding both personal liberty and national security. That is how it should be.

In the intervening years FISA has proved its worth on countless occasions in preventing the occurrence or the continuation of harm to the national security. It has been a very effective tool and time has proved that this cooperative effort of the three branches of government can serve to protect the public without eroding civil liberties. Indeed, the legislative history shows that Congress intended that the Executive Branch keep a focus on civil liberties by giving great care and scrutiny every application before it is presented to a judge. We believe that intent has been fulfilled. The fact that an Article III judge is the final arbiter of compliance serves to give additional confidence to the public that the intent of the statute is fulfilled.

When FISA was enacted, terrorism was very different from what we see today. In the 1970s, terrorism more often targeted individuals, often carefully selected. This was the usual pattern of the Japanese Red Army, the Red Brigades and similar organizations listed by name in the legislative history of FISA. Today we see terrorism as far more lethal and far more indiscriminate than could have been imagined in 1978. It takes only the events of September 11, 2001 to fully comprehend the difference of a couple of decades.

But there is another difference as well. Where we once saw terrorism formed solely around organized groups, today we often see individuals willing to commit indiscriminate acts of terror. It may be that these individuals are affiliated with groups we do not see, but it may be that they are simply radicals who desire to bring about destruction. That brings us to the legislation being considered today.

The FBI uses investigative tools to try to prevent acts of terrorism wherever we can, but particularly to prevent terrorism directed at Americans or American interests. Most of our investigations occur within the United States and, for the most part, focus on individuals. Historically, terrorism subjects of FBI investigation have been associated with terrorist organizations. As a result, FBI has usually been able to associate an individual with a terrorist organization pled, for FISA purposes, as a foreign power. To a substantial extent, that remains true today. However, we are increasingly seeing terrorist suspects who appear to operate at a distance from these organizations. In perhaps an oversimplification, but illustrative nevertheless, what we see today are (1) agents of foreign powers in the traditional sense who are associated with some organization or discernible group, (2) individuals who appear to have connections with multiple terrorist organizations but who do not appear to owe allegiance to any one of them, but rather owe allegiance to the international Jihad movement and (3) individuals who appear to be personally oriented toward terrorism but with whom there is no known connection to a foreign power.

This phenomenon, which we have seen to be growing for the past two or three years, appears to stem from a social movement that began at some imprecise time, but certainly more than a decade ago. It is a global phenomenon which the FBI refers to as the International Jihad Movement. By way of background we believe we can see the contemporary development of this movement, and its focus on terrorism, rooted in the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

BACKGROUND

During the decade-long Soviet/Afghan conflict, anywhere from 10,000 to 25,000 Muslim fighters representing some forty-three countries put aside substantial cultural differences to fight alongside each other in Afghanistan. The force drawing them together was the Islamic concept of "umma" or Muslim community. In this concept, nationalism is secondary to the Muslim community as a whole. As a result, Muslims from disparate cultures trained together, formed relationships, sometimes assembled in groups that otherwise would have been at odds with one another and acquired common ideologies. They were also influenced by radical spiritual and temporal leaders, one of whom has gained prominence on a global scale—Usama Bin Liden.

Following the withdrawal of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan, many of these fighters returned to their homelands, but they returned with new skills and dangerous ideas. They now had newly-acquired terrorist training as guerrilla warfare was the only way they could combat the more advanced Soviet forces. They also returned with new concepts of community that had little to do with nationalism. Those concepts of community fed naturally into opposition to the adoption, and toleration, of western culture. As a result, many of the Arab-Afghan returnees united, or reunited, with indigenous radical Islamic groups they had left behind when they went to Afghanistan. These Arab-Afghan mujahedin, equipped with extensive weapons and explosives training, infused radicals and already established terrorist groups, resulting in the creation of significantly better trained and more highly motivated cells dedicated to jihad.

Feeding the radical element was the social fact that this occurred in nations where there was widespread poverty and unemployment. The success of the Arab intervention in Afghanistan was readily apparent, so when the Arab-Afghan returnees came home they discovered populations of young Muslims who increasingly were ready and even eager to view radical Islam as the only viable means of improving conditions in their countries. Seizing on widespread dissatisfaction with regimes that were brimming with un-Islamic ways, regimes that hosted foreign business and foreign military, many young Muslim males became eager to adopt the successful terrorist-related activities that had been successfully used in Afghanistan in the name of Islam. It was only a matter of time before these young Muslim males began to seek out the military and explosives training that the Arab-Afghan returnees possessed.

USAMA BIN LADEN

Usama bin Laden gained prominence during the Afghan war in large measure for his logistical support to the resistance. He financed recruitment, transportation and training of Arab nations who volunteered to fight alongside the Afghan mujahedin. The Afghan war was clearly a defining experience in his life. In a May, 1996 interview with Time Magazine, UBL stated: "in our religion there is a special place in the hereafter for those who participate in jihad. One day in Afghanistan was like 1,000 days in an ordinary mosque."

Although bin Laden was merely one leader among many during the Soviet-Afghan conflict, he was a wealthy Saudi who fought alongside the mujahedin. In consequence, his stature with the fighters was high during the war and he continued to rise in prominence such that, by 1998, he was able to announce a "fatwa" (religious ruling) that would be respected by far-flung Islamic radicals. In short, he stated that it is the duty of all Muslims to kill Americans: "in compliance with God's order, we issue the following fatwa to all Muslims: the ruling to kill the Americans and their allies, including civilians and military, is the individual duty for every Muslim who can do it in any country in which it is possible to do it."

Bin Laden was not alone in issuing this fatwa. It was signed as well by a coalition of leading Islamic militants to include Ayman Al-Zawahiri (at the time the leader of the Egyptian Islamic Jihad), Abu Yasr Rifa'i Ahmad Taha (Islamic Group leader) and Sheikh Fazl Ur Rahman (Harakat Ul Ansar leader). The fawa was issued under the name of the International Islamic Front for Jihad on the Jews and Christians. This fawa was significant as it was the first public call for attacks on Americans, both civilian and military, and because it reflected a unified position among recognized leaders in the radical Sunni Islamic community. In essence, the fatwa reflected the globalization of radical Islam.

There is a terrorist network of extremists that has been evolving in the murky terrain of Southwest Asia that uses its extremist views of Islam to justify terrorism. His organization, al Qaeda is but one example of this network.

AL QAEDA

Although Al-Qaeda functions independent of other terrorist organizations, it also functions through some of the terrorist organizations that operate under its umbrella or with its support, including: the Al-Jihad, the Al-Gamma Al-Islamiyya (Islamic Group—led by Sheik Omar Abdel Rahman and later by Ahmed Refai Taha, a/k/a "Abu Yasser al Masri,"), Egyptian Islamic Jihad, and a number of jihad groups in other countries, including the Sudan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Somalia, Eritrea, Djibouti, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Bosnia, Croatia, Albania, Algeria, Tunisia, Lebanon, the Philippines, Tajikistan, Azerbaijan, the Kashmiri region of India, and the Chechen region of Russia. Al-Qaeda also maintained cells and personnel in a number of countries to facilitate its activities, including in Kenya, Tanzania, the United Kingdom, Canada, and the United States. By banding together, Al-Qaeda proposed to work together against the perceived common enemies in the West—particularly the United States which Al-Qaeda regards as an "infidel" state which provides essential support for other "infidel" governments. Al-Qaeda responded to the presence of United States armed forces in the Gulf and the arrest, conviction and imprisonment in the United States of persons belonging to Al-Qaeda by issuing fatwas indicating that attacks against U.S. interests, domestic and foreign, civilian and military, were both proper and necessary. Those fatwas resulted in attacks against U.S. nationals in locations around the world including Somalia, Kenya, Tanzania, Yemen, and now in the United States. Since 1993, thousands of people have died in those attacks.

THE TRAINING CAMPS

With the globalization of radical Islam now well begun, the next task was gain adherents and promote international jihad. A major tool selected for this purpose was the promotion of terrorism training camps that had long been established in Afghanistan. It is important to note, that while terrorist adherents to what we have come to know as al Qaeda trained in the camps, many others did as well. For example, according to the convicted terrorist Ahmed Ressam, representatives of the Algerian Armed Islamic Group (GIA) and its off-shoot the Salafi Groups for Call and Combat (GSPC), HAMAS, Hizballah, the Egyptian Islamic Jihad (EIJ) and various other terrorists trained at the camps.

Ressam also reports that cells were formed, dependent, in part, on the timing of the arrival of the trainees, rather than on any cohesive or pre-existing organizational structure. As part of the training, cleric and other authority figures advised the cells of the targets that are deemed valid and proper. The training they received included placing bombs in airports, attacks against U.S. military installations, U.S. warships, embassies and business interests of the United States and Israel. Specifically included were hotels holding conferences of VIPs, military barracks, petroleum targets and information/technology centers. As part of the training, scenarios were developed that included all of these targets.

Ressam, who is not a member of al Qaeda, has stated that the cells were independent, but were given lists of the types of targets that were approved and were initiated into the doctrine of the international Jihad. Ressam explicitly noted that his own terrorism attack did not have bin Laden's blessing or his money, but he believed it would have been given had he asked for it. He did state that bin Laden urged more operations within the United States.

THE INTERNATIONAL JIHAD

We believe the suicide hijackers of September 11, 2001 acted in support of the 1998 fatwa which, in turn describes what we believe is the international jihad. During 1997 UBL described the "international jihad" as follows:

"The influence of the Afghan jihad on the Islamic world was so great and it necessitates that people should rise above many of their differences and unite their efforts against their enemy. Today, the nation is interacting well by uniting their efforts through jihad against the U.S. which has in collaboration with the Israeli government led the ferocious campaign against the Islamic world in occupying the holy sites of the Muslims. . . . [A]ny act of aggression against any of this land of a span of the hand measure makes it a duty for Muslims to send a sufficient number of their sons to fight off that aggression."

In May of 1988, UBL gave an interview in which he stated "God willing, you will see our work on the news. . . ." The following August the East African embassy bombings occurred. That was bin Laden speaking, but it should be remembered that the call to harm America is not limited to al Qaeda. Shortly after September 11 Mullah Omar said "the plan [to destroy America] is going ahead and God willing it is being implemented. . . ." Sheikh Ikrama Sabri, a Palestinian Mufti, said in a radio sermon in 1997, "Oh Allah, destroy America, her agents, and her allies! Cast them into their own traps, and cover the White House with black!" Ali Khamene'i, in 1998, said "The American regime is the enemy of [Iran's] Islamic government and our revolution." There are many other examples, but the lesson to be drawn is that al Qaeda is but one faction of a larger and very amorphous radical anti-western network that uses al Qaeda members as well as others sympathetic to al Qaeda's ideas or that share common hatreds.

Information from a variety of sources repeatedly carries the theme from Islamic radicals that expresses the opinion that we just don't get it. Terrorists world-wide speak of jihad and wonder why the western world is focused on groups rather than on the concepts that make them a community. One place to look at the phenomenon of the "international jihad" is the web. Like many other groups, Muslim extremists have found the Internet to be a convenient tool for spreading propaganda and helpful hints for their followers around the world. Web sites calling for jihad, or holy war, against the West are not uncommon.

One of the larger jihad-related Internet offers primers including "How Can I Train Myself for Jihad." Traffic on this site, which is available in more than a dozen languages, increased 10-fold following the attacks, according to a spokesman for the site.

The lesson to be taken from this is that al Qaeda is far less a large organization than a facilitator, sometimes orchestrator, of Islamic militants around the globe. These militants are linked by ideas and goals, not by organizational structure. The intent is establishment of a state, or states ruled by Islamic law and free of western influence. Bin Laden's contribution to the Islamic jihad is a creature of the modern world. He has spawned a global network of individuals with common, radical ideas, kept alive through modern communications and sustained through forged documents and money laundering activities on a global scale. While some may consider extremist Islam to be in retreat at the moment, its roots run deep and exceedingly wide. Those roots take many forms, one of which is the focus of this hearing.

In the final analysis, the International Jihad movement is comprised of dedicated individuals committed to establishing the umma through terrorist means. Many of these are persons who attended university together, trained in the camps together, traveled together. Al Qaeda and the international terrorists remain focused on the United States as their primary target. The United States and its allies, to include law enforcement and intelligence components worldwide have had an impact on the terrorists, but they are adapting to changing circumstances. Speaking solely from an operational perspective, investigation of these individuals who have no clear connection to organized terrorism, or tenuous ties to multiple organizations, is becoming increasingly difficult.

The current FISA statute has served the nation well, but the International Jihad Movement demonstrates the need to consider whether a different formulation is needed to address the contemporary terrorism problem. While I cannot discuss specific cases in a public hearing, the FBI has encountered individuals who cannot be sufficiently linked to a terrorist group or organization as required by FISA. The FBI greatly appreciates the Committee's consideration of this issue and looks forward to working with the Committee to find the best approach for appropriate investigation of such individuals.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO SHEILA C. JOY

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend Sheila C. Joy for her devoted service to the United States Department of Justice.

Sheila C. Joy was born in Springfield, MA, and graduated from the University of Massachusetts. After two years of civilian service in the United States Air Force, Mrs. Joy began her career with the United States Department of Justice. Beginning as a Staff Assistant, she successfully worked through the ranks and is presently a program manager responsible for reviewing judicial appointments in the Office of Policy Development. She has made great strides to ensure United States judges are fairly appointed to the bench, and I am honored to have had the opportunity to work so closely with her.

The Department of Justice is a better organization because of Mrs. Joy's hard work, and she can take great pride in all she has accomplished during her tenure. She is to be commended for her integrity, dedication, and fairness in reviewing judicial appointments. Mrs. Joy has been an outstanding model of excellence to the numerous men and women she has worked with during her thirty five years with the Department of Justice, and I am certain she will continue to set a fine example for others to follow as she continues her career. She is an excellent asset to the American justice system, and I applaud her for the positive impact she had made.

It has been a privilege to have worked with such an outstanding lady. Again, I want to thank Mrs. Joy for all of her tireless efforts and for the friendship she has provided me during our many years of working together. I wish Mrs. Joy and her three lovely children the best of luck in all future endeavors, and may the years to come bring good health and happiness.

MASSACHUSETTS MEMORIAL SERVICE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am honored to join all of you, the families of loved ones from across our Commonwealth who lost their lives last September 11.

We come to this birthplace of liberty to remember, to give honor, and to express our resolve.

All around us in this historic place are the images of famous leaders who brought life and nationhood to the ideals that were attacked a year ago, on a day whose dawn had seemed almost uniquely American in its sunny optimism.

Etched on the wall around this stage are the names of heroes who gave their lives for our country on September 11, 2001. The list is heartbreaking, and it goes on and on. These heroes were famous in a different way, famous to their friends for their fabled jumpshot in a neighborhood park, or prized in their firms for a brilliance tempered by laughter, or celebrated by their young children as super-heroes, able to launch them into the air with an easy toss, and always there to catch them. They expected to pass the ball again, to make another trade or tell another joke, to come home that night and read a bedtime story.

Then they were gone, in the darkness at mid-morning which succeeded that sunny dawn. We mourn them for the years that were too few and the hopes that were unfulfilled. We praise them for the way they lived, and in so many cases for the bravery in the way they died. And we as a country, as a community, as friends and neighbors and family, hold them in our hearts.

I spoke with a member of almost every family in Massachusetts who lost a loved one on the planes, or at Ground Zero in New York, or at the Pentagon. To those left behind, I say on this sad day: I know something of what you feel. To lose someone you love, and to lose them so suddenly, so unexpectedly, so terribly, to see them torn out of the fabric of life, is almost more than one can bear.

And then, although we know the passage of a year cannot heal that memory, we move on, because we have to, because they would want us to, and because there is still light left in the world, including the love they left us.

In a different time of grief, my brother Robert Kennedy quoted the ancient poet Aeschylus: "In our sleep, pain, which cannot forget, falls drop by drop upon the heart until, in our own despair, against our will, comes wisdom through the awful grace of God."

May God, this year and every year and every day, grant that grace to you the families.

And for all of us, there is something else that comes from last September 11. From the pain that day have come both wisdom and will.

We have learned anew the wisdom that as Americans, we are many, but we are also one.

On Flight 93, there was a unity of purpose and a fierce pride. Passengers who had never met before became a band of brothers and sisters, sacrificing their lives so that others might live. Many other individual acts of courage saved more lives than we can know or count at Ground Zero and the Pentagon.

People all across the country and of all ages asked what they could do, from giving their blood, to clearing rubble at the World Trade Center, to giving their dollars, to lending a shoulder to their neighbor to cry on. In countless ways, we came together, and founded a new American spirit of service to others.

The terrorists taught us a lesson different from the one they expected. They acted with hate, but we reached out to comfort and support one another with love. No one asked whether the rescuer leading them down the packed stairwell of the World Trade Center was rich or poor, Anglo or African-American or Hispanic, gay or straight. We gained a new determination as Americans to reject discrimination in all its hateful forms.

Out of the pain that day, Americans understood more powerfully than perhaps ever before the pledge of "liberty and justice for all."

To help those in need;
To give hope;
To share what we have;
To see suffering and try to heal it—

That is our lesson from this tragedy, and it is wisdom that must guide us over time. The new American spirit of service can and must become a new era of commitment to the ideals of compassion, equality, opportunity, and concern for one another. We as a society seek to save a life when a terrorist strikes, and we as a society must do as much when the terror or a dread disease strikes, or the terror of poverty steals opportunity.

May that legacy of 9/11, that legacy of love and compassion and caring, become our enduring tribute to all those who were lost.

Out of that day also came a new sense of national resolve and will. We are at war today, with a terrorism that has plagued too many places for too many years, and that has finally struck at the heart of America.

This is a conflict we did not seek, but must win, not alone for ourselves, but for the cause of freedom, tolerance and human rights around the world.

The ideas and ideals created long ago in this great hall have shaped the dreams of countless millions yearning to be free.

Now, as the greatest power on earth, we have a responsibility. Our gifts of strength and wealth and values can decide that the future will belong to the forces of hope and onto of hate.

This brighter future depends on victory against terrorism. It demands that we then continue in a long, tireless endeavor to make the world not only safer for us, but better for all. In our determination to defeat those who have attacked our people and our principles, we truly are "one nation under God, indivisible."

How true that was, how deeply we felt it, a year ago today. Together that day, we hurt and feared and hoped and prayed. And together now, we will prevail.

God bless all who were lost and all who lost them. God give us strength, and the wisdom to use it well. God bless America.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR FRED THOMPSON

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Tennessee Senator FRED THOMPSON, a stalwart conservative with a long and colorful career in both the private and public sectors. Senator THOMPSON has always been a vocal and active proponent of reducing the role of the federal government, lowering the tax burden on Americans and allowing individuals the freedom to make their own choices. His remarkable rise to a position of influence among his fellow lawmakers is a testament to the passion of his beliefs. Senator THOMPSON has been a valuable member of the Senate, and his presence will be missed when he retires at the end of the 107th Congress. I would like to take this opportunity to commend my fellow Southern colleague for his dedicated work on behalf of the people of Tennessee and wish him the best of luck as he leaves the Senate.

Born in my home state of Alabama, Senator THOMPSON grew up in Lawrenceburg, TN. He worked his way through undergraduate school at Memphis State University and then law school at Vanderbilt. Two years later, he was named an Assistant United States Attorney in Nashville, where his outstanding record brought him to the attention of then Senator Howard Baker, who tapped him to be the minority counsel to the Senate Watergate Committee. Following two years on the Committee, Senator THOMPSON continued his high profile law career when he was appointed by incoming Governor Lamar Alexander to investigate outgoing Governor Ray Blanton. Senator THOMPSON added to his growing reputation by uncovering a cash for clemency scheme that ultimately sent Governor Blanton to jail. Over the next several years, Senator THOMPSON continued to practice law in Nashville and in Washington. He also continued his work with Congress, working as Special Counsel to the Senate Committee on Intelligence and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

With an open election looming to fill the last two years of former Sen. Al Gore's term in 1994, Senator THOMPSON decided to enter the race. He championed his Tennessee roots, conservative values and desire to reform the Federal Government. His message resonated with the voters, who overwhelmingly supported him in the general election in 1994. In 1996, Senator THOMPSON was elected to a full term in the Senate, receiving more votes than any previous candidate for any office in Tennessee history.

Since joining the Senate, Senator THOMPSON has tirelessly worked to promote his conservative values. A fierce critic of federal bureaucracy, he has introduced legislation and held hearings aimed at producing a smaller, more efficient, and more accountable government. Through his work on the Finance Committee, he has focused his energy on reducing taxes, reforming the tax code and restoring Social Security and Medicare programs to long-term solvency. Admirably, he has always remained thoroughly independent and committed to his beliefs.

I have truly enjoyed working with Senator THOMPSON here in the Senate. He is a tremendous asset to the people of Tennessee and valuable member of the Republican party. I thank him for his many years of service and wish him the best in all future endeavors.

SOMALIA

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I wish to express my strong support for the efforts underway to establish clear systems for effective regulation and monitoring of Somali remittance companies. Right now, the United Nations Development Program is working to build the capacity of the Somali financial sector and to bring Somalis together with key stakeholders in the international banking community so that clear expectations, shared high standards, and meaningful enforcement mechanisms can be established. Somali remittance companies can survive, and can contribute the development of the Somali people, only if this effort is successful. I applaud this undertaking, and believe that the United States should provide assistance where appropriate.

As the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's Subcommittee on African Affairs, I held a hearing on U.S. policy options in Somalia earlier this year. In the wake of the attacks on September 11, I wanted to explore the issue of weak states, where manifestations of lawlessness such as piracy, illicit air transport networks, and traffic in arms and gemstones and people, can make the region attractive to terrorists and international criminals. The United States can no longer pretend that we have no stake in the fate of countries in distress—the Afghanistans and Somalias of our world, and the United States can no longer pretend that we can insulate ourselves from the difficult problems confronting those countries. We cannot ignore them, we cannot simply condemn them. We must work to strengthen state capacity and curtail opportunities for terrorists and other international criminals.

It is my intention to introduce legislation at the beginning of the 108th Congress aimed at focusing more coordinated and consistent attention on Somalia. The U.S. must work harder at providing an alternative to the extremist influences in Somalia by vigorously pursuing small-scale health and education initiatives. And we must help Somalia's surprisingly vigorous private sector, to begin building regulated, legitimate financial institutions in Somalia, which will be essential to any economic recovery in the country in the future. Otherwise, we leave it to illegitimate, shadowy forces to step into the breach.

One has only to meet a few of the many dynamic and committed Somalis who are working every day to build a better future for their countrymen to conclude that Somalia is not hopeless. But helping to rebuild capacity in Somalia will certainly not be easy. These efforts are important, and they deserve our attention and our support.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in February 2000 in Tucson, AZ. A gay man was beaten outside a bar. The assailant, Franchot Opela, 27, called the victim, Fabian Padilla, 23, a "faggot" and then beat Padilla to the ground with both fists. Padilla was treated for severe eye and head injuries resulting from the attack.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

SUPPORT OF S. 1739

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today in support of legislation introduced by Senator CLELAND, S. 1739, which seeks to improve security on motorcoaches and over-the-road buses nationwide. I became a cosponsor of S. 1739 in the wake of a September 30 attack in which two people were killed and more than two dozen others injured after a Greyhound bus skidded off a California highway. The bus driver had been stabbed in the throat by a passenger.

While it quickly became known that the incident had no links to terrorism, it served as a stark reminder that a significant part of America's transportation network remains vulnerable to attack. Every year, motorcoaches and over-the-road buses carried an estimated 800 million passengers to 4,000 communities nationwide, far in excess of the passenger load carried by the airlines or Amtrak.

I believe that it is vitally important that we address bus security concerns highlighted by the recent attack. A critical component in our fight against terrorism is protecting the security of our transportation system, including buses. We have to assume that any facet of our transportation system remains a target for violence. Terrorists in Israel have targeted buses with deadly effectiveness. So we have to take steps, like S. 1739, which will move us toward a more secure system across every mode of transportation and across our transportation infrastructure.

S. 1739 provides funding to the motorcoach industry to enhance security at a time when improved security is increasingly necessary but when the industry is least able to make new investments. Other forms of commercial passenger transportation including Amtrak, the airline and transit agencies have all received sizeable funding commitments from Congress for security upgrades, and the motorcoach industry should not be ignored when it comes to safety.

Specifically, this bipartisan legislation provides $400 million in grants to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury for over-the-road bus transportation security. The grants must be used for specified system-wide security upgrades, including the reimbursement of security-related costs incurred since September 11, 2001. The grants will allow bus operators to protect drivers, implement passenger screening programs, and construct or modify facilities. Grants could also be used to train employees in terrorist threat assessments, hire and train security officers, and install video surveillance and emergency communication equipment.

Many of these upgrades have already been undertaken by the industry since September 11. This bill will supplement and reimburse the industry for these efforts.

Since 9/11, Members of Congress have shown broad bipartisan support for addressing the issue of bus security. In April, S. 1739 was unanimously approved by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, of which Senator CLELAND and I are members. In May, a companion measure passed the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, also unanimously, and is pending on the House floor. Also, this summer Congress provided $15 million for that purpose in the Fiscal Year 2002 Supplemental Appropriation bill.

Given the fact that the intercity bus system is a crucial link in America's transportation system, I believe that Congress must act to secure that system against further attacks, and I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in a show of support for this legislation.

CIVIL LIBERTIES IN HONG KONG

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I'd like to take a few minutes this morning to call attention to recent disturbing trends with regard to democracy and civil liberties in Hong Kong.

As you know, Hong Kong recently marked 5 years under the sovereignty of the People's Republic of China. When the territory reverted from British to Chinese control in 1997, China's communist rulers in Beijing promised to respect its autonomy for a period of 50 years under the so-called "One Country, Two Systems" formula. They also agreed Hong Kong would move toward direct elections by 2007.

At the same time, however, Article 23 of the so-called Basic Law that became Hong Kong's new constitution required that the territory adopt legislation prohibiting "treason, secession, sedition or subversion" against the Chinese Government in Beijing, as well as "theft of state secrets."

The Hong Kong Bar Association, among others, did not believe new legislation was necessary, since existing Hong Kong laws were sufficient to deal with legitimate national security concerns. But Beijing felt otherwise.

When Chinese President Jiang Zemin and Vice Premier Qian Qichen traveled to Hong Kong in July to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the handover, they reportedly made clear to Tung Chee-Hwa, their hand-picked chief executive, that they wanted an anti-subversion statute adopted without further delay.

Three weeks ago, Tung's administration obliged, unveiling a plan for new legislation to implement Article 23. Tung called the plan "both liberal and reasonable." But it contains a number of provisions that could potentially seriously undermine civil liberties in Hong Kong.

For example, Tung's plan makes it an offense to organize or support the activities of organizations deemed by Beijing to threaten national security. It allows the police to enter and search private residences without a warrant to investigate suspected treason, sedition and subversion. It creates a new offense of "secession," presumably for advocating independence for Tibet or Taiwan. Citizens would be legally obliged to report on alleged "subversive" activities of friends, neighbors and colleagues. Meanwhile, Journalists could face criminal penalties simply for reporting information about relations between Hong Kong and Beijing.

Perhaps the most disturbing element of this legislative proposal is that it represents a further intrusion of Beijing's anti-democratic legal concepts and practices into Hong Kong. Definitions of offenses are vague, giving the government broad discretion to decide whom it wants to prosecute, or silence through the threat of prosecution. Although Tung says he will uphold human rights and civil liberties as the "pillars of Hong Kong's success," his Secretary of Security, Regina Ip, admits that, under the proposed legislation, she would essentially defer to Beijing to determine which organizations to prohibit. Falun Gong leaps to mind. The Dalai Lama's followers might also take heed.

Journalists and scholars have good reason to be concerned if the new legislation similarly incorporates Beijing's extremely broad definition of what constitutes a "state secret." Rabiya Kadir, a Muslim businesswoman once feted by Beijing as a "model minority," is currently serving an eight-year sentence under Beijing's state secrets law for mailing newspaper clippings to her husband in the United States. More recently, a prominent AIDS activist, Wan Yanhai, was detained for a month by the Beijing Bureau of State Security for leaking "state secrets." His alleged offense was revealing that hundreds of thousands of Chinese people might have been infected with HIV through unsafe blood transfusions, information the authorities didn't think people needed to have.

Regina Ip, who has been acting as Tung's point person for the new anti-subversion law, has attempted to reassure the plan's critics by saying Hong Kong's highly regarded independent courts will be responsible for interpreting and applying the new law. However, it was her government that undermined the integrity of those courts three years ago when it appealed a high-court decision on immigration that it didn't like to the National People's Congress Standing Committee in Beijing, as is its prerogative under the Basic Law. Beijing overturned Hong Kong's Final Court of Appeal in that case, setting a dangerous precedent in the eyes of Hong Kong's pro-democracy community.

Ultimately then, as a columnist recently pointed out in the Financial Times, the bulwark against erosion of civil liberties in Hong Kong may not be the territory's excellent judiciary but its executive, and that is not a comforting thought given the track record of Hong Kong's executive over the past five years. Tung Chee-Hwa has tightened controls on public demonstrations. His government turned away more than 100 people who sought to travel to Hong Kong to demonstrate at July's fifth anniversary ceremonies, so as not to embarrass his VIP guests from Beijing. After winning a second five-year term in March in a process in which exactly 800 people participated, he introduced a new system allowing him to fill his cabinet with hand-picked political appointees without the advice or consent of Hong Kong's legislature. There is no indication yet of any plans to make the process more democratic in 2007.

More recently, when democracy advocates suggested that the Government make a detailed version of its proposed anti-subversion legislation available for public comment before the bill is formally introduced in the Legislative Council, Regina Ip replied as follows:

Will taxi drivers, Chinese restaurant waiters, service staff at McDonald's hold a copy of the bill to debate with me article by article?

Ms. Ip's remarks reveal contempt for the right of the general public to be consulted about matters that concern it. Unfortunately, this attitude is not uncommon among the economic elite that runs Hong Kong. The Chamber of Commerce representative on the Legislative Council has openly remarked that popularly elected representatives would spend money irresponsibly if given power. Another well-known tycoon is fond of saying "no representation without taxation," turning the motto of the founders of our American democracy on its head. In other words, Hong Kong's is a government of the wealthy, by the wealthy and for the wealthy.

Of course, Hong Kong did not enjoy democracy under British rule, either. The business of Hong Kong has always been business. The difference now is that the territory's capitalist elite has decided that currying favor with the communist dictators in Beijing is good for business. If some civil liberties need to be sacrificed in the process, they appear willing to accept the bargain.

Many observers perceive this attitude being reflected in a growing tendency toward self-censorship within Hong Kong's major media. For example, two years ago the South China Morning Post, which aspires to enter the Mainland Chinese market, replaced its veteran, hard-hitting China editor, Willy Lam, with the former editor of the Beijing-controlled China Daily. Then, in April of this year, the paper's veteran Beijing bureau chief, Jasper Becker, was fired for insubordination after complaining that the paper's China coverage was being "watered down." I should add, however, that to its credit, the Post has been strongly critical of the government's recent legislative proposal.

Hong Kong today remains a vibrant and cosmopolitan city whose citizens enjoy a degree of civil and economic liberties far surpassing that of most other countries. But whereas the trend in much of the world is toward greater democracy, in Hong Kong things appear to be headed in the other direction.

China's President Jiang Zemin will visit the United States later this month. President Bush may want to raise the issue of autonomy and civil liberties in Hong Kong with him. That would be entirely appropriate. But, I think that we as a society can send a far more powerful message to the people who rule Hong Kong in a language they will understand. Those individuals fully appreciate that their future depends on their ability to perpetuate Hong Kong's status as a global financial center. Geography is no longer sufficient to maintain that status. Rather, what makes Hong Kong Hong Kong, what makes thousands of talented people from throughout the world eager to live and work there, is its spirit, its vitality, its spontaneity, its brashness, its "anything goes" attitude and its creativity. In the eyes of many, those qualities make Hong Kong one of the most exciting places on Earth.

Hong Kong's current rulers are set on a path that risks killing the goose that laid that golden egg. That's a message they need to hear not only from foreign politicians but from the international business community, the techno cognoscenti, the investors and the economic and cultural globe-trotters, voting with their feet and their pocketbooks. I encourage all such people who care about Hong Kong and about freedom to tell the Hong Kong authorities that, if Hong Kong sacrifices those things that make it unique and worth living in, we may as well set up shop in Shanghai.

NOTICE OF STUDY ON LOCAL ALL-DAY KINDERGARTEN PROGRAM

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would like to alert my colleagues to a recently released study that shows great promise for all kindergartners, based on achievement gains in Montgomery County, MD. On October 1st, the Washington Post published key findings from a 2-year study of Montgomery County's intensive all-day kindergarten program. For the past 2 years, Montgomery County has lengthened the school day, decreased class sizes, and implemented a revised curriculum in its 17 highest-poverty schools.

The article highlights the rise in reading achievement for all students involved in the program, with low-income students making the most progress. In these 17 schools, 51 percent of the most disadvantaged children met reading benchmarks at the end of first grade while only 45 percent of poor children in the rest of the county did. Students made gains of over 50 percentage points in all ethnic groups, also narrowing the achievement gap by as much as 11 percent on some measures. Superintendent Weast attributes the program's success to additional training for teachers and principals.

We must address the needs of our youngest students before our lack of attention compounds the disadvantages that many of them already bring to school. If children do not read fluently by the end of third grade, we know that many of them never will. We should do all we can to support further success. The results in Montgomery County show that we can make a difference to children's lives.

I ask unanimous consent that an article entitled "All-Day Kindergarten Posts Big Gains in Montgomery" be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 1, 2002]

ALL-DAY KINDERGARTEN POSTS BIG GAINS IN MONTGOMERY

(By a Washington Post Staff Writer)

An intensive and expensive all-day kindergarten program in Montgomery County has produced significant gains for poor children and helped them begin to catch up with higher-performing peers, a new study to be released today shows.

In tracking the reading progress made by 16,000 youngsters over two years in kindergarten and first grade, the report found that not only did achievement rise for all students involved in the program in high-poverty schools, but low-income students showed bigger gains.

Further, the report found that both poor and middle-class students in high-poverty schools—contrary to expectation—either matched or outperformed their peers in schools elsewhere in the county, many of whom were in half-day kindergarten programs.

The most significant exception was for children who do not speak English, a finding that has prompted Superintendent Jerry D. Weast to pledge intensive phonics instruction at schools with the most children living in poverty. "We are getting some emerging success," said a cautious Weast. "We're learning that you can attack poverty, that you don't have to have low expectations just because a child is poor."

The findings come at a time when the General Assembly has mandated full-day kindergarten for all Maryland schools as part of a new state aid formula. Montgomery's "kindergarten initiative" combines the longer day with smaller class sizes, a revised curriculum and additional teacher training.

Weast, who has won both praise and criticism for implementing the program first in the county's high-poverty schools, said the report vindicated his strategy and could prove a model for schools across the nation dealing with a vexing achievement gap that divides students along racial and poverty lines.

Indeed, the report found that the gap between higher-scoring white and Asian students and their African American and Latino peers had narrowed by as much as 11 points on some measures.

Other county and national studies have found that the achievement gap that largely divides middle-class and poor or non-English-speaking students is apparent on the first day of kindergarten and generally widens through the years, with one group of students on track for rigorous, college-prep courses and others for lower-level or remedial course work.

The Montgomery study found that the kindergarten initiative appears to be working well for children who live in poverty. In the 17 highest-poverty schools, 51 percent of the children considered poor enough to qualify for a federal lunch subsidy met reading benchmarks by the end of first grade, and only 45 percent of poor children elsewhere in the county did.

Despite the progress, officials said the gap still exists. Nearly 70 percent of the middle-class students in those schools met the same benchmark—about the same levels as their peers in other county schools.

The most troubling finding, Weast said, was for the limited English speakers, whose reading scores actually dipped slightly over the two years. And some of their scores on a test last spring of oral language, hearing and associating sounds with letters were lower by half than their English-speaking classmates.

Weast today will announce plans to introduce intensive phonics instruction in 18 schools that receive federal Title I funding for low-income students, the first such instruction ever in Montgomery County.

"It won't be drill and kill," Weast said, referring to often-maligned, repetitive basic skills programs. "But it makes a lot of sense for kids who are hearing a different language at home and hear the intonations and sounds of words differently. They need to be able to unlock words so they can pronounce them and then read them."

The kindergarten initiative began in 17 of the poorest schools in the fall of 2000. Seventeen more schools with large numbers of poor students were added in the fall of 2001. The report found impressive gains in both groups. This year, 22 schools have been added.

Research has found that if a kindergartner meets foundational benchmarks—such as recognizing letters and the sounds they represent and identifying simple words—they will be on track to read text by the end of first grade and able to read fluently by the end of third. Scientists have found that if children do not read fluently by then, many never will.

"We believe that is the key to academic rigor as they go up the grades," Weast said. "Reading."

Beyond touting results for poor children—a national dilemma that provided much of the impetus behind the federal No Child Left Behind law that took effect July 1—Weast said his report addresses middle-class parents' worries that their children will suffer academically at higher-poverty schools. The report found that such children scored on par with middle- and upper-middle-class students throughout the county.

"The nice thing about the changes we made is, you don't have to leave those schools now," Weast said, referring to middle-class flight that has affected some schools in the county's more diverse eastern side. "This ought to give comfort to those parents to stay with us."

School officials said some of the progress made over the two years may have a lot to do with the "practice effect," the fact that teachers and principals are becoming used to the new curriculum and training. Still, the results over time are key, and officials plan to follow these 16,000 students for several years.

Studies have found that gains made by children in Head Start, the federal program designed to help impoverished 4-year-olds, evaporate by the time the students are in third or fourth grade: They perform similarly to children who never had the benefit of such a program.

School officials in Montgomery say they want to change that with the kindergarten initiative and have followed up with smaller class sizes and a new, more focused curriculum this year for grades 1 and 2.

The report has already garnered interest from the national education community.

Michael Cohen, a former assistant secretary of education in the Clinton administration who has worked with large school districts throughout the country, said he was impressed not only that the studies were detailed and sophisticated, but that Weast was willing to make changes because of them.

"That has not been a common practice in education around the country," he said. "So it's important to note, and note when it's being done well."

Michael Ben-Avie, a researcher with the Yale Child Development Center, evaluated early drafts of the report and praised Montgomery leaders for their "willingness to undergo major change and for their willingness to really address the needs for our most vulnerable students." He found that the fact that the kindergarten initiative was a systematic overhaul and not a series of ad hoc pieces was what made it a powerful reform.

"They have been willing to take a sober-eyed view of the data and not try to cover it up, which happens a great deal," he said. "This is remarkable. And the results show they're well on their way."

GAO REPORT: FEMA'S HAZARD MITIGATION PROGRAMS

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the Federal Government's commitment to disaster mitigation and helping communities minimize the impact of natural and man-made hazards. Currently, the Senate is locked in a debate on how to help State and local officials prevent, prepare for, and respond to acts of terrorism. Homeland security will benefit from the Federal Emergency Management Agency's, FEMA, years of experience because disaster mitigation and terrorism preparedness have the same goal, helping people prepare for the worst.

FEMA's two multi-hazard mitigation programs, the post-disaster Hazard Mitigation Grant Program, HMGP, and the pre-disaster Project Impact program, are aimed at helping States and communities identify and address natural hazard risks they deem most significant.

In March 2001 the administration proposed the elimination of all pre-disaster mitigation funding because Project Impact was "ineffective." After learning that there had been no formal review of the effectiveness of this or any multi-hazard mitigation program, I requested that GAO review FEMA's disaster mitigation efforts. I am happy to announce the release of this comprehensive and timely report.

The parameters of this study have changed in the past year. In the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks, and the subsequent and prudent focus on homeland security, the Nation began noticing the relationship of pre-disaster mitigation programs to proposed new preparedness efforts for homeland security. I asked GAO to expand its study to include an assessment of how the increased emphasis on preventing and preparing for terrorism events is affecting natural hazard mitigation.

In March 2002 the administration proposed to change fundamentally FEMA's disaster mitigation strategy again by eliminating the HMGP. Currently, HMGP funding is issued to States after a presidentially declared disaster as a percentage of total Federal assistance, a process deemed ineffective and not cost-efficient by the administration. The administration instead is seeking to fund all mitigation through an expanded Project Impact-like program on a nationally competitive grant basis. The administration believes that such a program will ensure that mitigation funding remains stable from year to year and that the most cost-beneficial projects receive funding. At that time, I asked GAO to include this latest proposal.

GAO interviewed hazard mitigation officials from 24 states to get their perspectives on current FEMA programs and the administration's proposals. The States range from large population States, such as Florida and Illinois, to smaller States, such as Nebraska and Utah. GAO purposely selected both small and large States, containing urban and rural communities, that have received both small and large amounts of mitigation funding. Despite geographic differences, emergency management officials view FEMA's mitigation programs as successful and effective.

Emergency management officials described how, in addition to traditional "brick and mortar" programs, such as retrofitting buildings and relocating properties, mitigation effects can be intangible. Mitigation includes outreach activities, such as increasing public awareness and support for mitigation, building public-private partnerships to pool mitigation resources, and ever-important planning and risk assessment.

We must listen to these officials, the end-users of mitigation programs, when determining program success or failure. These dedicated men and women have many concerns over the administration's proposal. They worry that FEMA will lose the window of opportunity that exists after a disaster strikes if HMGP funds are not included in Federal assistance. This is when public and community interest in mitigating against future disasters is highest. They worry that a competitive grant system might exclude some States entirely from mitigation funding.

GAO also interviewed FEMA officials. FEMA headquarters and regional office personnel identified several challenges in implementing a national competitive grant program. Chief among them is establishing a process for comparing the costs and benefits of projects. Emergency managers around the country share FEMA's concerns that the outreach and planning activities they feel are so important will be curtailed because of the difficulty associated with assigning cost-benefit to such programs. This issue will have ramifications in homeland security when the new Department of Homeland Security is told to determine the cost-benefit of terrorism preparedness efforts.

I was heartened to learn that FEMA is working to ensure and strengthen natural hazard mitigation, response, and recovery efforts while attending to homeland security needs. FEMA officials are identifying and correcting redundancies in reporting, planning, training, and other activities across mitigation and preparedness programs. FEMA mitigation experts are working to identify terrorism mitigation activities that are also "all hazard" and address natural hazard mitigation priorities.

The Disaster Mitigation Act of 2000, passed by Congress 2 years ago, emphasized involvement by all States, funding for planning activities, and increased post-disaster mitigation funding for States willing to undertake enhanced mitigation efforts. FEMA has taken our directive to heart and is implementing multi-hazard mitigation programs in coordination and cooperation with State and local officials. While a focus on obtaining the most cost-effective program is well intended, I share the concerns of the emergency management community and FEMA personnel that assigning a dollar amount to the benefit of doing mitigation, or the cost of not doing it, is a difficult and ill-defined task. I share their doubts that consolidating the HMGP and Project Impact programs will make disaster mitigation more effective or successful.

After reviewing the GAO report, FEMA Director Joseph Allbaugh wrote to GAO, "I appreciate your support of my strongly held belief that funding and support of both pre- and post-disaster mitigation programs are critical to FEMA's success in leading the nation to reduce disaster losses." I agree with Director Allbaugh. We must continue to support pre-disaster mitigation as an investment for the future. I commend GAO on their insightful report, and I thank JayEtta Hecker and her team at GAO for their work.

HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, each year between September 15 and October 15, we celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month. This tradition began in 1968 when Congress set aside a week to celebrate Hispanic culture, achievements, and contributions to American culture and society. In 1988, Congress expanded the week to a month-long commemoration.

Gil Coronado, founder and chairman of Heroes and Heritage: Saluting a Legacy of Hispanic Patriotism and Pride, was one of the driving forces behind the creation of Hispanic Heritage Month. Mr. Coronado enlisted with the Air Force when he was just 16. He served for 30 years in Vietnam, Panama, Germany, and Spain before he retired as a colonel. During his stellar career, he received over 35 awards, including the Legion of Merit and the Bronze Star. Like Colonel Coronado, countless numbers of Hispanic Americans have answered the call, defending our liberty and freedoms as members of our Armed Forces and in other capacities. Twelve Hispanic Americans were among the firefighters killed on September 11 as they tried to rescue their fellow Americans trapped in the World Trade Center's two towers.

Hispanic contributions to America date back nearly 500 years to Easter, March 27, 1513 when Juan Ponce de Leon sighted land, which he claimed for Spain and named "La Florida," meaning "Land of Flowers." De Leon and his fellow explorers such as Alvarez de Pinela and Cabeza de Vaca traversed most of what we now call America's sunbelt. Hernando de Soto was the first European to discover the Mississippi River, an event depicted in one of the great historical canvases which hang in the Rotunda of the Capitol Building. St. Augustine, FL, was founded in 1565, 42 years before the English colony at Jamestown, VA, and 55 years before the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock in Massachusetts. St. Augustine is the oldest permanent European settlement on the North American continent. In 1787, St. Augustine had the first free, integrated public school.

America's diverse and vibrant Hispanic population has made enormous contributions to our Nation, its culture, and its economy. Former Senator Dennis Chavez, union organizers Antonia Pantoja and Caesar Chavez, entertainers Gloria Estefan and Jennifer Lopez, actor Martin Sheen, and baseball players Alex Rodriguez and Sammy Sosa are just a few of the Hispanic Americans who have done so much to enrich all Americans' lives.

My hometown, Detroit, has benefited greatly from Hispanic immigrants pursuing the American Dream. Southwest Detroit, known affectionately as Mexicantown by its residents, is the fastest growing part of the city. Hispanics from Mexico, El Salvador, Guatemala, Cuba, and other Caribbean nations have opened businesses, bought homes, and turned a once neglected urban neighborhood into a thriving community and one of the city's centers. Maria Elena Rodriguez, president of the Mexicantown Community Development Corporation, has been one of the primary catalysts of the turnaround.

Hispanic contributions to Michigan's businesses abound. The Kellogg Company, founded and headquartered in Battle Creek, is the world's leading cereal producer. It has millions of customers in over 160 countries. At present, the chief executive officer is Carlos Gutierrez, who started at Kellogg's as a sales representative in Mexico City over 25 years ago.

Other prominent Hispanics with ties to Michigan include Antonia Novello, who started her medical career at the University of Michigan. In 1990, she became the first woman U.S. Surgeon General, and the first Hispanic American to hold the post.

Grammy-winning musician Jose Feliciano, a native of Puerto Rico, made his professional debut at the Retort Coffee House in Detroit in 1963. He is, perhaps, most famous for his Latin-soul version of the Doors' hit, "Light My Fire," a blues-rock rendition of the "Star-Spangled Banner" performed at a 1968 World Series game between Detroit and St. Louis, and the Christmas classic, "Feliz Navidad."

Rebecca Arenas received the "Caesar Chavez Civil Rights Achievement Award" in 2000 for her work to improve the lives of Hispanics generally, and migrant workers in particular. Rebecca's parents brought her to Michigan from Crystal City, TX, when she was 5. They were migrant workers who chose Michigan because they believed Rebecca would get a better education. Rebecca has passed this commitment to education on to her children, all seven of whom have received a postsecondary education. Rebecca has worked tirelessly to increase Hispanics' access to education and health care and to boost their voter registration.

Hispanic Americans constitute the fastest growing segment of our population. Right now, one in eight Americans is Hispanic—about 32 million Americans. By 2050, one in four Americans will be Hispanic. Hispanic Americans are the fastest growing small business owners nationwide. Hispanic Americans will purchase $580 billion in goods and services this year. By 2007, that purchasing power will increase by 315 percent to $926 billion.

Cities such as Los Angeles, San Antonio, New York, and Miami traditionally have been centers of Hispanic influence. Increasingly, however, Hispanics and Hispanic Americans are moving to other parts of the country, such as Arkansas, Georgia, and North Carolina. This shift in migration will spread Hispanic culture and influence throughout the country.

As we celebrate and commemorate Hispanic Heritage Month, we must also acknowledge the challenges facing the community—and the country—that lie ahead. Too many Hispanic American youth are incarcerated. Hispanic Americans have a lower rate of educational achievement than the national average. A higher than average number of Hispanic Americans live in poverty.

Congress can and must help Hispanic Americans by pursuing fair and meaningful immigration reforms; supporting Hispanic education programs, increasing access to higher education, helping the economy to create good jobs at decent wages, and restoring benefits to legal immigrants under the Medicaid and State Children's Health Insurance Program—SCHIP.

So, Hispanic Heritage Month is a time to celebrate what has been accomplished and recognize what still needs to be done. I congratulate Hispanic Americans in Michigan and across America for their wonderful contributions to our country. And I pledge my efforts to ensuring that more Hispanic Americans have access to the great opportunities our country has to offer.

FEMA FIRE ACT GRANT PROGRAM

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I wish to offer a few remarks in support of the Assistance to Firefighters Grant Program, commonly known as FIRE Act grants. The FIRE Act grant program was established in fiscal year 2001, due in large part to the efforts of my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD.

Since its inception, the program has assisted firefighters across the Nation. I am especially pleased that this program has been a shining example of an effective partnership between local and Federal Governments. It provides Federal assistance to meet local objectives without imposing mandates or interfering with local prerogatives, and it provides Federal dollars directly to the fire departments. It also addresses critical needs, awarding grants for training, wellness and fitness programs, vehicles, firefighting equipment, personal protective equipment, and fire prevention.

FIRE Act grants have had a positive and very tangible impact on communities throughout the country, including in my home State of Wisconsin. In fiscal year 2002, as of October 1, 2002 my State received $2.445 million in grants awarded to 41 departments.

These grants help firefighters to do their job better, make our neighborhoods safer, and, very importantly, give residents peace of mind. Increasing the training and equipment available to firefighters fosters an environment of enhanced safety between firefighters and the communities they serve. Keeping our communities safe has been and should continue to be a top priority for all of us. As the tragic events of September 11 have shown our Nation, local firefighters play a vital role to protect and secure our communities. We should give them the support they need.

As I travel through Wisconsin and talk to local firefighters and emergency response personnel, I hear the same refrain, time after time: the FIRE Act grant program is vital to their work and has enabled them to get needed equipment and training that they would otherwise be unable to afford.

We have taken up funding for the FIRE Act grant program in this body numerous times since its inception. In the wake of the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C. on September 11, 2001, the Congress amended the fiscal year 2002 Department of Defense Authorization Act to provide increased authorization levels to allow up to $900 million per year to be allocated for the FIRE Act grant program. The program was also expanded to allow grant applicants to apply for equipment and training funds to help firefighters respond to terrorist attacks or attacks using weapons of mass destruction. Additionally, Congress, through both the fiscal year 2002

VA-HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations bill and the Homeland Security package in the fiscal year 2002 Department of Defense Appropriations Act, appropriated $360 million to the FIRE Act grant program.

As we finalize our appropriations bills this year we should continue to allocate resources to this important program. Keeping our communities safe has been and should continue to be a top priority for all of us. As the tragic events of September 11 have shown our Nation, local firefighters play a vital role to protect and secure our communities. We should give them the support they need.

THE NATIONAL INTEGRATED BALLISTICS INFORMATION NETWORK

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to bring the National Integrated Ballistics Information Network or NIBIN to the attention of my colleagues. NIBIN is an interconnected, computer-assisted ballistics imaging system that allows forensic firearms examiners to obtain computerized images of the unique marking made on bullets and casings when a gun is fired. Through NIBIN, investigators can rapidly compare these markings with images in the database of Federal, State, and local law enforcement laboratories. Law enforcement officials can then link evidence from multiple crime scenes, identify patterns of criminal activity, and possibly lead investigators to the arrest of suspects.

As an investigative instrument, ballistics imaging complements crime gun tracing. Crime gun tracing consists of tracking the history of a gun used to commit a crime. By tracing crime guns, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms helps State and local law enforcement agencies solve firearms-related crime by identifying suppliers of multiple-crime guns, and gun trafficking patterns. According to an ATF report, since March 2000, the NIBIN in coordination with crime gun tracing efforts has produced more than 8,800 ballistics matches, linking over 17,600 crime scenes. Some of these matches would not have been made without the use of a computer-assisted ballistics imaging system.

I believe that the NIBIN should be expanded, and that is why I have cosponsored the Ballistics, Law Assistance, and Safety Technology Act or BLAST which would require licensed firearms manufacturers to test fire firearms, prepare ballistics images of fired bullets and casings of new firearms. Expanding NIBIN to include these ballistics images would increase ATF's crime gun tracing capabilities. ATF agents could quickly identify firearms even when criminals had obliterated the serial number by using the ballistics images of cartridge cases and bullets recovered at crime scenes. In fact, they could identify the firearm used in the crime without actually recovering that firearm. This bill contains strict provisions stating that ballistics information of individual guns may not be used for prosecutorial purposes unless law enforcement officials have a reasonable belief that a crime has been committed and that ballistics information would assist in the investigation of that crime.

I believe this is sensible legislation that will strengthen law enforcement's ability to effectively track down criminals and I urge my colleagues to support it.

THE PROSECUTORIAL REMEDIES AND TOOLS AGAINST EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN TODAY (PROTECT) ACT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to urge the Senate to pass S. 2520, the Prosecutorial Remedies and Tools Against the Exploitation of Children Today, PROTECT, Act of 2002. This bill and the substitute I offer will protect our Nation's children from exploitation by those who produce and distribute child pornography, within the parameters of the First Amendment. I was an original cosponsor of S. 2520 and joined Senator HATCH, the ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee, on the Senate floor when the bill was introduced.

Since that time, I have been working with Senator HATCH both to improve the bill that we introduced together and to build consensus for it. Unlike the Administration's bill, which has been widely criticized by constitutional and criminal law scholars and practitioners, we have been largely successful in that effort. The substitute I offer today is virtually identical to the version circulated by Senator HATCH before the October 8, 2002 meeting of the Judiciary Committee. I am glad to report that this substitute has been approved by every single Democratic Senator. Moreover, every Democratic Senator has agreed to discharge S. 2520 from the Judiciary Committee for consideration and passage by the Senate, with a refining amendment.

I am now asking my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle to lift any holds and to allow this important legislation to pass the Senate. That way, the House may take up the bill and the PROTECT Act may become law before we adjourn. I know that there are some who would rather play politics with this issue, but I hope that they reconsider. It is more important that we unite to pass a bill that will both protect our Nation's children and produce convictions rather than tying up prosecutorial resources litigating the constitutionality of the tools we give the Justice Department to use. This legislation will accomplish those goals.

Two weeks ago I convened a hearing on this issue to hear from the Justice Department, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, CMEC, and constitutional scholars. The constitutional scholars testified that the provisions of S. 2520 were likely to withstand the inevitable court challenges ahead. Unfortunately, they could not say the same of the Administration's proposal and H.R. 4623. Professor Frederick Schauer from Harvard, who served on the Meese Commission on pornography and authored its findings, as well as Professor Anne Coughlin from the University of Virginia both agreed that the Administration's bill and H.R. 4623 crossed over the First Amendment line after the Supreme Court's decision in Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 122 S. Ct. 1389. Even the ACLU has passed along views from its First Amendment expert that S. 2520 is "well crafted and should survive constitutional scrutiny."

That point is crucially important, because it does no one any good to pass a "quick fix" law that will land us right back where we started in five years, with no valid law on the books to protect our Nation's children from exploitation. We owe our children more than a press conference on this issue, we owe them a law that lasts.

I am not alone in that view. Testimony at the Judiciary Committee hearing made this point clearly. Professor Schauer testified in support of the basic provisions of the PROTECT Act, but warned us about the Administration's proposal. Incidentally, this same constitutional law scholar testified in favor of the Child Pornography Prevention Act, CPPA, in 1996, but he also correctly warned us then about the precise parts of that law that would be struck down. Here is what he said this time around:

[W]hether it is open to academic or congressional criticism, Justice Kennedy's opinion for a 7-2 Court still represents the definitive and authoritative interpretation of the First Amendment in the child pornography context, and thus represents the law. Legislation inconsistent with Free Speech Coalition would not only be inconsistent with current constitutional law, therefore, but would also represent a tactical mistake in an attempt to combat the horror of child pornography. As the six year course of litigation under the previous Act so well demonstrates, constitutionally suspect legislation under existing Supreme Court interpretations of the First Amendment, whatever we may think of the wisdom and accuracy of those interpretations, puts the process of prosecuting the creators of child pornography on hold while the appellate courts proceed at their own slow pace. There is room in our legislative world for legislation that is largely symbolic, but for Congress to enact symbolic but likely unconstitutional legislation would have the principal effect of postponing for conceivably six more years the ability to prosecute those creators of child pornography whose prosecution is consistent with the Supreme Court's view of the First Amendment.

After our Judiciary Committee hearing, Senator HATCH and I continued to work to improve our bill to address concerns that had been raised. We worked to come up with a Hatch-Leahy substitute amendment for consideration by the Judiciary Committee that included technical corrections and improvements to the original text of S. 2520 that we could both agree upon. These included addressing some issues raised by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, CMEC, concerning the scope of the victim shield provision to limit that provision to "non-physical" information.

The changes in the proposed Hatch-Leahy substitute also included adopting the House bill's measures allowing the CMEC to share information from its tip line directly with State and local law enforcement officers, instead of always passing the information through the FBI. Although the Administration did not originally ask for this change, the CMEC has reported that the FBI is either unwilling or unable to share information from the child exploitation tip line in a timely manner with state and local law enforcement. As the Chairman of the Committee charged with overseeing the FBI, I was disappointed to hear this appraisal of the FBI. To remedy this situation, and in the spirit of compromise and reconciling this legislation with the House passed bill, the substitute to S. 2520 incorporates this change.

I note that Senator HATCH would not agree to accept my proposal that we also include a provision that would ensure that tips to the child exploitation tip lines come from "non governmental sources" so that government agents could not "tickle" the tip line to try to avoid the legal requirements of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act. I did not insist on this important provision because, with time running out in this Congress, we must all compromise if we want to pass a bill, and I want to pass this bill.

In any event, I placed S. 2520 on the Judiciary Committee agenda for its meeting on October 8, 2002. Unfortunately, due to procedural issues, including the two hour rule that was invoked because of the debate on Iraq, and procedural maneuvering that centered around judicial nominations, members from the other side of the aisle objected to the consideration of this and all other legislative proposals before the Judiciary Committee. The Judiciary Committee was, consequently, unable to consider the bipartisan substitute circulated by Senator HATCH, and to which I agreed.

The substitute for which I now seek unanimous consent is identical to the proposed Committee substitute that Senator HATCH circulated with two exceptions. First, the substitute removes three lines that were not in the original language of S. 2520 as introduced by Senator HATCH and that were inadvertently included in the version of the substitute circulated by Senator HATCH. Indeed, I am advised that Senator HATCH was prepared to strike these 3 lines had the Judiciary Committee considered the substitute. The Leahy amendment simply corrects this inadvertent error, which was totally understandable in the rush of business.

The second change the substitute makes in order to assure swift passage of this measure is to render the new affirmative defense created in S. 2520 available to defendants who can prove that actual adults, and no children, were used to create the visual images involved. This change would provide no help to defendants seeking to assert a "virtual porn" defense, which would still be blocked both for the new category of material created by the statute and any obscene child pornography. But in the case of a defendant who can, for instance, actually produce in court the 25-year old that is shown in the allegedly obscene material and prove that it is not, in fact, child pornography, or even virtual child pornography, the defense would be available. Indeed, Justice O'Connor in her concurring opinion in the Free Speech case specifically concluded that the prior law's prohibition on such "youthful adult" pornography was overbroad. As the testimony at our Committee hearing made clear, we should be careful not to repeat this mistake.

Other than that, this substitute is exactly the same as the substitute circulated by Senator HATCH before the Judiciary Committee's meeting on October 8, 2002. The definitions of child pornography are the same; the new tools for prosecutors to catch and punish those who exploit children are the same; the new tools given to the Center for Missing and Exploited Children are the same. This is, for all intent and purposes, the same as the Hatch-Leahy substitute.

This is a bipartisan compromise that will protect our children and honor the Constitution. I urge members from the other side of the aisle to join us. Do not hold this bill hostage as part of some effort at political payback or a "tit for tat" strategy. Let this bill pass the Senate and give law enforcement the tools they need to protect our children in the internet age.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO STEVE JORDAN

• Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding public servant and marine scientist, Steve Jordan. Steve is retiring after a distinguished 28-year career with the Maryland Department of Natural Resources, in higher educational institutions in Maryland and with the U.S.

Army Corps of Engineers. I want to extend my personal congratulations and thanks for his many years of service and contributions to improving our research and management capabilities in the Chesapeake Bay and one of the Bay's premier research laboratories, the Oxford Cooperative Lab.

Steve has dedicated nearly three decades of his life to solving some of the key living marine resource problems of the Chesapeake Bay, the diseases that have devastated the Bay's oyster populations, the loss of critical habitat, and the impacts of pollutants and low dissolved oxygen on the Bay's finfish and shellfish populations. A graduate of The American University, Steve worked his way through a master's degree in Biology at Morehead State College in Kentucky and a Ph.D. in marine, estuarine and environmental science from the University of Maryland. He was selected as a Sea Grant Fellow with the University of Maryland and Horn Point Environmental Laboratory and served as a faculty research associate with the University of Maryland Eastern Shore before being named to head up the Maryland Department of Natural Resources' Habitat Impacts Program which managed several aspects of Maryland's participation in the Chesapeake Bay Program.

I came to know Steve 10 years ago when he was appointed director of the Oxford Cooperative Laboratory in Oxford, MD. For those who are not familiar with the Oxford Lab, it is a unique partnership between the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the Maryland Department of Natural Resources. Located on a tidal tributary of the Chesapeake Bay, the lab has long been considered one of the preeminent centers in the Nation for its work in diagnosing all aspects of diseases, infectious and non-infectious, which affect living marine resources. At the time that Steve joined the facility, the laboratory was 33 years old and in great need of capital improvements. The poor physical condition of the facility was contributing significantly to low employee morale and a high staff attrition rate. Thanks to Steve's creative leadership, a major renovation and expansion of the laboratory was completed, leveraging a $750,000 Federal appropriation into a $2 million project through the use of DNR construction crews. The project not only served as a model for interagency cooperation, but provided substantial savings to the taxpayers as well. Steve also added new research programs, modern equipment, and helped bring about a renewed workplace atmosphere.

In addition to his management responsibilities and achievements, Steve has continued to conduct research that is vital to improving our understanding of the Bay's living marine resources.

He has published or contributed to numerous studies and symposia on oyster diseases, lesions in fish, and other critical problems. He has chaired or participated in many work groups examining key living resource research needs and management strategies and is a member or leader of half a dozen professional associations including the American Fisheries Society, National Shellfisheries Association, Atlantic Estuarine Research Society, and National Association of Marine Laboratories. In recognition of his outstanding service, Steve has received numerous awards and commendations, including certificates of appreciation from both the Chesapeake Bay Program and the Maryland Department of Natural Resources and an excellence award from Maryland Governor Schaefer for the Chesapeake Executive Council.

The efforts of Steve Jordan throughout the past 28 years have earned him the respect and admiration of everyone with whom he has worked. The Chesapeake Bay restoration effort has been enhanced due to his labors and the Cooperative Oxford Laboratory has been renewed. I want to extend my personal congratulations and thanks for his many years of hard work and dedication and wish him the best in his future endeavors.●

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PADUCAH GASEOUS DIFFUSION PLANT

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant and all its workers, past and present, on the occasion of the facility's upcoming 50th anniversary, which will be celebrated by the Paducah community on October 24th.

The Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant is currently the only operating uranium enrichment facility in the United States. Production of enriched uranium began in Paducah in 1952, and the plant has operated continuously since that time. Until 1964, the plant's output was almost entirely for the purposes of national defense as it produced fissionable material for our country's nuclear arsenal. The Paducah workers during that period played a vital role in securing our freedom and helped America prevail in the cold war. Unfortunately, the Federal Government didn't always do right by the workers, who were often exposed to hazardous conditions and materials which would later sicken and even kill some. Even today, we are still working to correct this shameful injustice.

After 1964, Paducah production began shifting to enriched uranium for commercial nuclear reactors; helping to provide the benefits of cleanly generated electric power to millions of people. After 1973, Paducah no longer enriched uranium for military purposes. However, the plant continues to help create a more secure world as the U.S. recipient for nuclear materials from the former Soviet arsenal. Under the Megatons to Megawatts program, nuclear weapons are dismantled in Russia and the nuclear material is shipped to Paducah where it is repackaged and shipped worldwide for civilian electric power production.

Over the last half century, a number of companies have operated the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant. Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Company, (later Union Carbide) was the original operator of the plant. Successor operators included Martin Marietta Energy Systems, Lockheed Martin Energy Systems, and finally United States Enrichment Corporation, which took over direct operation of the plant in 1999, and continues as the operator today. Today 1,500 workers are employed at the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant. What is remarkable is that despite the past sins of the Federal Government, these employees remain dedicated to their jobs and the important work they perform every day. It is a testament to those individuals in particular and this region in general.

In addition to the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant itself, an entire complex of supporting plants were built to support enrichment activities at Paducah. Two electric generating plants were constructed to supply the large power demands of the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant. These were the TVA Shawnee Steam Plant in western McCracken County, Kentucky, and the EEI plant in Joppa, Illinois. Additionally, a uranium hexafluoride plant was constructed in Metropolis, IL. Together, these four facilities comprise the economic and industrial heart of the region.

In recent years, we have learned that there were often risks associated with work at Paducah, particularly during the earlier years of its operation. Some workers were exposed to cancer-causing chemicals and radiological hazards. Many of these workers have now benefited from the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program, which I am proud to have helped bring into existence. Working alongside the union representing the workers, I have also fought to make sure that medical screening is available to all workers so that they may be tested and treated for any problems they incur as a result of working at the plant. We have also embarked upon the task of cleaning up some of the legacy waste materials left on the site. The Department of Energy's recently announced DUF6 conversion plant will be a huge step in this direction, as it will clean up thousands of cylinders of depleted uranium hexafluoride which have been stored on the site for decades. The conversion plant additionally will add new jobs to the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant complex.

While significant challenges lie ahead for America's domestic uranium enrichment industry, it is appropriate to pause on this occasion to commemorate the Golden Anniversary of the Paducah Gaseous Diffusion Plant, and the dedicated service of all the employees over the last half century. The workers at Paducah today continue the fine tradition of service, commitment, and productivity. I am sure they are up to any future challenge to be met in keeping a viable domestic uranium enrichment capability.●

TRIBUTE TO SCARLOTTE DEUPREE

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Scarlotte Deupree, Miss Alabama 2002. Ms. Deupree was recently named First Runner Up in the 2003 Miss America Pageant.

The accomplishments of Ms. Deupree are many. She coordinated Alabama's first Women in Literacy Summit in July, 2001 and was awarded a National Daily Point of Light for her work to promote literacy. She is a Distinguished Partner of the Literacy Council of Central Alabama and has been a certified literacy tutor with the Laubach Literacy Council International.

Ms. Deupree is also a former co-chair of the Sylacauga Adult Literacy Council and an instructor with the Adult Literacy Education Resource, ALERT. She is a graduate of the Sylacauga High School Honors Program and is an English major at Samford University in Birmingham, AL.

Ms. Deupree is the daughter of James and Joy Deupree of Birmingham. Scarlotte Deupree is a remarkable young woman, and we are proud to have her serve as our Miss Alabama.●

IN HONOR OF THE SERVICE OF THE HONORABLE M.D. CROCKER, U.S. DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, today I honor and bring to the Senate's attention the exceptional judicial career and service of Myron D. Crocker, U.S. District Court Judge for the Eastern District of California.

A graduate of California State University at Fresno and the University of California's Boalt Hall School of Law, he was appointed to the Federal bench by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1959. Judge Crocker continued to carry an active caseload after taking senior status in 1981. He is retiring after 43 years of dedicated service as a federal judge.

Judge Crocker served under 10 presidents, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford, Carter, Reagan, Bush, Clinton and George W. Bush. Our current, President George W. Bush, was just 13 years old when Judge Crocker was named to the bench.

He is believed to have served longer than any other sitting Federal judge in the Nation. He has presided over many high profile cases in the Fresno area and during his travels throughout the United States as a visiting judge.

Judge Crocker is well respected throughout the legal community. He has served California and the United States with great distinction. I am pleased to pay tribute to him today and I encourage my colleagues to join me in wishing Judge Crocker and his family the very best as he celebrates his retirement from the Eastern District.●

At the request of Mr. GREGG, the name of the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2935, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants for the operation of mosquito control programs to prevent and control mosquito-borne diseases.

S. 2935

At the request of Ms. LANDRIEU, the names of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mrs. LINCOLN) and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. JOHNSON) were added as cosponsors of S. 2935, supra.

S. 3054

At the request of Mr. LIEBERMAN, the name of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) was added as a cosponsor of S. 3054, a bill to provide for full voting representation in Congress for the citizens of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

S. J. RES. 49

At the request of Mr. AKAKA, the name of the Senator from Washington (Mrs. MURRAY) was added as a cosponsor of S. J. Res. 49, a joint resolution recognizing the contributions of Patsy Takemoto Mink.

S. RES. 307

At the request of Mr. TORRICELLI, the name of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. CONRAD) was added as a cosponsor of S. Res. 307, a resolution reaffirming support of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and anticipating the commemoration of the 15th anniversary of the enactment of the Genocide Convention Implementation Act of 1987 (the Proxmire Act) on November 4, 2003.

S. RES. 322

At the request of Mrs. LINCOLN, the name of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD) was added as a cosponsor of S. Res. 322, a resolution designating November 2002, as "National Epilepsy Awareness Month".

S. CON. RES. 94

At the request of Mr. WYDEN, the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SANTORUM) was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 94, A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that public awareness and education about the importance of health care coverage is of the utmost priority and that a National Importance of Health Care Coverage Month should be established to promote that awareness and education.

S. CON. RES. 138

At the request of Mr. REID, the name of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 138, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Health And Human Services should conduct or support research on certain tests to screen for ovarian cancer, and Federal health care programs and group and individual health plans should cover the tests if demonstrated to be effective, and for other purposes.

S. CON. RES. 142

At the request of Mr. SMITH of Oregon, the name of the Senator from Maine (Ms. COLLINS) was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 142, a concurrent resolution expressing support for the goals and ideas of a day of tribute to all firefighters who have died in the line of duty and recognizing the important mission of the Fallen Firefighters Foundation in assisting family members to overcome the loss of their fallen heroes.

S. CON. RES. 148

At the request of Mr. BROWNBACK, the names of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DURBIN) and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) were added as cosponsors of S. Con. Res. 148, a concurrent resolution recognizing the significance of bread in American history, culture, and daily diet.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 3111. A bill to compensate agricultural producers in the State of New Mexico that suffered crop losses as a result of use of a herbicide by the Bureau of Land Management; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that I do believe should not be necessary, and I hope ultimately will not be needed. Unfortunately, the failure of the Federal Government to own up to its responsibility has left a small group of farmers in Southern New Mexico with no other option.

As I understand it, last July the Bureau of Land Management and the Natural Resources Conservation Service applied herbicide, Tebuthiuron, on a ranch in Southern Eddy County to help control woody brush. The brush control was part of an EQIP project under NRCS.

I have no reason to doubt the application was consistent with label requirements and normal practice. Unfortunately, as frequently happens in New Mexico in July, a heavy rainstorm struck the area and the pellets of herbicide were apparently washed into the Black River. The river is the source of irrigation water for a number of farmers in the vicinity of the town of Malaga.

Unaware of the contamination in the water, farmers irrigated their fields in the normal way. Almost immediately, damage to cotton, hay and other crops was observed. The Eddy County Extension Office of the Cooperative Extension Service at New Mexico State University was asked to investigate the damage to the crops.

Mr. Woods E. Houghton of the Eddy County Office conducted a thorough review of the evidence and in a report dated August 20, 2002, concluded that Tebuthiuron was the likely cause of the crop damage. The report noted levels of Tebuthiuron of over 2 parts per million in some samples. Later tests by the State Chemistry Laboratory found levels over 5 ppm. I ask unanimous consent that the August 20th Cooperative Extension Service report be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, exhibit 1.

All the evidence seems to point to the government's application of Tebuthiuron as the most likely source of the poisoning of the crops in Malaga. Last month, I asked the heads of BLM and NRCS to look into the situation and to advise me what recourse is available to the farmers who have lost their crops. Unfortunately, the agencies have not assumed any responsibility for the contamination. Moreover, normal crop insurance doesn't cover damage caused by chemicals.

What are the farmers of Malaga, NM, to do? Through no fault of their own, they have lost their crops, and the Federal Government is not willing to take responsibility. For example, Mr. Oscar Vasquez and his family have lost 130 acres of cotton, 20 acres of hay and 1 acre of full-grown pecan trees. As Mr. Vasquez points out, his losses may persist for several years. He has asked for my assistance in securing compensation for his losses. I ask unanimous consent that a letter to me by Mr. Vasquez be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, exhibit 2. It appears that as many as nine farmers have suffered direct losses from the contamination of their crops and an additional thirteen farmers suffered losses when they couldn't irrigate because of the contamination in the water.

I have urged the heads of BLM and NRCS in the strongest terms possible to do what they can to assist the farmers of Malaga. Unfortunately, nobody wants to take responsibility. The Federal Government's response so far is to suggest the farmers sue the government, but that's a long, drawn-out process. It is also an unacceptable response if the Federal Government is found to be responsible.

The farmers of Malaga need help paying their bills now. These are not rich people, but hard working family farmers. Many have farmed the same land for many, many years. I ask unanimous consent that a recent article from the Carlsbad Current Argus describing the impact this event is having on a number of the farmers of Malaga be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks, exhibit 3.

At this point I don't see any other option than to ask that Congress provide some relief to the farmers of Malaga that have suffered losses because of this unfortunate situation. I note that last year Congress provided financial compensation to farmers in Idaho that suffered crop losses in a very similar situation and where BLM and NRCS refused to provide compensation. When a federal program was clearly the source of the contamination in the water, I do believe the government has a responsibility to come to the assistance of the people who have suffered losses.

It is my hope that the agencies involved will step forward, acknowledge their responsibility, and do what is right and necessary to compensate the farmers. Unfortunately, it now appears the agencies are not inclined to do the right thing. Instead, they tell us the affected farmers are free to file a tort claim; we all know what a costly and time-consuming process any legal action can be. However, the farmers need help right now. While it is not the best way, I do believe Congressional action may be the only way of getting these farmers the financial help they need in a timely manner.

The bill I am introducing today simply authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, to use funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to compensate the farmers for their losses. We are still working with the Cooperative Extension Service at New Mexico State University to determine the total amount of the losses, but in light of the small area affected, I fully expect the sums needed to be very modest, indeed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter supporting this legislation from Frank DuBois, New Mexico's Secretary of Agriculture, exhibit 4, and a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and additional material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3111

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COMPENSATION OF NEW MEXICO PRODUCERS FOR CROP DAMAGE FROM BLM USE OF HERBICIDE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, may use such funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation as are necessary to compensate agricultural producers in the State of New Mexico that suffered crop losses as a result of the use of the herbicide tebuthiuron by the Bureau of Land Management during the 2002 calendar year.

(b) LIABILITY.—Nothing in this section constitutes an admission of liability by the United States arising from the use of the herbicide tebuthiuron by the Bureau of Land Management.

(c) REGULATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to implement this section.

(2) PROCEDURE.—The promulgation of the regulations and administration of this section shall be made without regard to—

(A) the notice and comment provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code;

(B) the Statement of Policy of the Secretary of Agriculture effective July 24, 1971 (36 Fed. Reg. 13804), relating to notices of proposed rulemaking and public participation in rulemaking; and

(C) chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code (commonly known as the "Paperwork Reduction Act").

(3) CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW OF AGENCY RULEMAKING.—In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary shall use the authority provided under section 808 of title 5, United States Code.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE,
NEW MEXICO STATE UNIVERSITY,

Saturation report of cotton damage in the Malaga NM area approximately, 350 acres.

Background: Oscar Vasquez farm, and his landlords.

2001 crop year, cotton except 10 acres (Duarte); 23 acres on home place, which was in alfalfa.

Pre 15 January 2002 field were moldboard, disked to comply with pink bollworm regulations. They were also treated with 1 pint Trifluralin, 1 pint Caporal per acre. This was incorporated with a spring tooth harrow and disked one time. Watered on 15-30 January 2002 and first part of February 2002, with black river water.

15 March 2002 stale bed worked up.

21 April 2002 Planted with DG-206 NK seed.

25 June 2002 irrigated with CID water.

2 July 2002 Cultivated.

10-11 July 2002 sprayed for boll-worms (Heliothis zia) with 1.5 pint Lorsban and 1-pint Amigo surfactant per acre.

26 July 2002 Boll weevil control committee sprayed fields Malthion ULV.

20-23 July 2002 Irrigated with black river water.

18-19 July 2002 Rain floodwater on black river.

27 July 2002 Oscar noticed problems with cotton.

30 July 2002 Oscar called Woods E. Houghton county agent.

31 July 2002 Woods E. Houghton visited Oscar Vasquez farm, and concluded something in the water caused problems. Woods took soil and plant samples. Samples sent to Dr. Bob Flynn for Ecreading. Dr. Goldberg and Dr. McWilliams for diagnosis of disease or nutrition disorders if they occurred. Surface water bureau notified NM ED department Dr. Jim Davis. Suspected possible illegal disposal of produced water which is high in saline. High salt consternation could cause similar damage.

7 Aug 2002 Woods Houghton and Jim Ballard of Eddy County Sheriff Office, flew over and photographed. Talked with Oscar again. Recalled BLM treated a number of acres above on the black river with Spike (Tebuthiuron) 8 July 2002. Confirmed this with Mr. Mike Ramirez BLM. Reported possible off target effects to Ms. Margery Lewis NMDA and Mr. Russell Knight NMDA. Conferred with Mr. Tom Davis CID.

8 Aug 2002 Dr. Flynn reported that the unhealthy plants had a lower Ec value than the healthy plant soil samples. The problem most likely not salt or produced water.

16 Aug 2002 Received from Dr. Goldberg diagnosis record, which indicated that no plant pathogenic microorganisms were isolated from the sample submitted.

Symptoms: Plant Yellowing at top and then turned chlorotic followed by necrosis between veins and on leaf edges with DG-206. On ACLA 1517-99 started from bottom to top but same symptoms. Fruit drop starts first. Plants die from top down. Some plants appear to recover set new flowers and attempting new growth. Most 90% or more die back almost completely. Symptoms atypical of Spike but consistent with chlorophyll inhibitors. Also the root hairs are dead and brittle do not stay attached to plant when pulled up.

Other Information: On contact with BLM and NRCS equip project on three mile draw area was treated with Tebuthiuron (Spike 20p) on 8 July 02. Approximately 2,300 acres were treated some at 0.5AI and some at 0.75 AI per acre. This draw drains in to the black river above the diversion. The diversion diverts water to the farms, which are reporting damage. M&M Air Service was the applicator. Laboratory results from Analytical Pesticide Technology Laboratories Wyamissing Pa. Reported results of soil 0.187 ppm, cotton 1.166ppm, cotton 2.203ppm, Elm collected at diversion 0.196ppm, Cottonwood collected at diversion 0.329ppm. These samples were collected by Mr. Tom Davis and submitted by Carisbad Irrigation District for analysis. Samples were also taken by Mr. Russell Knight and Mr. Woods Houghton on 09 Aug. 02. The hydrograph of blackriver at USGS gauging station above the diversion but below three-mile draw show the water flow on the 17 July at less than 4 CFS, on 18–19 July it peaked at greater than the 100 CFS. This area experienced high intensity short duration storm in this time frame. There are older treatment areas in the vicinity as well.

Conclusion: Tebuthiuron Herbicide contamination of black river prior to irrigation has resulted in cotton crop losses. That flash flooding may have contributed to off target movement of products containing Tebuthiuron.

WOODS E. HOUGHTON,
Eddy County Agriculture Agent/
Acting Program Director.

SEPTEMBER 17, 2002.

Senator JEFF BINGAMAN,
Albuquerque, NM.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: I am writing this letter to ask for your help with a serious problem that has occurred on my own Farm, and my rented Farms.

My name is Oscar Vasquez, I farm approximately 320 acres of cotton, and alfalfa for 27 years. I own 145 acres, and share crop 175 acres from my neighbors, Mr. Damon Bond, Mrs. Catalina Carrasco, and Mr. Pedro Duarte.

On July 20, 2002, I began watering my cotton with Black River water as I would normally, and continued for 8 days. On July 27, 2002, I began to see wilting effects on the cotton fields I started watering first. I contacted Mr. Woods Houghton, our Eddy County Extension agent. He came and saw the damage on my cotton, it took us till August 7, 2002, to conclude that my cotton had received the damage thru the contaminated irrigation water. We also concluded that the BLM had applied herbicide called Tebuthiuron (Spike) to approximately 2400 acres on Three Mile Draw which is on the Gene & Kathy Hood Ranch, above the Black River Irrigation Diversion Dam.

The BLM and the NRCS (National Resource Conservation Services), applied this chemical to control brush on the Hood Ranch. The chemical was applied by airplane in pellet form on July 8, 9, & 12. The Hood Ranch received a 2½" rain in 45 minutes on the 18th & 19th of July washing the chemical in the Black River. I began to irrigate my cotton on July 20, 2002. My cotton crop has since sustained severe damage, with the chemical terminating the crop before maturity, therefore my crop is totally ruined.

I have contacted my cotton buyer and he does not want to buy my cotton crop this year. I have sold him 23 consecutive cotton crops in the past. What am I to do with this damaged crop? Do I harvest it? If I do, who will buy it? Or do I destroy it, or graze it? I need answers to all these questions.

New Mexico Agriculture Department has not assumed the responsibility to let me know what to do. The BLM has not assumed the responsibility either. What are my Landlords going to do for income this year. Mr. & Mrs. Damon Bond are 86 years old, Mrs. Catalina Carrasco is 68 years old, and a widow, Mr. Pedro Duarte is a little better off, he is 47 years old and has a job. I am 53 years old with the last of 5 children attending NMSU. My wife and I do not hire any help on the Farm, we do all the tractor and manual labor work ourselves.

We would appreciate an answer to all our problems, preferably our income problem.

The long term damage of these chemical effects is 5 years, or longer. Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

OSCAR VASQUEZ

P.S. Please see attached evidence gathered by Woods Houghton NM Eddy County Extension Agent, and the test results on soil and foliage samples by N.M.A.D. Laboratories. The total acreage is 130 acres of Cotton, 20 acres of Hay, and 1 acre of full grown Pecan Trees, on the Oscar Vasquez Farm.

FIGHTING FOR THE FARM: MALAGA FARMERS FACE UNCERTAIN FUTURE AFTER CROPS DAMAGED

(By Stella Davis)

MALAGA.—Oscar and Gloria Vasquez sit at the table in their dining room with a morning cup of coffee. But these days, the couple gets little pleasure in gazing out through the large dining room window facing their farm fields.

Where normally they would see healthy stands of cotton, all they see now are rows of small, leafless cotton stalks with stringy cotton bolls.

The couple farms about 320 acres—145 acres are owned by them and the 175 remaining acres they sharecrop for three other families who depend on the income from their shares.

Disaster struck Malaga farmers in late July when they watered their fields from the Black River diversion dam, unaware the water had been contaminated with the herbicide, tebuthiuron.

Later they discovered the Bureau of Land Management applied the herbicide on the ground just above the diversion dam to control woody vegetation on range and ranchland.

The chemical was applied in conjunction with a federal cost share program through the Natural Resource Conservation Service, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The rancher and the federal agency share the cost of applying the chemical on private ranch land.

"This crop is our income. It's our living. We are losing money, and the bills are coming in," Oscar Vasquez said. "I can survive this year, but there are other farmers who won't. They will be wiped out financially. I have two cousins, Tony and Mike Vasquez, who also have crop damage. They are in their sixties and the income loss will be devastating for them."

Oscar Vasquez, 53, said he has always tried to meet his commitments and financial obligations and is proud that he and his wife have put five children and a daughter-in-law through college.

"My wife and I put them through college, and our youngest is ready to graduate. They all went into engineering and graduated from New Mexico State University. We worked hard on the farm to make the income to put them through college. It's expensive to put kids through college, but we managed. I feel it is a privilege to send my kids to school. The next few months are going to be tight in meeting our son's college expenses. This couldn't have come at a worse time. He's close to finishing."

"We will make it through this year financially, but I don't know what is going to happen next year," he said. "We don't know how long the soil will stay contaminated. I have a payment coming due on a mechanical baler, and there are costs associated with planting cotton that I will have to cover without the income from the crops. I usually grow hay and cotton. But because water was scarce this year, I chose to grow cotton and put all the water on it. Now I don't have anything."

In another farmhouse about a mile down the road, Dick Calderon worries how he is going to take care of his wife, twin 4-year-old daughters, a 6-year-old son and his elderly parents living next door, as well as meeting all his financial obligations.

Over half of his cotton crop is dying from water contamination, and his alfalfa died due to lack of water.

His Federal farm loans are coming due, as are his tractor and equipment loans.

Damon and Marie Bond, both 86, rely on income from the farm that the Vasquezes sharecrop for them. This year they will have to live on less. Their cotton crop is also damaged.

The Vasquezes, Calderon and the Bonds are among 11 families that have fallen victim to the agriculture disaster.

They say they are frustrated they feel the state Department of Agriculture—the lead agency in the investigation of the crop kill—has not given them answers or direction on what they should do with their contaminated crops. Even worse, they said, no one has stepped up to the plate to take responsibility.

"I began watering my cotton with Black River water as I would normally and continued for eight days," Vasquez said. "On July 27, I began to see wilting effects on the cotton fields that I started watering first."

Alarmed, Vasquez contacted the county extension agent to identify the cause.

"I contacted Woods Houghton, and he worked with me to determine what caused the damage," Vasquez said. "He's been the only one who has tried to help us and do right by us."

Houghton's detective work, poring over books and data for many hours, revealed the cotton crop showed classic signs of chemical damage. More sleuthing on his part showed tebuthiuron was the cause.

After further investigation, farmers learned the chemical had been applied in the early part of July. On July 18 and 19, more than 2 inches of rain fell on the Black River area in a 45-minute period, and the chemical washed into the river.

Within days of Vasquez's report of crop losses, other farmers who irrigated shortly after the rain began reporting crop losses that ranged from cotton—the most susceptible to tebuthiuron—to alfalfa and pecan and cottonwood trees.

Calderon said the fear is ever present that the family farm could be lost.

"We are going into the third month, and we have not got any answers yet," Calderon said. "The financial stress for me is pretty high right now. I planted 45 acres of cotton, and I've lost over half. I also lost my hay too. I had to stop watering because the water was contaminated. It's dried up, and farming has come to a dead stop for a lot of us. We need some answers. We don't know what to do with what we have in the ground."

Vasquez said no one wants to buy the contaminated cotton. Harvesting it would be financial suicide, he said.

"The cotton market is down, which is bad enough, and then this," he said. "We get about $50 per bale, but when you add up the cost to harvest one bale, it adds up to $135. No one wants to buy damaged cotton, so why would we go to the cost of harvesting it at $135 per bale?"

He said the state Department of Agriculture has agreed to one thing: Seed from the contaminated cotton cannot be fed to livestock.

"We sell the seed to the dairies in Roswell," Vasquez said. "They use it to feed the cows. So there is another market loss for us."

Vasquez's cousin, Mike Vasquez, said he has lost 25 acres of cotton, and the loss of income will be devastating.

"I have disaster insurance, but I've been told it does not cover manmade disasters," he said. "I didn't cause this disaster. The federal government did. I may be poor, but I'm not stupid. Why would I damage my crop that is my livelihood? I'm not that dumb to put down a herbicide in our monsoon season. The BLM, which is the federal government, did that and look what it has brought us (farmers) financial ruin."

"We don't know what this stuff has done to the soil and we don't know for how long the soil will be contaminated. It could be several years. But no one is stepping up to take blame for what has happened. The cotton is still in the ground, and we don't know what to do with it."

Mike Vasquez, who retired after 30 years with the city of Carlsbad's water department, said farming supplements his modest retirement income from the city, and he has had many recent sleepless nights worrying how he is going to pay his farm loans.

"The worry is making me physically sick," he said. "We need some answers, and nobody is giving them to us. We also need some financial relief. There has to be someone out there that can give us the answers we need."

Marie Bond, 86, who lives near Oscar and Gloria Vasquez, said the loss of income this year is a blow, but she and her husband will just have to tighten their belts and make do with less.

"Anything that happens to Oscar happens to us," she said. "My husband and I have weathered some rough times in our lives and, although the income from the farm is important, we will make it. It's a lot harder on Oscar because he has the expenses that have to be paid and there is no money coming in right now," she said.

"This is something that should not have happened. It could have been avoided. It's just terrible."

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
Las Cruces, NM, October 3, 2002.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: We have received complaints from 22 farmers in the Carlsbad region indicating they have crop damage which appears to be from alleged movement of a herbicide from an area treated by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and the Natural Resource Conservation Service (NRCS). We are currently investigating the complaints to determine if there were violations of state or federal law. I seek your assistance in providing financial support for the individuals whose crops were damaged.

On August 7, 2002, the New Mexico Department of Agriculture (NMDA) received its first complaint regarding crop damage due to alleged movement from an area treated with Tebuthiuron (Spike) in the Three-Mile Draw area. Preliminary investigation indicates the BLM and the NRCS treated approximately 2,400 acres of rangeland. We also found evidence of significant precipitation which occurred after application in the approximate treated area.

NMDA has taken samples from the complainants' fields as part of the investigation. Some of the samples analyzed thus far have tested positive for Tebuthiuron. We will continue to analyze the remaining samples and will provide you with the results when they are complete.

It is my understanding that some of the complainants have crop insurance; however, chemical related damages are not covered. The affected individuals will suffer a severe financial hardship if assistance is not provided. It is also clear these individuals have suffered losses through no fault of their own. Many are small farmers and may not survive without direct financial assistance.

In 2001 Congress authorized the expenditure of not more than $5 million from the Commodity Credit Corporation to pay claims of crop damage that resulted from the BLM's use of herbicides during the 2001 calendar year in the state of Idaho. Enclosed is a copy of Section 757 of Public Law 107-76, which provides the funding. Similar consideration should be given to the affected New Mexico farmers. Our investigation is not complete at this time, but I believe it is very important to bring this matter to your attention since the relevant appropriation bills have not been passed by Congress.

If you have any questions, please contact me.

Sincerely,

FRANK A. DuBOIS.

By Mr. McCain:

S. 3112. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for a deferral of tax on gain from the sale of telecommunications businesses in specific circumstances or a tax credit and other incentives to promote diversity of ownership in telecommunications businesses; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCain. Mr. President, today I am introducing The Telecommunications Ownership Diversity Act of 2002. This legislation is designed to ensure that new entrants and small businesses will have the chance to participate in today's telecommunications marketplace.

At a time when the telecommunications industry is economically depressed, this bill promotes the entry of new competitors and small businesses into the field by providing carefully limited changes to the tax law. Too often today, new entrants and small businesses lose out on opportunities to purchase telecom assets because they don't offer sellers the same tax treatment as their larger competitors. Specifically, a small purchaser's cash offer triggers tax liability, while a larger purchaser's cash offer triggers tax liability, while a larger purchaser's stock offer may be accepted effectively tax-free. When an entity chooses to sell a telecom business, our tax laws should not make one bidder more attractive than another.

This legislation would give sellers of telecommunications businesses a tax deferral when their assets are bought for cash by small business telecom companies. It would also encourage the entry of new players and the growth of existing small businesses by enabling the seller of a telecom business to claim a tax deferral on capital gains if it invests the proceeds of any sale of its business in purchasing an interest in an eligible small telecom business.

While large companies continue to merge into even larger companies, small businesses have faced substantial barriers in trying to become long-term players in the telecommunications market. These barriers can be even more formidable for members of minority groups and for women, for whom it has historically been more difficult to obtain necessary capital. Since new entry and the ability to grow existing businesses are key components of competition, and since competition is usually the most successful way to achieve the goals of better service and lower prices, restricting small business' ownership opportunities does not serve consumers' interests.

It's easy to forget that telecommunications industry transactions are routinely valued in the billions. Even radio, which has traditionally been a comparatively easier telecom segment to enter, has been priced out of range of most would-be entrants. In addition to these monetary barriers, the tax code makes cash sales less attractive to sellers than stock-swaps. So new entrants and smaller incumbents, which typically must finance telecom acquisitions with cash rather than stock, are less-preferred purchasers than large incumbents. As a result, telecom business sellers have little incentive to sell their businesses to new entrants and small incumbents.

But what should Congress do? Clamp down on merger activity? Insist that hopelessly-outdated ownership restrictions set by the Federal Communications Commission be retained? Rush to concoct new telecom ownership "opportunities" from government programs or regulations that, in the real world, present small business with only one real opportunity, the opportunity to fail? None of these proposals would succeed because all of them, like the Telecommunications Act of 1996, ignore marketplace realities instead of working with them.

One answer is to level the playing field and give established telecom industry players the same economic incentives to deal with new entrants and small businesses as they currently have with respect to larger companies. And that's what this legislation would do.

Specifically, the bill would amend the Internal Revenue Code by adding a new Section 1071 entitled "Nonrecognition of gain on certain sales of telecommunications business." This new section of the tax code would allow a telecom business seller to elect to have capital gains deferred under the existing Section 1033 rules for any "qualified telecommunications sale." The aggregate amount of any gain deferred under the qualified sale would be limited to $250 million per transaction, and less than $84 million per taxable year.

A qualified telecommunications sale would be defined in two ways. The first type of qualified sale would be sales to an "eligible purchaser" of either the assets of a telecom business or the stock that makes up a controlling interest in a corporation with substantially all of its assets in one or more telecom businesses. Eligible purchasers would include economically and socially disadvantaged businesses that qualify under a carefully drawn three-part test. The second type of qualified sale would be the sale of any telecom business to any purchaser, as long as the seller reinvests the proceeds in equity interests in eligible small telecom businesses.

To account for the variety of telecommunications services available today, the legislation would broadly define telecommunications businesses eligible for capital gains tax deferral to include not only radio, broadcast TV, DBS, and cable TV, but also wireline and wireless telephone service providers and resellers.

Some may be concerned that this legislation could potentially allow entities seeking to "game the system" to set up eligible purchasers to take advantage of the bill's provisions. In order to eliminate the potential for abuse, the bill would require the eligible purchaser to hold any property acquired for three years, during which time it could only so sold to an unrelated eligible purchaser. Moreover, the bill would require the General Accounting Office to thoroughly audit and report on the administration and effect of the law every two years.

By sharing with smaller companies a portion of the investment benefits our tax laws give to the major telecom companies we have a chance to make sure that, at the end of the day, we won't regret what "might have been" for small business. By enabling individuals and small businesses to use industry restructurings as opportunities for expansion, we will keep faith with those who have been, and remain, enduringly valuable contributors to our free-market system.

Over the next several months, I look forward to working with interested organizations to further improve this legislation. In particular, I welcome comments on how to further refine the concepts of "qualified telecommunications business" and "eligible purchaser" to ensure that this legislation can meet its goals in the most fair and effective manner.

Revolutionary developments in the telecommunications industry have been made by gifted individuals with small companies and unlimited vision. In this sense, the telecommunications industry is a true microcosm of the American free-market system. New entrants and small businesses should have a fair chance to participate across the broad spectrum of industries that will make up the telecommunications industry in the Information Age. This legislation will help them do that.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3112

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Telecommunications Ownership Diversification Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Current trends in the telecommunications industry show that there is increasing convergence among various media, including broadcasting, cable television, and Internet-based businesses, that provide news, information, and entertainment.

(2) This convergence will continue, and therefore, diversifying the ownership of telecommunications facilities remains a pre-eminent public interest concern that should be reflected in both telecommunications and tax policy.

(3) A market-based, voluntary system of investment incentives is a very effective, lawful, and economically sound means of facilitating entry and diversification of ownership in the telecommunications industry.

(4) Opportunities for new entrants to participate and grow in the telecommunications industry have substantially decreased since the end of the Federal Communications Commission's tax certificate policy in 1995, particularly in light of the increase in tax-free like-kind exchanges, despite the most robust period of transfers of radio and television stations in history. During this time, businesses owned or controlled by socially disadvantaged individuals, including, but not limited to, members of minority groups and women, have continued to be underrepresented as owners of telecommunications facilities.

(5) Businesses owned or controlled by socially disadvantaged individuals are and historically have been economically disadvantaged in the telecommunications industry. For these businesses, access to and cost of capital are and have been substantial obstacles to new entry and growth. Consequently, diversification of ownership in the telecommunications industry has been limited.

(6) Telecommunications facilities owned by new entrants may not be attractive to investors because their start-up costs are often high, their revenue streams are uncertain, and their profit margins are unknown.

(7) It is consistent with the public interest and with the pro-competition policies of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 to provide incentives that will facilitate investments in, and acquisition of telecommunications facilities by, socially and economically disadvantaged businesses, thereby diversifying the ownership of telecommunications facilities.

(8) Increased participation by socially and economically disadvantaged businesses in the ownership of telecommunications facilities will enhance competition in the telecommunications industry. Permitting sellers of telecommunications facilities to defer taxation of gains from transactions involving socially and economically disadvantaged businesses, and resulting from investments in designated capital funds that provide capital for such entities, will further the development of a competitive and diverse United States telecommunications industry without governmental intrusion in private investment decisions.

(9) The public interest would not be served by attempts to diversify the ownership of telecommunications; businesses through any approach that would involve the use of mandated set-asides or quotas.

(10) Today, the telecommunications industry is struggling to survive one of its most troubling times. Therefore, facilitating voluntary, pro-competitive transactions that will promote ownership of telecommunications facilities by economically and socially disadvantaged businesses will aid in providing the investment and capital that is crucial to this sector.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to facilitate voluntary, pro-competitive transactions that will promote ownership of telecommunications facilities by economically and socially disadvantaged businesses.

SEC. 3. NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN ON QUALIFIED SALES OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter O of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to gain or loss on disposition of property) is amended by inserting after part IV the following new part:

"PART V—CERTAIN SALES OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESSES

"Sec.

"1071. Nonrecognition of gain on certain sales of telecommunication businesses.

"SEC. 1071. NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN ON CERTAIN SALES OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESSES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In case of any qualified telecommunications sale, at the election of the taxpayer, such sale shall be treated as an involuntary conversion of property within the meaning of section 1033.

"(b) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF GAIN ON WHICH TAX MAY BE DEFERRED.—The amount of gain on any qualified telecommunications sales which is not recognized by reason of this section shall not exceed $250,000,000 per transaction and shall not exceed $83,333,333 per taxable year. Excess amounts can be carried forward in future years subject to the annual limit.

"(c) QUALIFIED TELECOMMUNICATIONS SALE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified telecommunications sale' means—

"(1) any sale to an eligible purchaser of—

"(A) the assets of a telecommunications business, or

"(B) stock in a corporation if, immediately after such sale—

"(i) the eligible purchaser controls (within the meaning of Section 368 (c)) such corporation, and

"(ii) substantially all of the assets of such corporation are assets of 1 or more telecommunications businesses; and

"(2) any sale of a telecommunications business, if the taxpayer purchases, within the replacement period specified in section 1033(a)(2)(b), 1 or more equity interests in an entity that is an eligible purchaser as defined in subsection (f)(1)(A) (the Telecommunications Development Fund.).

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In applying section 1033 for purposes of subsection (a) of this section, stock of a corporation operating a telecommunications business, whether or not representing control of such corporation, shall be treated as property similar or related in service or use to the property sold in the qualified telecommunications sale.

“(2) ELECTION TO REDUCE BASIS RATHER THAN RECOGNIZE REMAINDER OF GAIN.—If—

“(A) a taxpayer elects the treatment under subsection (a) with respect to any qualified telecommunications sale, and

“(B) an amount of gain would (but for this paragraph) be recognized on such sale other than by reason of subsection (b), then the amount of gain described in subparagraph (B) shall not be recognized to the extent that the taxpayer elects to reduce the basis of depreciable property (as defined in section 1017(b)(3)) held by the taxpayer immediately after the sale or acquired in the same taxable year. The manner and amount of such reduction shall be determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

“(3) BASIS.—For basis of property acquired on a sale or exchange treated as an involuntary conversion under subsection (a), see section 1033(b).

“(e) RECAPTURE OF TAX BENEFIT IF TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESS RESOLD WITHIN 3 YEARS, ETC.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If, within 3 years after the date of any qualified telecommunications sale, there is a recapture event with respect to the property involved in such sale, then the purchaser's tax imposed by this chapter for taxable year in which such event occurs shall be increased by 20 percent of the lesser of the consideration furnished by the purchaser in such sale or the dollar amount specified in subsection (b).

“(2) EXCEPTION FOR REINVESTED AMOUNTS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any recapture event which is a sale if—

“(A) the sale is a qualified telecommunications sale, or

“(B) during the 60-day period beginning on the date of such sale, the taxpayer is the purchaser in another qualified telecommunications sale in which the consideration furnished by the taxpayer is not less than the amount realized on the recapture event sale.

“(1) RECAPTURE EVENT.—For purpose of this subsection, the term ‘recapture event’ means with respect to any qualified telecommunications sale—

“(A) any sale or other disposition of the assets or stock referred to in subsection (c) which were acquired by the taxpayer in such sale, and

“(B) in the case of a qualified telecommunications sale described in subsection (c)(1)(B)—

“(i) any sale or other disposition of a telecommunications business by the corporation referred to in such subsection, or “(ii) any other transaction which results in the eligible purchaser business not having control (as defined in subsection (c)(1)(B)(i)) of such corporation.

“(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) ELIGIBLE PURCHASER.—The term ‘eligible purchaser’ means—

“(A) the Telecommunications Development Fund established under section 714 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 614), or any wholly-owned affiliate of that Fund;

“(B) an economically and socially disadvantaged business, as defined in paragraph (2) of this subsection; and

“(C) an entity qualified under section 851, if more than 50 percent of its gross income is derived from equity investment in an economically and socially disadvantaged business or businesses, as defined in paragraph (2) of this subsection, as determined by the Secretary.

“(2) ECONOMICALLY AND SOCIALLY DISADVANTAGED BUSINESS.—The term ‘economically and socially disadvantaged business’ means a person that is designated by the Secretary as an ‘economically and socially disadvantaged business’ based on a determination that the subject person—

“(A) meets the control requirements of paragraph (6);

“(B) will be a telecommunications business after the purchase for which the eligibility determination is sought; and

“(C) before the purchase for which the eligibility determination is sought does not have:

“(i) attributable ownership interests in television broadcast stations having an aggregate national audience reach of more than 5 percent as defined by the Federal Communications Commission under section 73.3555(e)(2)(i) of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations as in effect on January 1, 2001;

“(ii) attributable ownership interest in: (a) more than 50 radio stations nationally; and (b) radio stations with a combined market share exceeding 10 percent of radio advertising revenues in the relevant market as defined by the Federal Communications Commission; or

“(iii) attributable ownership interests in any other telecommunications business having more than 5 percent of national subscribers.

“(3) RELEVANT MARKET.—The term ‘relevant market’ means the local market served by the radio station or stations being purchased.

“(4) TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESS.—The term ‘telecommunications business’ means a business which, as its primary purpose, engaged in electronic communications and is regulated by the Federal Communications Commission pursuant to the Communications Act, including a cable system (as defined in section 602(7) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 532(7)), a radio station (as defined in section 3(35) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 153(35)), a broadcasting station providing television service (as defined in section 3(49) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 153(49)), a provider of direct broadcast satellite service (as defined in section 335(b)(5) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 335(b)(5)), a provider of video programming (as defined in section 602(20) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 602(20)); a provider of commercial mobile services (as defined in section 332(d)(1) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 332(d)(1)), a telecommunications carrier (as defined in section 3(44) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 153(44)); a provider of fixed satellite service; a reseller of telecommunications service or commercial mobile service; or a provider of multi-channel multipoint distribution service.

“(5) PURCHASE.—The taxpayer shall be considered to have purchased a property if, but for subsection (d)(2), the unadjusted basis of the property would be its cost within the meaning of section 1012.

“(6) CONTROL.—

“(A) INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(A), an individual who meets the requirements of paragraph (7) also meets the requirements of this paragraph.

“(B) ENTITIES.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), an entity meets the requirement of this paragraph if the requirements of subparagraph (C), (D), or (E) are satisfied.

“(C) 30-PERCENT TEST.—The requirements of this subparagraph are satisfied if—“(i) with respect to any entity which is a corporation, individuals who meet the requirements of paragraph (7) own 30 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation, and more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote of the corporation; and “(ii) with respect to any entity which is a partnership, individuals who meet the requirements of paragraph (7) own 30 percent or more of the capital interest and the profits interest in the partnership, and more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of partnership interests entitled to vote.

“(D) 15-PERCENT TEST.—The requirements of this subparagraph are satisfied if—“(i) with respect to any entity which is a corporation—

“(I) individuals who meet the requirements of paragraph (7) own 15 percent or more in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation, and more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote of the corporation; and

“(II) no other person owns more than 25 percent in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation; and

“(ii) with respect to any entity which is a partnership—

“(I) individuals who meet the requirements of paragraph (7) own 15 percent or more of the capital interest and profits interest of the partnership, and more than 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of partnership interests entitled to vote; and

“(II) no other person owns more than 25 percent of the capital interest and profits interest of the partnership.

“(E) PUBLICLY-TRADED CORPORATION TEST.—The requirements of this subparagraph are satisfied if, with respect to a corporation the securities of which are traded on an established securities market—

“(i) individuals who meet the requirements of paragraph (7) own 50 percent or more of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote of the corporation; and

“(ii) the stock owned by those individuals is not subject to any agreement, arrangement, or understanding which provides for, or relates to, the voting of the stock in any manner by, or at the direction of, any person other than an eligible individual who meets the requirements of paragraph (7), or the right of any person other than one of those individuals to acquire the voting power through purchase of shares or otherwise.

“(F) CONSTRUCTIVE OWNERSHIP.—In applying subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E), the following rules apply:

“(i) Stock or partnership interests owned, directly or indirectly, by or for a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by or for its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries.

“(ii) An individual shall be considered as owning stock and partnership interests owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his family.

“(iii) An individual owning (otherwise than by the application of clause (ii)) any stock in corporation shall be considered as owning the stock or partnership interests owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his partner.

“(iv) An individual owning (otherwise than by the application of clause (ii)) any partnership interest in a partnership shall be considered as owning the stock or partnership interests owned, directly or indirectly, by or for his partner.

“(v) The family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

“(vi) Stock or partnership interests constructively owned by a person by reason of the application of clause (i) shall, for the purposes of applying clause (i), (ii), (iii), or (iv), be treated as actually owned by that person, but stock constructively owned by an individual by reason of the application of clause (ii), (iii), or (iv) shall not be treated as owned by that individual for the purpose of again applying any of those clauses in order to make another the constructive owner of the stock or partnership interests.

“(7) INDIVIDUALS.—An individual is described in this paragraph if that individual is “(A) a United States citizen, and

“(B) a member of a socially or economically disadvantaged class determined by the Secretary of Treasury to be underrepresented in the ownership of the relevant telecommunications business.”.

SEC. 4. TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESS CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart E of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to rules for computing investment credit) is amended by inserting after section 48 the following:

“SEC. 48A. TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUSINESS CREDIT.

“For purposes of section 46, there is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for any taxable year an amount equal to 10 percent of the taxable income of any taxpayer that at all times during that taxable year—

“(1) is a local exchange carrier (as defined in section 3(44) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 153(44)));;

“(2) is not a Bell operating company (as defined in section 3(4) of that Act (47 U.S.C. 153(4))); and

“(3) is headquartered in an area designated as an empowerment zone by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) AMENDMENT OF SECTION 46.—Section 46 of such Code (relating to amount of credit) is amended by—

(A) striking “and” in paragraph (2);

(B) striking “credit.” in paragraph (3) and inserting “credit; and”; and

(C) adding at the end the following: “(4) the telecommunications business credit.”.

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(A) The analysis for part III of subchapter 0 of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

“1071. Sale of telecommunications business.”.

(B) The table of sections for Subpart E of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 48 the following:

“48A. Telecommunications business credit.”

SEC. 5. EXCLUSION OF 50 PERCENT OF GAIN.

Section 1202 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to 50 percent exclusion for gain from certain small business stock) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following:

“(3) CERTAIN TELECOMMUNICATIONS INVESTMENTS BY CORPORATIONS AND INVESTMENT COMPANIES.—Gross income does not include 50 percent of any gain from the sale or exchange of stock in an eligible purchaser (as defined in section 1071(f)(1)) engaged in a telecommunications business (as defined in section 1071(f)(3)) held for more than 5 years.”;

(2) by striking subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (b)(1) and inserting the following:

“(A) in the case of gain from the sale or exchange of qualified small business stock held for more than 5 years—

“(i) $10,000,000 reduced by the aggregate amount of eligible gain taken into account by the taxpayer under subsection (a) for prior taxable years and attributable to dispositions of stock issued by such corporations; or

“(ii) 10 times the aggregate adjusted bases of qualified small business stock issued by such corporations and disposed of by the taxpayer during the taxable year; and

“(B) in the case of gain from the sale or exchange of stock in an eligible purchaser engaged in a telecommunications business for more than 5 years—

“(i) $20,000,000 reduced by the aggregate amount of eligible gain taken into account by their taxpayer under subsection (a) for prior taxable years and attributable to dispositions of stock issued by the eligible purchaser engaged in a telecommunications business; or

“(ii) 15 times the aggregate adjusted bases of stock of an eligible purchaser engaged in a telecommunications business issued by such eligible purchaser and disposed of by the taxpayer during the taxable year.”;

(3) by striking “years” in subsection (b)(2) and inserting “years or any gain from the sale or exchange of stock in an eligible purchaser engaged in a telecommunications business held for more than 5 years.”; and

(4) by striking “‘$10,000,000.’” in subsection (b)(3)(i) and inserting “‘$10,000,000’, and paragraph (1)(B) shall be applied by substituting ‘$10,000,000’ for ‘$20,000,000.’”.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING CHANGES.

(a) TAXABLE YEARS.—The amendments made by section 4 shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) SALES.—The amendments made by section 3 shall apply with respect to a sale described in section 1071(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this section) of a telecommunications business or any equity interest on or after the date of enactment of this Act. The amendments made by section 5 shall apply to sales on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING CHANGES.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall, within 150 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, a draft of any technical and conforming changes in the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which are necessary to reflect throughout the Code the changes in the substantive provisions of the Code made by section 3(a).

SEC. 7. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Federal Communications Commission, shall promulgate regulations to implement this Act no later than 90 days after the effective date of this Act. The regulations shall provide for determination by the Secretary as to whether an applicant is an “eligible purchaser” as defined in new section 1071(f) of the IRC of 1986 (as added by section 3 of this Act). The regulations shall further provide that such determinations of eligibility shall be made not later than 45 calendar days after an application is filed with the Secretary. The regulations implementing section 1071(f)(7) of such Code (as added by section 3 of this Act) shall be updated on an ongoing basis no less frequently than every 5 years.

SEC. 8. BIENNIAL PROGRAM AUDITS BY GAO.

No later than January 1, 2004, and no less frequently than every 2 years thereafter, the Comptroller General shall audit the administration of sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 added or amended by this Act, and issue a report on the results of that audit. The Comptroller General shall include in the report, notwithstanding any provision of section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to the contrary—

(1) a list of eligible purchasers (as defined in section 1071(f)(1) of such Code) and any other taxpayer receiving a benefit from the operation of section 48A or 1202 of such Code as that section was added or amended by this Act; and

(2) an assessment of the effect the amendments made by this Act have on increasing new entry and growth in the telecommunications industry by socially and economically disadvantaged businesses, and the effect of this Act on enhancing the competitiveness of the telecommunications industry.

STATEMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 340—AFFIRMING THE IMPORTANCE OF A NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER AND FASTING, AND DESIGNATING NOVEMBER 27, 2002, AS A NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER AND FASTING

Mr. SANTORUM (for himself and Mr. BROWNBACK) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. RES. 340

Whereas the President has sought the support of the international community in responding to the threat of terrorism, violent extremist organizations, and states that permit or host organizations that are opposed to democratic ideals;

Whereas a united stance against terrorism and terrorist regimes will likely lead to an increased threat to the armed forces and law enforcement personnel of those states that oppose these regimes of terror and that take an active role in rooting out these enemy forces;

Whereas Congress has aided and supported a united response to acts of terrorism and violence inflicted upon the United States, our allies, and peaceful individuals all over the world;

Whereas President Abraham Lincoln, at the outbreak of the Civil War, proclaimed that the last Thursday in September 1861 should be designated as a day of humility, prayer, and fasting for all people of the Nation;

Whereas it is appropriate and fitting to seek guidance, direction, and focus from God in times of conflict and in periods of turmoil;

Whereas it is through prayer, self-reflection, and fasting that we can better examine those elements of our lives that can benefit from God's wisdom and love;

Whereas prayer to God and the admission of human limitations and frailties begins the process of becoming both stronger and closer to God;

Whereas becoming closer to God helps provide direction, purpose, and conviction in those daily actions and decisions we must take;

Whereas our Nation, tested by civil war, military conflicts, and world wars, has always benefited from the grace and benevolence bestowed by God; and

Whereas dangers and threats to our Nation persist and in this time of peril, it is appropriate that the people of the United States, leaders and citizens alike, seek guidance, strength, and resolve through prayer and fasting: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates November 27, 2002, as a day for humility, prayer, and fasting for all people of the United States; and

(2) recommends that all people of the United States—

(A) observe this day as a day of prayer and fasting;

(B) seek guidance from God to achieve greater understanding of our own failings;

(C) learn how we can do better in our everyday activities; and

(D) gain resolve in how to confront those challenges which we must confront.

SENATE RESOLUTION 341—DESIGNATING THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 2002, AS “FEED AMERICA THURSDAY”

Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. REID, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. INOUE, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. WARNER, Mr. NICKLES, Ms. STABENOW, and Mrs. LINCOLN) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 341

Whereas Thanksgiving Day celebrates the spirit of selfless giving and an appreciation for family and friends;

Whereas the spirit of Thanksgiving Day is a virtue upon which our Nation was founded;

Whereas 33,000,000 Americans, including 13,000,000 children, continue to live in households that do not have an adequate supply of food;

Whereas almost 3,000,000 of those children experience hunger; and

Whereas selfless sacrifice breeds a genuine spirit of Thanksgiving, both affirming and restoring fundamental principles in our society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate

(1) designates Thursday, November 21, 2002, as “Feed America Thursday”; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to sacrifice 2 meals on Thursday, November 21, 2002, and to donate the money that they would have spent on food to a religious or charitable organization of their choice for the purpose of feeding the hungry.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 153—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT THERE SHOULD BE ESTABLISHED AN ANNUAL NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

Ms. COLLINS (for herself and Mr. FEINGOLD) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions:

S. CON. RES. 153

Whereas visiting nurse associations are nonprofit home health agencies that, for over 120 years, have been united in their mission to provide cost-effective and compassionate home and community-based health care to individuals, regardless of the individuals' condition or ability to pay for services;

Whereas there are approximately 500 visiting nurse associations, which employ more than 90,000 clinicians, provide health care to more than 4,000,000 people each year, and provide a critical safety net in communities by developing a network of community support services that enable individuals to live independently at home;

Whereas visiting nurse associations have historically served as primary public health care providers in their communities, and are today one of the largest providers of mass immunizations in the medicare program (delivering over 2,500,000 influenza immunizations annually);

Whereas visiting nurse associations are often the home health providers of last resort, serving the most chronic of conditions (such as congestive heart failure, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, AIDS, and quadriplegia) and individuals with the least ability to pay for services (more than 50 percent of all medicaid home health admissions are by visiting nurse associations);

Whereas any visiting nurse association budget surplus is reinvested in supporting the association's mission through services, including charity care, adult day care centers, wellness clinics, Meals-on-Wheels, and immunization programs;

Whereas visiting nurse associations and other nonprofit home health agencies care for the highest percentage of terminally ill and bedridden patients;

Whereas thousands of visiting nurse association volunteers across the Nation devote time serving as individual agency board members, raising funds, visiting patients in their homes, assisting in wellness clinics, and delivering meals to patients; and

Whereas the establishment of an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations Week for the second full week of every February would increase public awareness of the charity-based missions of visiting nurse associations and of their ability to meet the needs of chronically ill and disabled individuals who prefer to live at home rather than in a nursing home, and would spotlight preventive health clinics, adult day care programs, and other customized wellness programs that meet local community need: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that there should be established an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations Week.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator RUSS FEINGOLD, in introducing a bill to establish an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations Week in honor of this army of health care heroes who are dedicated to service in the ultimate caring profession.

The Visiting Nurse Associations, VNAs, of today are founded on the principle that the sick, the disabled and the elderly benefit most from health care when it is offered in their own homes. Home care is an increasingly important part of our health care system today. The kinds of highly skilled, and often technically complex, services that the VNAs provide have enabled millions of our most frail and vulnerable patients to avoid hospitals and nursing homes and stay just where they want to be, in the comfort and security of their own homes.

Visiting Nurse Associations are nonprofit home health agencies that provide cost-effective and compassionate home and community-based health care to individuals, regardless of their condition or ability to pay for services. VNAs literally created the profession and practice of home health care more than one hundred years ago, at a time when there were no hospitals in many communities and patients were cared for at home by families who did the best they could. VNAs made a critical difference to these families, bringing professional skills into the home to care for the patient and support the family. They made a critical difference in the late 19th century, and are making a critical difference now as we embark upon the 21st.

VNAs were pioneers in the public health movement, and, in the late 1800s, VNA responsiveness meant milk banks, combating infectious diseases, and providing care for the poor during massive influenza epidemics. Today, that same responsiveness means caring for the dependent elderly, the chronically disabled, the terminally ill, and providing high-tech services previously provided in hospitals, such as ventilator care, blood transfusions, pain management and home chemotherapy.

Health care has gone full circle. Patients are spending less time in the hospital. More and more procedures are being done on an outpatient basis, and recovery and care for patients with chronic diseases and conditions has increasingly been taking place in the home. Moreover, the number of Americans who are chronically ill or disabled in some way continues to grow each year. Once again, VNAs are making a critical difference, providing comprehensive home health services and caring support to patients and their families across the country.

Through these exceptional organizations, 90,000 clinicians dedicate their lives to bringing health care into the homes of over four million Americans every year. VNAs are truly the heart of home care in this country today, and it is time for Congress to recognize the vital services that visiting nurses provide to their patients and their families. I urge my colleagues to join Senator FEINGOLD and me in cosponsoring this resolution establishing an annual National Visiting Nurse Associations' Week.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 4879. Mr. SPECTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 4738 proposed by Mr. GRAMM (for himself, Mr. MILLER, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. HUTCHINSON, and Mr. BUNNING) to the amendment SA 4471 proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SA 4882. Mr. SPECTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 4471 proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 59, between lines 20 and 21, insert the following:

(14) On behalf of the Secretary, subject to disapproval by the President, directing the agencies described under subsection (a)(1)(B) to provide intelligence information, analyses of intelligence information, and such other intelligence-related information as the Under Secretary for Intelligence determines necessary.

SA 4883. Mr. DASCHLE (for Mr. ROCKEFELLER) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3253, to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the establishment within the Department of Veterans Affairs of improved emergency medical preparedness, research, and education programs to combat terrorism, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Department of Veterans Affairs Emergency Preparedness Act of 2002”.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF MEDICAL EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS CENTERS AT DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 7325. Medical emergency preparedness centers

“(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTERS.—(1) The Secretary shall establish four medical emergency preparedness centers in accordance with this section. Each such center shall be established at a Department medical center and shall be staffed by Department employees.

“(2) The Under Secretary for Health shall be responsible for supervising the operation of the centers established under this section. The Under Secretary shall provide for ongoing evaluation of the centers and their compliance with the requirements of this section.

“(3) The Under Secretary shall carry out the Under Secretary’s functions under paragraph (2) in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.

“(b) MISSION.—The mission of the centers shall be as follows:

“(1) To carry out research on, and to develop methods of detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses arising from the use of chemical, biological, radiological, incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices posing threats to the public health and safety.

“(2) To provide education, training, and advice to health care professionals, including health care professionals outside the Veterans Health Administration, through the National Disaster Medical System established pursuant to section 2811(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300hh-11(b)) or through interagency agreements entered into by the Secretary for that purpose.

“(3) In the event of a disaster or emergency referred to in section 1785(b) of this title, to provide such laboratory, epidemiological, medical, or other assistance as the Secretary considers appropriate to Federal, State, and local health care agencies and personnel involved in or responding to the disaster or emergency.

“(c) SELECTION OF CENTERS.—(1) The Secretary shall select the sites for the centers on the basis of a competitive selection process. The Secretary may not designate a site as a location for a center under this section unless the Secretary makes a finding under paragraph (2) with respect to the proposal for the designation of such site. To the maximum extent practicable, the Secretary shall ensure the geographic dispersal of the sites throughout the United States. Any such center may be a consortium of efforts of more than one medical center.

“(2) A finding by the Secretary referred to in paragraph (1) with respect to a proposal for designation of a site as a location of a center under this section is a finding by the Secretary, upon the recommendations of the Under Secretary for Health and the Assistant Secretary with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions, that the facility or facilities submitting the proposal have developed (or may reasonably be anticipated to develop) each of the following:

“(A) An arrangement with a qualifying medical school and a qualifying school of public health (or a consortium of such schools) under which physicians and other persons in the health field receive education and training through the participating Department medical facilities so as to provide those persons with training in the detection, diagnosis, prevention, and treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses induced by exposures to chemical and biological substances, radiation, and incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices.

“(B) An arrangement with a graduate school specializing in epidemiology under which students receive education and training in epidemiology through the participating Department facilities so as to provide such students with training in the epidemiology of contagious and infectious diseases and chemical and radiation poisoning in an exposed population.

“(C) An arrangement under which nursing, social work, counseling, or allied health personnel and students receive training and education in recognizing and caring for conditions associated with exposures to toxins through the participating Department facilities.

“(D) The ability to attract scientists who have made significant contributions to the development of innovative approaches to the detection, diagnosis, prevention, or treatment of injuries, diseases, and illnesses arising from the use of chemical, biological, radiological, incendiary or other explosive weapons or devices posing threats to the public health and safety.

“(3) For purposes of paragraph (2)(A)—

“(A) a qualifying medical school is an accredited medical school that provides education and training in toxicology and environmental health hazards and with which one or more of the participating Department medical centers is affiliated; and

“(B) a qualifying school of public health is an accredited school of public health that provides education and training in toxicology and environmental health hazards and with which one or more of the participating Department medical centers is affiliated.

“(d) RESEARCH ACTIVITIES.—Each center shall conduct research on improved medical preparedness to protect the Nation from threats in the area of that center's expertise. Each center may seek research funds from public and private sources for such purpose.

“(e) DISSEMINATION OF RESEARCH PRODUCTS.—(1) The Under Secretary for Health and the Assistant Secretary with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions shall ensure that information produced by the research, education and training, and clinical activities of centers established under this section is made available, as appropriate, to health-care providers in the United States. Dissemination of such information shall be made through publications, through programs of continuing medical and related education provided through regional medical education centers under subchapter VI of chapter 74 of this title, and through other means. Such programs of continuing medical education shall receive priority in the award of funding.

“(2) The Secretary shall ensure that the work of the centers is conducted in close coordination with other Federal departments and agencies and that research products or other information of the centers shall be coordinated and shared with other Federal departments and agencies.

“(f) COORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary shall take appropriate actions to ensure that the work of each center is carried out—

“(1) in close coordination with the Department of Defense, the Department of Health and Human Services, and other departments, agencies, and elements of the Government charged with coordination of plans for United States homeland security; and

“(2) after taking into consideration applicable recommendations of the working group on the prevention, preparedness, and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies established under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d-6(a)) or any other joint inter-agency advisory group or committee designated by the President or the President's designee to coordinate Federal research on weapons of mass destruction.

“(g) ASSISTANCE TO OTHER AGENCIES.—The Secretary may provide assistance requested by appropriate Federal, State, and local civil and criminal authorities in investigations, inquiries, and data analyses as necessary to protect the public safety and prevent or obviate biological, chemical, or radiological threats.

“(h) DETAIL OF EMPLOYEES FROM OTHER AGENCIES.—Upon approval by the Secretary, the Director of a center may request the temporary assignment or detail to the center, on a nonreimbursable basis, of employees from other departments and agencies of the United States who have expertise that would further the mission of the center. Any such employee may be so assigned or detailed on a nonreimbursable basis pursuant to such a request.

“(i) FUNDING.—(1) Amounts appropriated for the activities of the centers under this section shall be appropriated separately from amounts appropriated for the Department for medical care.

“(2) In addition to funds appropriated for a fiscal year specifically for the activities of the centers pursuant to paragraph (1), the Under Secretary for Health shall allocate to such centers from other funds appropriated for that fiscal year generally for the Department medical care account and the Department medical and prosthetics research account such amounts as the Under Secretary determines appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section. Any determination by the Under Secretary under the preceding sentence shall be made in consultation with the Assistant Secretary with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.

“(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for the centers under this section $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7324 the following new item:

“7325. Medical emergency preparedness centers.”

(b) PEER REVIEW FOR DESIGNATION OF CENTERS.—(1) In order to assist the Secretary of Veterans Affairs and the Under Secretary of Veterans Affairs for Health in selecting sites for centers under section 7325 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), the Under Secretary shall establish a peer review panel to assess the scientific and clinical merit of proposals that are submitted to the Secretary for the designation of such centers. The peer review panel shall be established in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.

(2) The peer review panel shall include experts in the fields of toxicological research, infectious diseases, radiology, clinical care of patients exposed to such hazards, and other persons as determined appropriate by the Secretary. Members of the panel shall serve as consultants to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

(3) The panel shall review each proposal submitted to the panel by the officials referred to in paragraph (1) and shall submit to the Under Secretary for Health its views on the relative scientific and clinical merit of each such proposal. The panel shall specifically determine with respect to each such proposal whether that proposal is among those proposals which have met the highest competitive standards of scientific and clinical merit.

(4) The panel shall not be subject to the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

SEC. 3. EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAMS ON MEDICAL RESPONSES TO CONSEQUENCES OF TERRORIST ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 7325, as added by section 2(a)(1), the following new section:

“§ 7326. Education and training programs on medical response to consequences of terrorist activities

“(a) EDUCATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall carry out a program to develop and disseminate a series of model education and training programs on the medical responses to the consequences of terrorist activities.

“(b) IMPLEMENTING OFFICIAL.—The program shall be carried out through the Under Secretary for Health, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs with responsibility for operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.

“(c) CONTENT OF PROGRAMS.—The education and training programs developed under the program shall be modeled after programs established at the F. Edward Hébert School of Medicine of the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences and shall include, at a minimum, training for health care professionals in the following:

“(1) Recognition of chemical, biological, radiological, incendiary, or other explosive agents, weapons, or devices that may be used in terrorist activities.

“(2) Identification of the potential symptoms of exposure to those agents.

“(3) Understanding of the potential long-term health consequences, including psychological effects, resulting from exposure to those agents, weapons, or devices.

“(4) Emergency treatment for exposure to those agents, weapons, or devices.

“(5) An appropriate course of followup treatment, supportive care, and referral.

“(6) Actions that can be taken while providing care for exposure to those agents, weapons, or devices to protect against contamination, injury, or other hazards from such exposure.

“(7) Information on how to seek consultative support and to report suspected or actual use of those agents.

“(d) POTENTIAL TRAINEES.—In designing the education and training programs under this section, the Secretary shall ensure that different programs are designed for health-care professionals in Department medical centers. The programs shall be designed to be disseminated to health professions students, graduate health and medical education trainees, and health practitioners in a variety of fields.

“(e) CONSULTATION.—In establishing education and training programs under this section, the Secretary shall consult with appropriate representatives of accrediting, certifying, and coordinating organizations in the field of health professions education.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7325, as added by section 2(a)(2), the following new item:

“7326. Education and training programs on medical response to consequences of terrorist activities.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall implement section 7326 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), not later than the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. AUTHORITY TO FURNISH HEALTH CARE DURING MAJOR DISASTERS AND MEDICAL EMERGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter VIII of chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§1785. Care and services during certain disasters and emergencies

“(a) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE HOSPITAL CARE AND MEDICAL SERVICES.—During and immediately following a disaster or emergency referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary may furnish hospital care and medical services to individuals responding to, involved in, or otherwise affected by that disaster or emergency.

“(b) COVERED DISASTERS AND EMERGENCIES.—A disaster or emergency referred to in this subsection is any disaster or emergency as follows:

“(1) A major disaster or emergency declared by the President under the Robert B. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.).

“(2) A disaster or emergency in which the National Disaster Medical System established pursuant to section 2811(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300hh–11(b)) is activated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under paragraph (3)(A) of that section or as otherwise authorized by law.

“(c) APPLICABILITY TO ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS WHO ARE VETERANS.—The Secretary may furnish care and services under this section to an individual described in subsection (a) who is a veteran without regard to whether that individual is enrolled in the system of patient enrollment under section 1705 of this title.

“(d) REIMBURSEMENT FROM OTHER FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES.—(1) The cost of any care or services furnished under this section to an officer or employee of a department or agency of the United States other than the Department or to a member of the Armed Forces shall be reimbursed at such rates as may be agreed upon by the Secretary and the head of such department or agency or the Secretary concerned, in the case of a member of the Armed Forces, based on the cost of the care or service furnished.

“(2) Amounts received by the Department under this subsection shall be credited to the Medical Care Collections Fund under section 1729A of this title.

“(e) REPORT TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—Within 60 days of the commencement of a disaster or emergency referred to in subsection (b) in which the Secretary furnishes care and services under this section (or as soon thereafter as is practicable), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the Secretary's allocation of facilities and personnel in order to furnish such care and services.

“(f) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations governing the exercise of the authority of the Secretary under this section.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of that chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“1785. Care and services during certain disasters and emergencies.”

(b) MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES ON ACTIVE DUTY.—Section 8111A(a) of such title is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (4);

(2) by designating the second sentence of paragraph (1) as paragraph (3); and

(3) by inserting between paragraph (1) and paragraph (3), as designated by paragraph (2) of this subsection, the following new paragraph:

“(2)(A) During and immediately following a disaster or emergency referred to in subparagraph (B), the Secretary may furnish hospital care and medical services to members of the Armed Forces on active duty responding to or involved in that disaster or emergency.

“(B) A disaster or emergency referred to in this subparagraph is any disaster or emergency as follows:

“(i) A major disaster or emergency declared by the President under the Robert B. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.).

“(ii) A disaster or emergency in which the National Disaster Medical System established pursuant to section 2811(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300hh–11(b)) is activated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under paragraph (3)(A) of that section or as otherwise authorized by law.”

SEC. 5. INCREASE IN NUMBER OF ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) INCREASE.—Subsection (a) of section 308 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking “six” in the first sentence and inserting “seven”.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—Subsection (b) of such section is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(1) Operations, preparedness, security, and law enforcement functions.”

SEC. 6. CODIFICATION OF DUTIES OF SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS RELATING TO EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter I of chapter 81 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§8117. Emergency preparedness

“(a) READINESS OF DEPARTMENT MEDICAL CENTERS.—(1) The Secretary shall take appropriate actions to provide for the readiness of Department medical centers to protect the patients and staff of such centers from chemical or biological attack or otherwise to respond to such an attack so as to enable such centers to fulfill their obligations as part of the Federal response to public health emergencies.

“(2) Actions under paragraph (1) shall include—

“(A) the provision of decontamination equipment and personal protection equipment at Department medical centers; and “(B) the provision of training in the use of such equipment to staff of such centers.

“(b) SECURITY AT DEPARTMENT MEDICAL AND RESEARCH FACILITIES.—(1) The Secretary shall take appropriate actions to provide for the security of Department medical centers and research facilities, including staff and patients at such centers and facilities.

“(2) In taking actions under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall take into account the results of the evaluation of the security needs at Department medical centers and research facilities required by section 154(b)(1) of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–188; 116 Stat. 631), including the results of such evaluation relating to the following needs:

“(A) Needs for the protection of patients and medical staff during emergencies, including a chemical or biological attack or other terrorist attack.

“(B) Needs, if any, for screening personnel engaged in research relating to biological pathogens or agents, including work associated with such research.

“(C) Needs for securing laboratories or other facilities engaged in research relating to biological pathogens or agents.

“(c) TRACKING OF PHARMACEUTICALS AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES AND EQUIPMENT.—The Secretary shall develop and maintain a centralized system for tracking the current location and availability of pharmaceuticals, medical supplies, and medical equipment throughout the Department health care system in order to permit the ready identification and utilization of such pharmaceuticals, supplies, and equipment for a variety of purposes, including response to a chemical or biological attack or other terrorist attack.

“(d) TRAINING.—The Secretary shall ensure that the Department medical centers, in consultation with the accredited medical school affiliates of such medical centers, develop and implement curricula to train resident physicians and health care personnel in medical matters relating to biological, chemical, or radiological attacks or attacks from an incendiary or other explosive weapon.

“(e) PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL DISASTER MEDICAL SYSTEM.—(1) The Secretary shall establish and maintain a training program to facilitate the participation of the staff of Department medical centers, and of the community partners of such centers, in the National Disaster Medical System established pursuant to section 2811(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300hh–11(b)).

“(2) The Secretary shall establish and maintain the training program under paragraph (1) in accordance with the recommendations of the working group on the prevention, preparedness, and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies established under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d–6(a)).

“(3) The Secretary shall establish and maintain the training program under paragraph (1) in consultation with the following:

“(A) The Secretary of Defense.

“(B) The Secretary of Health and Human Services.

“(C) The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

SEC. 2. PRIORITY OF SERVICE FOR VETERANS IN DEPARTMENT OF LABOR JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(a) VETERANS’ JOB TRAINING ASSISTANCE.—(1) Chapter 42 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 4215. Priority of service for veterans in Department of Labor job training programs

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘covered person’ means any of the following individuals:

“(A) A veteran.

“(B) The spouse of any of the following individuals:

“(i) Any veteran who died of a service-connected disability.

“(ii) Any member of the Armed Forces serving on active duty who, at the time of application for assistance under this section, is listed, pursuant to section 556 of title 37 and regulations issued thereunder, by the Secretary concerned in one or more of the following categories and has been so listed for a total of more than 90 days: (I) missing in action, (II) captured in line of duty by a hostile force, or (III) forcibly detained or interned in line of duty by a foreign government or power.

“(iii) Any veteran who has a total disability resulting from a service-connected disability.

“(iv) Any veteran who died while a disability so evaluated was in existence.

“(2) The term ‘qualified job training program’ means any workforce preparation, development, or delivery program or service that is directly funded, in whole or in part, by the Department of Labor and includes the following:

“(A) Any such program or service that uses technology to assist individuals to access workforce development programs (such as job and training opportunities, labor market information, career assessment tools, and related support services).

“(B) Any such program or service under the public employment service system, one-stop career centers, the Workforce Investment Act of 1998, a demonstration or other temporary program, and those programs implemented by States or local service providers based on Federal block grants administered by the Department of Labor.

“(C) Any such program or service that is a workforce development program targeted to specific groups.

“(3) The term ‘priority of service’ means, with respect to any qualified job training program, that a covered person shall be given priority over nonveterans for the receipt of employment, training, and placement services provided under that program, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

“(b) ENTITLEMENT TO PRIORITY OF SERVICE.—(1) A covered person is entitled to priority of service under any qualified job training program if the person otherwise meets the eligibility requirements for participation in such program.

“(2) The Secretary of Labor may establish priorities among covered persons for purposes of this section to take into account the needs of disabled veterans and special disabled veterans, and such other factors as the Secretary determines appropriate.

“(c) ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAMS AT STATE AND LOCAL LEVELS.—An entity of a State or a political subdivision of the State that administers or delivers services under a qualified job training program shall—

“(1) provide information and priority of service to covered persons regarding benefits and services that may be obtained through other entities or service providers; and

“(2) ensure that each covered person who applies to or who is assisted by such a program is informed of the employment-related rights and benefits to which the person is entitled under this section.

“(d) ADDITION TO ANNUAL REPORT.—In the annual report required under section 4107(c) of this title for the program year beginning in 2003 and each subsequent program year, the Secretary of Labor shall evaluate whether covered persons are receiving priority of service and are being fully served by qualified job training programs, and whether the representation of veterans in such programs is in proportion to the incidence of representation of veterans in the labor market, including within groups that the Secretary may designate for priority under such programs, if any.”.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 42 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 4214 the following new item:

“4215. Priority of service for veterans in Department of Labor job training programs.”.
